The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein a letter written by Dr. John J. Tigert, president of the University of Florida, and one by Dr. W. S. Allen, president of the John B. Stetson University, of DeLand, Fla. These letters have to do with the National Youth Administration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS]?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, who made these addresses?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Dr. John J. Tigert, president of the University of Florida. It happens to be a letter, not an address. The other is a letter by Dr. W. S. Allen, president of John B. Stetson University.

Mr. RICH. They are just letters.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS]?

There was no objection.

EXCESS PROFITS OF WAR INDUSTRIES

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, on the first day of the present session I introduced a bill, H. R. 7645, which provides for a tax to be imposed on excess profits derived out of war trade. The reason for that bill was and is now that certain industries derive very great advantage from the present international situation which, however, operates to the positive detriment of other industries.

The facts in the case as revealed by actual experience amply bear this out. The Secretary of Agriculture, for example, in testifying before a Senate committee, pointed out that whereas we have had an increase of 410 percent in the exportation of aircraft engines and other types of munitions, on the other hand the export of wheat and wheat flour have declined 73 percent. The same is true with reference to the foreign trade in fruits, vegetables, tobacco, and other agricultural commodities.

The levying of this tax will not fall on normal profits but on abnormal profits due to war trade. It is a matter of justice that this bill be passed, particularly if by our failure to take such a step it would mean the curtailing of necessary activities on the part of the Government which are needed for our unemployed, our farmers, and other people at this time.

A few industries shared very large profits in the closing quarter of 1939. These were the industries most closely associated with munitions manufacture. But we know already that most American producers of peacetime goods are being hurt, not helped, by the wars abroad.

We have started a program of enabling needy and poorly nourished families to increase their consumption of farm products. This has meant more to eat for people who need food. It has also meant an expanded market for many farm commodities here at home. How logical, how fair, how truly Christian it would be to pass H. R. 7645, levy taxes on abnormal profits derived from shipping American resources abroad for war purposes and use the money to expand to the needy of the whole Nation this blue-stamp plan of the Surplus Commodities Corporation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House today for 20 minutes at the conclusion of the business on the Speaker's table and after the disposition of the legislative business in order for the day and any other special orders that may have been entered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include quotations from Chief Justice Hughes and the Supreme Court of the United States, as well as excerpts from the bill on civil rights.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. THORKELSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter written by myself to a constituent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the Adrian (Mich.) Daily Telegram.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein excerpts from Supreme Court decisions pertaining to the bill H. R. 952.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include excerpts with reference to the Wheeler-Lea railroad bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial from the Warsaw Record and Herald on one branch of farming.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CLEVENGER]?

There was no objection.

MINE DISASTERS

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to discuss with the membership briefly the terrible calamity that has befallen the people of the vicinity of St. Clairsville, Ohio. I refer to the terrible mine explosion which has and is attracting the attention and sympathy of the whole Nation. Today around the entrance to this coal mine are thousands of people milling around awaiting confirmation of the sad fate which they well know has befallen about 60 miners whose bodies have not yet been taken from the mine. No doubt some have gone upon this scene out of curiosity but most of them who are there have gone because of the sympathy which rational people must have for those who have lost their relatives in such a terrible manner.

I have had reports from mine officials of much prominence and much experience and as they describe the results of this explosion one can in a small measure at least imagine the force of the explosion. Steel cars and steel motors were carried forward before the force of this explosion as if they were nothing. The entry of the mine which is the tunnel through which the men pass and the coal is hauled was practically closed up in many places because the force of the explosion was sufficient to tear down posts and to blow down slate and other natural supports used to hold the mine in workable condition.

The fact that the source of this explosion has not yet been determined is another source of worry because all persons will be under fear of similar explosion until it is determined what caused this explosion.

It appears now that more than 70 men have given up their lives in this terrible disaster. No one can visualize the terrorizing effect of such a disaster unless he has witnessed it. A few years ago a similar explosion occurred in one of the large mines in my district. Of that mine it has been said, as of the mine in which the recent explosion occurred, that it was a model mine and was looked upon as the last word in safety. One day when that mine was being inspected by experts who had come to see and to learn a great explosion occurred, killing more than 80 men. When I heard of the calamity I hastened to the place, but before I got there they had taken out all those who had been unable to make their own escape. More than 80 bodies had been stripped of their clothing and washed and laid side by side in some vacant rooms that were nearby this great mining industry.

To be in the crowd and to witness the terrorizing agony of the wives and children of these dead men was an experience which I never again want to undergo. From what I have said you would probably imagine that these wives and relatives would be hysterical and that their demonstrations of terror would be by shrieks and shouts, but that was not always the case. While I was there there was a terrible sense of depressing suspense that awed everybody into silence. Set jaws and blanched faces and far-away glances were characteristic of practically all the people there. Occasionally a few commands were given by those in charge of the crowds, but silence seemed to be the most marked depressing characteristic of that occasion. Wives would come forward with tearless eyes, and when discouraged in their determination to see the bodies of their deceased husbands, pushed aside all such advice and stoically marched up the steps and into the room to claim the bodies of their own husbands. Such a show of stoical courage I had never seen before. The well springs of tears and of sentiment had been frozen. Nothing was left but a sort of involuntary of subconscious psychology that drew these sorrowing people to their loved ones unconsciously and irresistibly.

No doubt at St. Clairsville today the same atmosphere is prevalent because human nature usually reacts the same under similar circumstances. I am sure that the sympathy of this Congress goes out to those who have lost their loved ones and to this whole community that has been so terribly shocked.

Likewise I feel that I can safely assure this Congress and the whole American people that these who have been bereaved and their friends and neighbors are deeply appreciative of the expressions of sympathy that are coming to them from all parts of these United States.

May we all as American citizens hope that never again shall another community be visited with such a devastating plague as has come upon the vicinity of St. Clairsville and may we as Congressmen feel it our duty should the occasion present to do what we can to prevent recurrence of such disasters.

Mr. Speaker, I think I can safely say that America mourns with those who mourn and appreciates the dangers that the coal miners of the Nation assume when they descend into the bowels of the earth among such terrible dangers and uncertainties to bring forth a product for the use and benefit of all the people.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, 80 years ago today there was born on the banks of the Platte River, in Nebraska, a scholar, humanitarian, statesman, and philosopher who was destined to perform a most important part in framing and building the network of many of the fundamental institutions within our Nation that would live long after he had passed on to his reward.

Yes, my friends, William Jennings Bryan has gone to his reward; but as we look back over the pages of history, and especially the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, we find that many of the principles for which he stood and advocated before he became a Member of Congress, while he was in Congress, and from that time on, have become realities, while at the time he advocated them they were looked upon as being far-fetched and fantastic.

In these days of trouble and turmoil throughout the world, the life of William Jennings Bryan lives afresh within the memories of those who really knew him.

In one of his monumental addresses, The Prince of Peace, he said in substance that there could be no real peace in any nation until the people of that nation accepted the Divine Father as the ruler of all. I believe if he were here today, he would say that there could be no real peace in certain of our overseas countries until there was a spiritual revival within the hearts of the people of those nations. Under the conditions existing today, I think Mr. Bryan would repeat the following portion of the address he delivered at Chautauquas in 1901 in which he said:

> Instead of trying to make our flag float everywhere, let us make it stand for justice wherever it floats—for justice between man and man, for justice between nation and nation, and for humanity always. And then the people of the world will learn to know and revere that flag, because it will be their protection as well as ours.

Many times as I sit here on the floor of the House and listen to my colleagues discuss the farm problem, I think of the Crown of Thorns speech which Mr. Bryan delivered on July 8, 1896, when he held spellbound those thousands who had gathered in the Convention Hall, in Chicago, with his wonderful appeal for better things in life. He made the strongest plea that was ever made for the farmers in that famous address when he said:

> Burn down your cities and leave our farms, and your cities will spring up again as if by magic; but destroy our farms and the grass will grow in the streets of every city in the country.

Again as we today grapple with our labor problem, I think of the same speech, where you will find the sentence that has been ringing down throughout the years since he uttered it on that historic occasion:

> You shall not press down upon the brow of labor this crown of thorns; you shall not crucify mankind upon a cross of gold.

Mr. Speaker, the deep-seated fundamentals necessary for the preservation of a democratic form of government such as ours were always strongly advocated and jealously guarded by this great humanitarian, and as the years go on more and more will we realize that William Jennings Bryan was truly a statesman, a philosopher, and a Christian gentleman who ever advocated the right.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Obviously a quorum is not present.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 47]

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and thirty-two Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

C. Z. BUSH AND W. D. KENNEDY

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 3481) for the relief of C. Z. Bush and W. D. Kennedy, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. KENNEDY of Maryland, RAMSPECK, and THOMAS of New Jersey.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and include therein a speech I made before the Rivers and Harbors Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

OMNIBUS PRIVATE CLAIMS BILL

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first omnibus claims bill on the calendar.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7338) for the relief of sundry claimants, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Title I—(H. R. 554. For the relief of Meta De Rene McLoskey)
> That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Meta De Rene McLoskey, mother of Arthur Lee McLoskey, formerly a member of Company I, Forty-seventh Regiment United States Infantry, who disappeared on May 7, 1918, all such installments of money which she would be entitled to receive as beneficiary of policy No. T-2024764. The first of such installments shall be paid within 90 days from the date of the enactment of this act and continue during her natural life or until she has received the full amount of said policy.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: On page 1, strike out all of title I.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, the proposed bill is for the relief of Meta De Rene McLoskey. The claimant is the mother of a veteran who disappeared on May 7, 1918, just 3 days before his company sailed for France. According to the records of the War Department, this veteran did not sail with his company and the War Department has no record of him at any time subsequent to May 7, 1918.

The bill provides for the payment of a war-risk insurance policy to the mother, Mrs. McLoskey, the claimant in this bill. The veteran entered the service on March 29, 1918. On May 2 and until May 7 he was hospitalized for a skin disease, and thereupon disappeared completely. There has been no subsequent record of this soldier at any time.

The soldier was carrying two small insurance policies when he entered the service. Both policies provided payment at the end of 5 years in the event of his disappearance. These policies have been paid. The veteran also took out a World War risk insurance policy in the sum of $10,000, naming his mother as beneficiary.

The Veterans' Administration is opposed to this bill on the ground that the date of death cannot be proven. A legal suit was brought to recover under the policy, but that action was discontinued prior to judgment being rendered, on June 1, 1926. This bill has been before the Congress since the Seventy-first Congress. In the Seventy-fifth Congress the bill was passed but received a pocket veto.

It is my opinion, Mr. Speaker, that the bill should not be favorably considered by the House, and for that reason I have offered a motion to strike out the title.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is it not a fact that this payment will be made out of the veterans' insurance fund, in which other veterans who did not disappear during their service and who served at the front and paid their premiums have an interest?

Mr. COSTELLO. The gentleman is quite correct. There is no question but that the money would come out of the insurance fund; but as far as the premiums that are being paid into it are concerned, I may say to the gentleman that it is my understanding that the premiums paid on the insurance will in no way compensate the Government in the total amount the Government ultimately will pay out under the policies that have been issued to veterans of the World War.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. KITCHENS. If we adopt this precedent the House will have no other business to perform for a good long while because many thousands of these cases have been tried by the Federal courts and been disposed of in one way or another. Many of them have been lost there. If the claimants can now come to the Congress and get a new trial of these cases, we will be opening up a very broad field here, and it will be unfair and unjust to many other veterans.

Mr. COSTELLO. The gentleman is quite correct.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Do I correctly understand there has been a trial in court on the theory that this disappearance so long ago created a presumption of death, and that this trial has been decided against this claimant?

Mr. COSTELLO. No; a suit was instituted to collect under this insurance policy but before the case reached judgment the suit was withdrawn. As a result, no determination in the courts was had upon this particular case.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. Did I correctly understand the gentleman to say that his reason for now recommending that the House do not favorably consider the bill is the Presidential veto?

Mr. COSTELLO. No. I said I believe the bill should not be considered favorably because it is not meritorious, and also because the actual death of the veteran has not been proven. His disappearance is a strange incident. The Veterans' Administration is opposing the bill.

Mr. MOTT. A presumption of this veteran's death was created sufficient to satisfy the Prudential Life Insurance Co. that he was dead, and the company paid the claim, did it not?

Mr. COSTELLO. Two small policies were carried by the veteran, and those two policies have been paid.

Mr. MOTT. Why should it require more evidence to satisfy the Veterans' Administration of this veteran's death than it should to satisfy the Prudential Life Insurance Co.?

Mr. COSTELLO. Because of the requirement that the date of death must be proven in order to obtain payment upon an insurance policy issued by the Federal Government.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LANHAM). May the Chair inquire of the gentleman from Indiana if he introduced the original bill?

Mr. LUDLOW. I am the author of the bill, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I think the general observations made by my friend the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. KITCHENS] and others who have discussed this bill are certainly well taken; but now let us look at the facts with respect to this particular measure.

My friend the gentleman from California, one of the ablest and most valuable Members of this House, states there is no evidence in the record to establish the death of this veteran. I do not believe the gentleman from California, with all of his great diligence and usefulness in ferreting these different measures, has looked into the record of this particular case. There is a lot of evidence in the record of this case that is not in the report. I am afraid the gentleman got his ideas about this bill entirely from the report. Notwithstanding his great capacity for hard work, he does not have time to go into the files of these cases to examine them in minute detail.

This veteran is reported by the War Department as missing since May 7, 1918, and not as missing in action, from which it is inferred that he was a deserter. He had at the time of his disappearance on May 7, 1918, war-risk insurance which would carry him until July 31, 1918. I wish you would bear this fact in mind.

There is in the file of the case letters which were sent to me from four of his comrades, who have stated over their signatures that they were with him when he was killed in action on June 29, 1918, or 2 days before his insurance expired.

I want to read to the House extracts from some of these letters. The War Department, you understand, has no record of his ever having gone overseas. These are his comrades speaking now.

Earl G. Reiser, rural route No. 1, Charlottesville, Ind., says:

He was in my company and was wounded the same day that I was. That was in the afternoon of the 29th of July 1918 at Sergy, France. We were both hit with a high-explosive shell and one of his legs was very near torn off. We were taken to the first-aid station and they said that there was no chance for him. I was sent from there to Base Hospital No. 1 in Paris and Mr. McLoskey was left at the first-aid station, and I am sure that is where he died, for they had said that he did not have a chance to pull through.

This is one comment——

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COSTELLO. May I ask the gentleman whether those letters were submitted to the committee at the time the bill was up for consideration?

Mr. LUDLOW. These letters have been in the hands of the committee for some time, but not when the first reports were made.

Mr. COSTELLO. I want to state to the gentleman——

Mr. LUDLOW. It seems to me the committee has followed the original report and has not given due consideration to this evidence.

Mr. COSTELLO. The fact is, they do not appear in the committee report, and this is the first I have heard of any such letters being submitted, and apparently the War Department is not aware of them.

Mr. LUDLOW. Let me read from some more letters.

Jerry Skaggs, another comrade, who was a mechanic, under date of July 2, 1935, in a letter to me states:

Arthur Lee McLoskey was my buddy and we sailed for France on date of May 10, 1918, on transport Caserta. He was killed while by my side carrying ammunition for automatic rifles at Sergy, on Ourque River, on or about July 28 or 29, 1918. This was about 9 a. m. and the first day our company saw action.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I have only 5 minutes and I want to make my case, if I can.

Mr. MOTT. I wanted to offer a helpful suggestion.

Mr. LUDLOW. Go ahead.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman has read an affidavit from a comrade of this man, which affidavit said he was killed while he was at the side of that comrade. I will ask the gentleman if he does not think that in itself constitutes proof if there is nothing offered to the contrary?

Mr. LUDLOW. I certainly think so. I want to read the other letters.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. Yes.

Mr. COSTELLO. Are these letters or signed affidavits?

Mr. LUDLOW. They are letters.

Mr. COSTELLO. Are they sworn to?

Mr. LUDLOW. They have not been sworn to, but they are bona fide letters, written to me. I obtained from the War Department the names of surviving comrades of this man, and wrote to them. That is how I got these replies.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, is it permissible for me to ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes further?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the interpretation of the rules that request for an extension of time would not be in order.

Mr. LUDLOW. That being the case I would say that I have two more letters from comrades of this man who say they were with him when he was killed in action. I think the case is conclusive, and this amendment should be rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California to strike out title I.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LUDLOW) there were—ayes 33, noes 61.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote upon the ground that there is no quorum present, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-two Members present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 70, nays 236, not voting 124, as follows:

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I submit to the House two more letters from comrades of the veteran, as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., August 7, 1935.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 1 relative to Arthur Lee McLoskey, a World War soldier in Company I, Forty-seventh United States Infantry, Fourth Division.

I am quite familiar with this case and gladly offer any assistance that I can give to help secure relief for his aged parents.

On the morning of July 28, 1918, he was a member of our company, present and accounted for. The following day we went into combat, and after we had been relieved and members of the company checked on July 31, he was missing and unaccounted for. We were unable to learn from any of the surviving members of the company whether he had been killed or taken prisoner, and for this reason carried him on our reports as "missing in action."

We investigated his case from every possible angle and could not determine what actually happened to him. My personal opinion is that he was blown to pieces by a direct shell explosion; however, if this was the case, there was no witness who could swear to that.

I have a complete roster of the company, and if you wish to correspond with any of the other members, please let me know and I will forward you a list of names and addresses.

If there is anything additional that I can do, please let me hear from you.

Yours very truly,

JOSEPH A. KUMMERER,
11403 Forest Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

POMONA, CALIF., October 11, 1937.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LUDLOW: In answer to your letter of September 9 with reference to Arthur Lee McLoskey, I would state the following:

During action at Sergy, France, July 29, 1918, I remember McLoskey as a member of a certain squad, which I saw just a few minutes before I was wounded myself, move into position under cover of a wild-rose bush. I was possibly 40 feet away when a large high-explosive shell struck this rose bush, by the fragment of which I was wounded. The bush was blown away and a large hole made in the ground.

While I never saw any member of this squad again alive or dead, they were all reported killed. It is my belief and opinion they were all destroyed beyond recognition and probably their identification tags were never found.

I have no records or documents which would be of any use as evidence in this case.

Very sincerely,

LOUIS T. ROBERTS.

I want the House to have all of the facts in my possession; and in justice to the Veterans' Administration, which opposes this bill, I will state that it adheres to its opposition, notwithstanding what I believe is the very conclusive nature of the evidence presented in these four letters. The Veterans' Administration conducted an investigation and reported to me that the writer of one of the letters, Joseph A. Kummerer, had repudiated the statement he made to me, but I never had any notice from the veteran to that effect. I believe in the absolute justice of the statement just made by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Mott], who said in effect that a statement from even one eyewitness who was a comrade of the veteran and who saw the veteran killed ought to be conclusive proof of the justice of this claim. I commend the Veterans' Administration for meticulous care in the administration of the veterans' law, but the long and ripe experience I have had with that Administration sometimes makes me wonder if it does not lean over backward in resolving every doubt against the veteran. These four letters were voluntarily written to me, without the slightest duress, and it seems impressive to me that, though they came from widely separated persons, none of whom had knowledge that the others had written, they agree as to the time and place of the infliction of the injuries in action which they say caused the death of the veteran. Louis T. Roberts, one of the comrades whose letter is quoted above, was captain of the company in which Mr. McLoskey served.

While there has been much official opposition to this bill, it has had the strongest possible support from the American Legion, which investigates these cases very thoroughly through its rehabilitation department. Capt. Watson B. Miller, the head of that department, enjoys in fullest measure the confidence of everybody on Capitol Hill. If Members of Congress want to know more about the merit of this bill I ask them to contact Captain Miller. He came up on the hill to help me to present it in hearings before congressional committees, so deep was his interest in it, and when he could not come in person he gave me letters to read to the committees. In a letter to me dated March 10, 1937, he said:

I am sincerely interested in the McLoskey bill, and I believe it worthy. You and I have been rather close to this situation for a number of years. I have not advocated in 14 years more than three or four special measures.

You can see how sincerely Captain Miller is interested in this old mother's claim when he includes it among the three or four special measures he has advocated in 14 years of wonderful service for the veterans as a whole.

It is true, as the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] has told you, that the President once vetoed this bill after it passed Congress, but knowing the President as I do, and believing as I do in his sense of justice, I do not believe he would have vetoed the bill if he had known all of the facts.

The record establishes the fact that the veteran's insurance was in force on and after the date his comrades testify this action took place. That being the case, I submit it is clear beyond any question that the veteran's mother is entitled to the benefits of the war-risk insurance carried by the veteran and that this bill is entirely meritorious and should pass.

Title II—(H. R. 1361. For the relief of Henry Fischer)

That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Henry Fischer, the foster father of Edward R. Fischer (Army serial No. 3465043), late a corporal, Fifteenth Service Company, Signal Corps, United States Army, all such installments of money remaining unpaid on the insurance policy (numbered XC-66180) which he would be entitled to receive, and in the same manner as though the said Henry Fischer were within the restricted permitted class of beneficiaries for war-risk insurance.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Page 2, line 4, strike out all of title II.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, the present bill would pay to Henry Fischer the balance of a war-risk insurance policy in the sum of $5,724, now unpaid. Henry Fischer is the foster father of the World War veteran. The veteran at the age of 2 years was taken from a foundling home by the Fischers and reared by them. No formal adoption proceedings were had. When the veteran entered the service he took out a war-risk insurance policy and named therein as his beneficiary his foster mother. As a result of that, on his death she received 123 payments as beneficiary of that policy. She thereupon died and left 117 payments unpaid, a balance of $5,724. Under existing law the foster father, not being named as a beneficiary either in the policy or in the will of the deceased veteran, he is not entitled to receive the balance of the policy. Instead, under the law, the money is payable to the estate of the veteran if there are any heirs of his estate.

If not, the money escheats to the United States military and naval insurance appropriation. Under the law in the State of Minnesota, where the Fischers are domiciled, the foster father not having legally adopted the veteran, could not share in his estate. However, under the rulings of the Veterans' Administration the foster father is entitled to and does receive $20 monthly as foster parent of the deceased veteran. I might call to the attention of the House the fact that if this policy were paid to the foster father, the estate of the veteran might make claim to the money in the event some heirs might appear, such as his real parents, thereby causing double payment. Nevertheless, that is comparatively quite unlikely in this particular case. Under existing provisions of the law the foster father is not entitled to receive the balance due under this policy, and the Veterans' Administration opposes the enactment of this legislation. For that reason I have moved to strike out title II.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does the gentleman say that this veteran had no father or mother other than the foster father and mother?

Mr. COSTELLO. Apparently that is correct. They reared him from the age of 2 years.

Mr. COCHRAN. And the gentleman says that he named as beneficiaries the foster father and mother?

Mr. COSTELLO. He named his foster mother solely as his beneficiary. He did not name his foster father. On the death of the mother the foster father, not having been named as beneficiary, could not receive any benefits under the policy.

Mr. COCHRAN. Did the mother receive the entire benefits payable under the policy?

Mr. COSTELLO. The mother received a little over one-half of the total payments under the policy.

Mr. COCHRAN. Did he recognize his foster father as his parent?

Mr. COSTELLO. There is no question of that here. He was reared by them since he was 2 years old up to the time he went to war and he looked on them as his parents.

Mr. COCHRAN. That answers my question.

Mr. COSTELLO. He was taken from a foundling home to Minnesota, and was reared by his foster parents, the Fischers.

My purpose in making this statement, Mr. Speaker, is to apprise the House concerning each of these bills. I have no personal interest in the current case one way or the other. I merely want to explain to the House what the situation is from the investigation made by the committee. It is up to the House to do what they wish with the bill, to approve its passage or to reject it.

Mr. COCHRAN. In view of all the circumstances, as expressed by the gentleman from California, I think the bill should be passed. In some States the foster father would be recognized.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. PITTENGER. So far as the record shows this boy was raised by these people as his foster parents, who later in life became dependent upon him. Is that correct?

Mr. COSTELLO. The gentleman has stated the case correctly, and the foster father is receiving $20 monthly pension from the Veterans' Administration because he is the foster father of a veteran.

Mr. PITTENGER. So far as the record shows there are no other heirs?

Mr. COSTELLO. Apparently there are no other heirs, not even the real parents. Had there been evidence that there were other heirs the balance of this policy would have been paid to the estate of the veteran and it would be paid out to those heirs.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. TERRY. Does the gentleman say that if this man had been the veteran's real father instead of his foster father that he would have been entitled to these payments as against the heirs?

Mr. COSTELLO. The gentleman is quite correct.

The only question that arises in this case is the fact that there was no legal adoption. Had there been a legal adoption the foster father would, under the Minnesota law, have been the heir to the estate of this veteran; but since he is not an heir to the estate, under our veterans' legislation, the Veterans' Administration cannot pay the money to the estate, because, if they did pay it to the estate, the money would escheat then to the State of Minnesota, and the law specifically provides that in such case the money, instead of escheating to the State of Minnesota, is to escheat to the United States military and naval insurance fund.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. What does the gentleman have to say with respect to that portion of the report which states that, while they took no legal steps of adoption, they did, however, go to the parish priest in their neighborhood and report the adoption of the child and effected a change of name, and thereafter considered him their adopted son?

Mr. COSTELLO. The officials went to New York and obtained this child from a foundling home, and the hospital records show there was the equivalent of adoption papers, so the report states, but, as far as Minnesota is concerned, there was no legal adoption. The child, however, was taken under proper papers from the foundling home in New York and the name was presumably changed on the parish records, but legally there was no adoption, and hence, under the law, there is no basis on which the Veterans' Administration would be able to pay the balance of this insurance to the foster father.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. As I understand the purpose of these claim bills, it is that Congress can correct things where, under existing laws, there is no provision for their accomplishment.

Mr. COSTELLO. That is purely a question as to what the House might determine to do in this case.

Mr. McKEOUGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. McKEOUGH. As I understood the gentleman's statement, there were no other heirs developed, that is, legally developed?

Mr. COSTELLO. So far as it appears, there are no other heirs.

Mr. McKEOUGH. How many years ago did this gentleman die?

Mr. COSTELLO. He died in service October 31, 1919.

Mr. McKEOUGH. So the probability of any heirs being developed is very remote?

Mr. COSTELLO. The gentleman is entirely correct.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I think that the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] has been eminently fair in his statement of this case.

Mr. Speaker, this bill merely corrects a technicality, and I believe the motion to strike out the title should be voted down. The gentleman from California has called attention to this technicality, namely, that there was a failure to go through adoption proceedings.

If this claimant were the natural father, he would get the money. He, a stranger, took this boy and raised him. By every rule of equity he ought to receive these payments.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PITTENGER. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Is it not true that the soldier paid monthly premiums on this policy?

Mr. PITTENGER. I think the record shows that.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Is it not true that the Veterans' Administration is simply asking Congress for authority to pay this claim?

Mr. PITTENGER. They do not do it in this report because of the fact there were no legal adoption papers executed.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Then they ask the Congress of the United States to make it legal so they can pay it?

Mr. PITTENGER. They pass the buck to Congress. I think the motion to strike the title ought to be voted down. The vote here ought to be "no."

Mr. COSTELLO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PITTENGER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COSTELLO. I think the statements that have been made are a little too free. The Veterans' Administration does not approve the bill at all.

Mr. PITTENGER. I did not say they did.

Mr. COSTELLO. The gentleman from Pennsylvania sort of inferred that.

Mr. PITTENGER. They passed the buck.

Mr. COSTELLO. The Veterans' Administration is unable to recommend the bill to the favorable consideration of the committee. That is the statement they make.

Mr. PITTENGER. The Congress has to correct this defect by law. The vote here ought to be "no."

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PITTENGER. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. In my earlier statement I failed to mention that the hospital sent an agreement along with the boy at the time he was sent to these foster parents. I agree with the gentleman from Minnesota that equity here calls for the payment of the balance of this policy to the man who reared the boy.

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PITTENGER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. I do not see any reason why this father, after taking the boy and rearing him from the time he was 2 years old and taking care of him, as I understand it, after he came home from war, should not be paid.

Mr. PITTENGER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. I do not see any reason why through a little technicality here this father should not have the little pension that is coming to that boy as long as he reared him and took care of him all these years.

Mr. MASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PITTENGER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MASON. The vote on this motion will determine whether the Congress believes in equity and justice or whether the Congress is going to be finicky and take advantage of a situation that was overlooked in connection with the legal adoption of this boy, although to all intents and purposes adoption was completed.

Mr. PITTENGER. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Is it not true that since the World War veteran paid a monthly premium on this policy, that the Government is making no gift to the foster father; they are simply giving to the foster father what the veteran paid for?

Mr. PITTENGER. That is right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] to strike out title II of the pending bill.

The amendment was rejected.

Title III—(H. R. 2014. For the relief of Margaret Redmond)

That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money appropriated for the payment of pensions, to Margaret Redmond the sum of $5,257.50. Such sum represents pension which should have been paid to James Redmond, deceased husband of the said Margaret Redmond, for the period from December 1, 1923, to September 30, 1935, under the Indian wars' pension statutes, but an application for such pension made by him in the month of December 1923 was lost or mislaid without fault on his part, and he has not been paid pension for any period prior to September 30, 1935. The said James Redmond served as a private in Company B, Seventh Regiment United States Cavalry, from September 21, 1878, to September 20, 1883; was honorably discharged; and was 85 years of age at the time of his death on September 26, 1936.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Page 2, line 16, strike out all of title III.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, the present bill directs the Veterans' Administrator to pay to the claimant $5,257.50, representing pension which would have been paid to her husband if his application for pension benefits had not been mislaid or lost. The husband, a veteran of the Indian wars, applied to his Representative for pension benefits on or about December 1, 1923. He did not file the application with the Pension Bureau but alleged that he filled out the blank in the office of his Representative upon whom he depended for its forwarding to the Veterans' Administration. A thorough search of the Veterans' Administration's files failed to reveal the existence of the application, and apparently no acknowledgment of the receipt thereof was ever forwarded to the veteran. There is no correspondence of record between the Veterans' Administration and this veteran concerning his application. He cannot produce the ordinary notification card which is sent on receipt of every application. He has stated in another application, which he executed on September 27, 1935, a second application which he made, that he had not previously made a claim for pension.

The deceased veteran contended that when no reply was received regarding the application he assumed he was not eligible and did not prosecute the matter further. On the basis of his application in 1935, he was allowed benefits from that date. That was, of course, the first application that actually reached the Veterans' Administration. He appealed from the decision of the Appeals Board, which sustained the decision of the Veterans' Administration, denying claimant's right to payments from time of making the alleged first application. The veteran died on September 26, 1936, and an award was made to his widow, the claimant herein, of a pension of $30 per month from October 26, 1936.

I might state in defense of the veteran that at the time he filled out his second application he alleges that he did not fully understand the questions that were asked him. He himself did not fill in the answers. He did so with the aid of a Legion official, who filled out his complete application. So he says he did not realize the nature of the questions when he was asked whether he had previously applied. I may also state that at that time he was approximately 80 years of age.

In conclusion, may I say that the Veterans' Administration opposes this bill, saying:

In view of the determinations made in this case, including that of the Board of Veteran Appeals, that there is total absence of any official information to establish the fact that the veteran submitted properly executed application, it is believed that the passage of this bill would be discriminatory.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I am a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, which has jurisdiction over pensions arising out of the Indian wars. Is it not a fact that that Indian war veteran legislation provides that pension shall commence from the date of filing the application therefor in the Bureau of Pensions and not in a Congressman's office or an agent's office?

Mr. COSTELLO. That is correct so far as the law is concerned. Of course, it is possible the Congressman failed to send it down, or, having sent it down, it was lost in the files of the Veterans' Administration. That is the contention which is made. The Veterans' Administration, of course, simply allege that the application was never received by them, hence they could not take any action upon it.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I have moved to strike out this title in the bill.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, as you already know, this is a bill for the relief of Margaret Redmond, an old lady out in Missouri, the widow of a man who, back in the late seventies and early eighties, was a volunteer in the forces of the United States, out there fighting those roving tribes of Indians. They were the men who reduced to civilization the territory out of which that great northwestern block of States was founded. Congress, recognizing that these men for their patriotism and their self-sacrifice were entitled to certain preferences, provided under the law that when they arrived at a certain age all they had to show was that they had fought in that war and had been honorably discharged.

This is a case where there is no dispute about Mr. Redmond having fought, and no dispute about his honorable discharge. There is no dispute that in 1935 he made an application, and from then on received his pension for that period. The bill involves the period from 1923 to 1935. There is no dispute about the amount. We claimed that he was entitled to $7,500, but the Veterans' Administration said, "No, it is only $5,200." We said, "All right." So we are agreed on that.

The only question involved in this case is the question of whether a proper application was filed; in other words, whether Mr. Redmond asked for what was coming to him back in 1923. The testimony shows that Henry L. Jost, a former Member of this House, in high standing, under oath, has made a statement that he did file that application back in 1923.

The Veterans' Administration takes the position that a Member of Congress under oath making that sort of a statement is not submitting any evidence whatever. They say, "We do not find any correspondence or any papers in our old files; therefore, the application was not filed."

I felt the innate justice of this claim and spent some time trying to look into it. I even went over to the Veterans' Administration and talked to some of the clerks there. Some of them said, "Now, do not mention our names, but we will very frankly admit that a lot of these papers were lost when we moved."

The whole question, Mr. Speaker, is whether or not the absence of these papers is evidence which overshadows the sworn testimony of a Member of this House, and I am telling you it is admitted that some of these papers have been lost. There has been a great disposition on the part of some departments to feel that the word of a Member of Congress is not evidence. I do not feel that way about it.

There is another point which was brought up, that when the application was filed in 1935 in that application there was a statement—you know how these statements are written in fine print—in which he said he had made no previous application. Let us be fair about this matter. At the time Mr. Redmond signed that little printed form he was a man past 80 years old, a man almost deprived of his sight and his hearing by his advanced age. He wanted to get this pension filed, and he wanted to get his papers fixed up. Someone came in and said, "Sign here." The Veterans' Administration is now taking advantage of a fine-print clause, a trick clause, if you please, in a statement filed by a veteran blind and weak and trembling in his old age, and it is trying to deprive him and his widow of the money that is justly due him under the law of the United States. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask you to vote against this amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California to strike out the title.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title IV—(H. R. 2853. For the relief of Frank Burgess Bruce)

That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Frank Burgess Bruce, of Savannah, Ga., the father of Ashmead Ferguson Bruce, late a private, first-class, in Battery F, Sixty-first Regiment Coast Artillery Corps, discharged March 1, 1919, all such installments of money unpaid on war-risk insurance certificate No. T-1016361.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: On page 3, beginning in line 8, strike out all of title IV.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, the present bill directs the Veterans' Administrator to pay Frank Burges Bruce, of Savannah, Ga., the father of Ashmead Ferguson Bruce, a private in the Coast Artillery prior to his death, all moneys unpaid on a certain war-risk insurance certificate. The evidence shows that the decedent on January 6, 1918, applied for insurance in the amount of $10,000, naming his father as beneficiary. He was discharged from the service on March 1, 1919. The premium for April was paid on April 11, 1919. On July 19, 1919, there were received two envelopes postmarked July 17, 1919, one of which contained $6.50 and the other of which contained $12.80, premiums due on the policy.

The insured died on July 15, 1919. On November 11 a letter was written the beneficiary advising him that the policy had lapsed, but that consideration would be given to any evidence that premiums had been paid. In response the receipts for April 11 and for July 17 were presented. An award was therefore approved authorizing the payment of the insurance to the beneficiary in installments of $57.50 monthly. He received these until July 15, 1933, when payments were stopped, effective on that date. The insurance lapsed for nonpayment of the premium due May 1, 1919. It could not have been in force at the time of the veteran's death unless it was reinstated during his lifetime.

If reinstatement had been accomplished, the date would have been the date of the receipt of the premium, the date upon which the premiums were placed in the mail being accepted as the date of receipt. However, the premiums were not placed in the mail until July 17, 1919, 2 days following the date of death of this veteran. For that reason the policy was not reinstated during the lifetime of the veteran. The amount which the beneficiary has already received in excess of $9,000 is, in fact, an overpayment, a payment that was not really due. However, because of the beneficiary's financial condition, no attempt has been made to recover the amount that has been paid.

The explanation which is offered by the beneficiary alleges that the brother of the veteran left two envelopes which had been addressed to the Veterans' Administration by the veteran prior to his death in a post-office substation located in a drug store in Savannah. The letters were to have been registered and mailed on the 14th or 15th of July. They allege the brother left them there at that time, but apparently they were not mailed out until 2 days after the death, judging from the postmarks.

The Veterans' Administration strongly opposes the bill because of the fact that various similar cases are being presented from time to time, and to grant relief in this particular case would work an injustice in other cases of a similar nature where relief should possibly be granted if it is to be in this particular instance. For this reason I have offered this motion to strike out the title and recommend that it be agreed to.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Did the gentleman from Georgia introduce this bill?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I did, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, my good friend the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] has correctly stated the facts with reference to this claim, and from a strictly technical standpoint, probably, the Government or the Veterans' Administration is correct in its contention. This, however, is the true situation. This veteran placed in a post-office substation in the city of Savannah, Ga., funds which paid all premiums due on this policy. The letter containing these payments was placed in the substation on July 14. After they had been placed in the substation this veteran was in an automobile wreck, and as a result of injuries sustained in that wreck he died on the following day, July 15.

The money which he placed in the mails the day before his death did not reach the Veterans' Administration until after his death.

This case was considered and reviewed by the Veterans' Administration. It was determined that this veteran had met the requirements of the law and the Veterans' Administration proceeded to pay his father, the beneficiary under this policy, the amounts due until they had paid the total sum of $9,660. At that time the beneficiary, who was suffering financial adversities, contacted the Veterans' Administration and asked if it was possible for him to receive advance payments in order to meet certain payments due on his home which was in process of being foreclosed. The Veterans' Administration then proceeded to review the case and determined not to pay him anything further. However, no additional evidence of any nature whatsoever was presented when this last review was made by the Veterans' Administration, and no new evidence had been submitted warranting either a review of the case or the revoking of the decision of the Veterans' Administration to pay the claim.

I think the case is correctly stated by the Claims Committee when it says that this appears to be a clear case wherein the Government has taken advantage of a technicality to discontinue payment of installments of money remaining unpaid on an insurance contract which the insured believed to be in good standing at the time of his death, and which, I wish to add, the insured did everything within his power to see was in good standing at the time of his death, and it was no fault on the part of the insured that the money was not received by the Veterans' Administration previous to the time of his death.

It is evident, Mr. Speaker, that this is a case where the Veterans' Administration is taking advantage of a clear technicality, and under the rules of equity and fairness and justice the remaining portion of this outstanding insurance policy should be paid to this beneficiary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] to strike out the title.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COSTELLO) there were—ayes 29, noes 46.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twelve Members present; not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 83, nays 227, not voting 120, as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title V—(H. R. 5719. Conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, consider, and render judgment on the claims of Joliet National Bank, of Joliet, Ill., and Commercial Trust & Savings Bank, of Joliet, Ill., arising out of loans made to the Joliet Forge Co., of Joliet, Ill., for the providing of additional plant facilities and material for the construction of steel forgings during the World War)

That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States, whose duty it shall be, notwithstanding the lapse of time or the bar of statute of limitations or any previous decisions by any court, board, or commission, to hear, consider, and render judgment against the United States in favor of said Joliet National Bank, of Joliet, Ill., and said Commercial Trust & Savings Bank, of Joliet, Ill., or either of them, or any receiver or successor of either of them, for any losses that said Joliet National Bank and said Commercial Trust & Savings Bank, or either of them, may have sustained as a result of loans made by said Joliet National Bank and said Commercial Trust & Savings Bank, or either of them, to the Joliet Forge Co., of Joliet, Ill., for the purpose of providing and furnishing additional plant facilities, equipment, or materials for the construction of steel forgings during the World War as if the same were claims against the United States; and if any other legal or equitable claims arising out of the transactions in connection therewith; but no recovery shall be had for any losses in excess of the losses that shall be affirmatively shown to have been caused by the failure of the United States to comply with its obligations to and with either the Joliet Forge Co., of Joliet, Ill., the Joliet National Bank, of Joliet, Ill., or the Commercial Trust & Savings Bank, of Joliet, Ill., or either of them: Provided, That separate suits may be brought by each of said Joliet National Bank and Commercial Trust & Savings Bank or their receivers or successors, or both, may be joined in one suit and separate judgments may be rendered according as their separate interests may appear, but no suit shall be brought after the expiration of one from the effective date of this act: Provided further, That any evidence or testimony heretofore offered before any court, board, or commission, with respect to these transactions, together with the exhibits therein offered, may be introduced before the Court of Claims, with the full force of depositions, subject to objections as to relevancy and materiality: And provided further, That either party shall have the same right to a review by the Supreme Court of the United States of any decision by the Court of Claims as now exists by law in other cases decided by the Court of Claims.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOTT: Page 3, beginning in line 17, strike out all of title 5.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer this amendment for the purpose of raising a question and if the question is satisfactorily answered, I shall have no further objection to the consideration of the bill; and in this connection I may say that I know of no way of raising the question except by a motion to strike out the item.

In its original form this was a claim of the Joliet Forge Co. against the United States. That bill was passed by the House and Senate but received a pocket veto from the President; and I assure you that the fact that it received a pocket veto from the President would not in any way prejudice me against the bill.

This is the question I wish to raise. I am not able to understand how the two banks of Joliet, who are now the claimants under the pending bill, are proper parties to this legislation or to the litigation contemplated in it. There is some indication that the Joliet Forge Co. would have at least a moral claim against the Government, because the testimony shows that the manager of the supply division of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, during the war, did direct this forge company to increase the facilities of its plant, and because the company complied with the order, and thereby incurred indebtedness, it had a claim against the Government; a claim which properly could have been considered by the Court of Claims or by the Congress. For that reason, if the Joliet Forge Co. or its general creditors were the claimants under this bill, I would have no hesitancy whatever in having the claim submitted to the Court of Claims.

However, the banks and not the forge company or its general creditors are the claimants here. Because the banks loaned this forge company money does not create any contract obligation between the banks and the Government. That does not make the banks parties at all to this proposed litigation, and it does not entitle them to be claimants in this bill. I take it that the forge company is now defunct, for otherwise this matter would have been brought in the name of the Joliet Forge Co. and not in the name of the banks.

The committee report discloses that the banks loaned money to this forge company and that they are bringing this claim for the purpose of reimbursing themselves for the money that they loaned the corporation. The question I am raising is, How does this state of facts create an obligation on the part of the Government to the banks? If whoever is sponsor for this bill can tell me by what right in law or equity it would be proper for the banks to come here and recover from the Government the money they loaned to the Joliet Forge Co., while leaving out of consideration altogether the general creditors of the defunct Joliet Forge Co., then I shall have no further objection to the bill. I think, however, the House is entitled to a full statement on this point before it considers the bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion of the gentleman from Oregon. The pending bill was introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REED] because the city of Joliet happens to be in his congressional district. The facts are essentially as stated by my good friend the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT]. It is rather a singular thing about war claims that when the hysteria and emotionalism of war possessed the country we had agents of the Government and agents of governmental agencies going about the country exhorting manufacturers to go into debt for the purpose of producing war essentials, and that is the reason why the Joliet Forge Co., which was manufacturing steel forgings for the United States Shipbuilding Corporation and the Emergency Fleet Corporation and other governmental agencies, was exhorted by the district manager or inspector for one of the corporations of the Government to expand its plant to 300 percent of the then present capacity within the space of 120 days.

That is a tremendous financial demand to make upon any industry, but they addressed themselves to the job and had to go to the banks in Joliet, Ill., for the purpose of procuring funds.

It was also indicated to them at the time that if they could not get funds from the bank there would be the possibility of a Government loan. As a result, they expanded the plant. When the war finally spun into an armistice, followed by a peace, here was a considerable plant the capacity of which was absolutely useless both to this company, to the city of Joliet and its environment, because there was no longer that great impact of war business. Here, however, was a debt of perhaps $100,000 or more than $100,000 in the first instance, so what should they do?

Finally, the company became defunct, and I assume—although I cannot say as a matter of fact, not having been the sponsor of the bill—that the assets were no doubt assigned to the banks of Joliet. Since that time, under the banking holiday of 1933, to my own certain knowledge, these banks encountered difficulties; and today, or at that time at least, a receiver was in charge; and it was the receiver who indicated that a claim should be made in behalf of the funds or the moneys that rightly were owed by the United States Government to the Joliet Forge Co. That is the situation.

The gentleman from Oregon raises the question of privity of contract. This is a matter on which lawyers can discourse at great length, but I do not propose to weary you with a great legal discourse on the general subject of privity, because it occupies great tomes in the learned profession of the law. I do say, however, that when an agency of the Government comes to a plant and says, "Expand your plant," then business with the company ceases and the company finally becomes defunct with the bank holding the bag, meaning that the depositors and the stockholders hold the bag; then, irrespective of very fine meticulous legal distinctions that may enter into the picture, there is a moral obligation that the Federal Government ought to undertake in this bill.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. If the gentleman will just indulge me a moment, then I will yield.

This bill does not take any money out of the Treasury. It is a jurisdictional bill and asks the right to go before the Court of Claims irrespective of any statutes or the operation of the statute of limitations for the purpose of there presenting this claim and laying down the essential facts.

It was said that the bill was vetoed before, and that is true—by a pocket veto because the Comptroller's Office had not gotten to the White House, I expect, before the veto was finally entered in order to bring out the other side of the picture. Since that time, however, new language has been incorporated into the bill, and this language reads as follows:

No recovery shall be had for any losses in excess of the losses that shall be affirmatively shown to have been caused by the failure of the United States to comply with its obligations to and with either the Joliet Forge Co., of Joliet, Ill., the Joliet National Bank, of Joliet, Ill., or the Commercial Trust & Savings Bank, of Joliet, Ill., or either of them.

All this bill seeks to do, therefore, is to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear evidentiary and substantive facts.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Assume, for the sake of argument, that all the gentleman says is true—and I imagine it is, although the evidence set out in the printed report does not show it—but even though it be true and recovery is had, the proceeds of that recovery would go, not to the creditors of the concern which had a claim against the Government but to the banks between which and the Government there was absolutely no contractual obligation whatever. Does the gentleman think that is fair?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; I do, for this reason: In the first place, the banks were creditors of the Joliet Forge Co.; and, secondly, if there were any other creditors whose claims were not assigned to the bank or purchased by the bank, it is up to the creditors themselves to prefer their claims against the Government to protect their rights or interests. They failed to do so. That is their hard luck, but that is no reason why the position of the banks ought to be impaired.

Mr. MOTT. In this claim, as I see it, the banks of Joliet are bringing a claim against the Government to collect money they lent to a corporation which in turn claimed it had a contractual obligation with the Government. I do not feel that the Government should pay any money whatever out to the creditors or stockholders of this defunct corporation. It certainly should not prefer one creditor, namely, the bank, to all the rest of the creditors.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Whether by law or by morals, it occurs to me that the two banks were subrogated to the position once occupied by the Joliet Forge Co., and that is privity enough, so far as I am concerned, in justifying the right to let this claim go before the Court of Claims for final disposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, there are two slight inaccuracies in this title. I ask unanimous consent to strike out the word "if," in line 18, page 4, and on page 5, line 8, after the word "one," to insert the word "year." Obviously there is an omission in one place and an extra word in the other place.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK]?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what title did the gentleman direct his amendment to?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Title V.

Mr. HANCOCK. It is simply to correct an obvious mistake in language.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the corrections indicated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK] will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title VI—(H. J. Res. 156. Authorizing and directing the Comptroller General of the United States to certify for payment certain claims of grain elevators and grain firms to cover insurance and interest on wheat during the years 1919 and 1920 as per a certain contract authorized by the President)

Whereas it is provided in the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel" (ch. 53, 40 Stat. L., approved August 10, 1914, and ch. 125, 40 Stat. L., approved March 4, 1919), wherein the President was authorized to determine and fix a guaranteed price, to be paid producers of wheat, and wherein the President was further authorized as follows:

"Whenever the President shall find it essential in order to carry out the guaranties aforesaid, or to protect the United States against undue enhancement of its liabilities thereunder, he is authorized to make reasonable compensation for handling, transportation, insurance, and other charges with respect to wheat and wheat flour of said crops and for storage thereof in elevators, on farms and elsewhere"; and

Whereas the President by an Executive Order No. 3087, dated May 14, 1919, in pursuance of the power conferred on him by said act, did order as follows:

"I further find it essential and hereby direct that in order to carry out the guaranties made producers of wheat of the crops of 1919, and to protect the United States against undue enhancement of its liabilities thereunder the United States wheat director utilize the services of the Food Administration Grain Corporation (now the United States Grain Corporation by reason of a change of name authorized by Executive order) as an agency of the United States, and I authorize the Food Administration Grain Corporation * * * to enter into such voluntary agreements, to make such arrangements, and to do and perform all such acts and things as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of said act"; and

Whereas the United States Grain Corporation, in pursuance of said Executive order, and for the purpose of carrying out and making effective the guaranteed price, made and entered into, a certain contract, known as the "Grain dealers' agreement," with various independent and farmer grain firms and grain-elevator companies in Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, Nebraska, Kansas, Iowa, Missouri, Wyoming, and Oklahoma, and wherein it was agreed as follows:

"Fourth. In case the dealer (the elevator firms) shall be unable, after using every effort and all diligence to ship in any week such total of grain as makes the equivalent of at least 20 percent of the amount of wheat in his elevator and owned by him at the beginning of such week, the Grain Corporation shall pay to the dealer to cover insurance and interest for such week seven-twentieths of 1 cent per bushel on wheat in the elevator owned by him at the beginning of such week"; and

Whereas the President, in an Executive Order No. 3320, dated August 21, 1920, did approve, ratify, and confirm all acts done or authorized by the said United States Grain Corporation in carrying out and making said guaranteed price effective; and

Whereas all said grain dealers (the elevator firms) under the terms of said dealers' contract were required by said United States Grain Corporation to, and in accordance therewith each said grain dealer did, make prescribed written weekly reports to said United States Grain Corporation; and in due course there was duly and truly entered from said weekly reports upon the books of said United States Grain Corporation as money earned by said grain dealers, and each of them under the terms of said contract, and as justly due and truly owing to each said grain dealer from the United States Grain Corporation, the several sums of money, as reported by the Department of Commerce in its reports filed with the Secretary of the Senate, to which reports reference is hereinafter made; and

Whereas all the records, books of account, and files of the United States Grain Corporation were placed in the custody of the Department of Commerce by and pursuant to an Executive Order No. 4791 of the President, dated the 31st day of December 1927, and were in the custody of the Department of Commerce at the time of the making and filing with the Senate of the reports of the Department of Commerce hereinafter mentioned; and

Whereas on the 18th day of June 1929 the Senate of the United States duly adopted Senate Resolution 98 (71st Cong., 1st sess.), directing the Department of Commerce to furnish the Senate and file with the Secretary of the Senate the names and addresses of each person, firm, or corporation as they appear on the books and records of the United States Grain Corporation, who have, or appear to have, therefrom, a claim against the United States Grain Corporation or the United States, unpaid, in whole or in part, for such interest and insurance under and by virtue of said contract; and the respective amounts entered on said books and records as apparently earned by each said person, firm, and corporation under and by virtue of said contract; and

Whereas in pursuance of said resolution (No. 98) of the Senate, the Department of Commerce, subsequent to the adoption thereof and prior to the 14th day of December 1929, did furnish the Senate and did file with the Senate written reports wherein the Department of Commerce set forth the names and addresses of divers persons, firms, corporations, and grain dealers, and therein, further, did set forth opposite said names and addresses the respective amounts actually entered upon the records and books of the said United States Grain Corporation as accrued under the terms of said grain dealers' contract, to said persons, firms, corporations, and grain dealers; reference to said reports so filed being hereby made for greater particularity; and

Whereas it appears from said reports of said Department of Commerce, so filed with the Senate, that all the amounts and credits due from said United States Grain Corporation under said grain dealers' contract to the persons, firms, and corporations named in said report still remain unpaid; and

Whereas said persons, firms, corporation, and grain dealers named in said reports of said Department of Commerce are now, and heretofore have been, making claim for payment thereof: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States, upon the filing with his office of an affidavit by any person, firm, corporation, or grain dealer named in said reports of the said Department of Commerce, so filed with the Secretary of the Senate, or by an officer of said person, firm, corporation, or grain dealer, or the successor or legal representative of such person, firm, corporation, or grain dealer, stating that the person, firm, corporation, or grain dealer making said affidavit is the identical person, firm, corporation, or grain dealer named in said reports of said Department of Commerce or is the successor or legal representative of such person, firm, corporation, or grain dealer, and as such, is entitled to receive payment of the respective amount stated in said report of said Department of Commerce as filed with the Secretary of the Senate and therein set opposite the several names of such person, firm, corporation, or grain dealer shall forthwith certify to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States for payment to such person, firm, corporation, or grain dealer, together with the reasonable and necessary expense incident to the administration of this resolution in the office of the Comptroller General of the United States, out of any funds of the United States Grain Corporation now in possession of the United States, or out of any funds in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the respective amounts stated in said reports of the Department of Commerce filed with the Secretary of the Senate and therein set opposite the name and address of said person, firm, corporation, or grain dealer making said affidavit or in whose behalf said affidavit is made; and in this connection and upon the filing of said affidavit it shall be taken as the fact that all conditions and acts necessary to authorize payment of said amounts set opposite the names and addresses of each of said persons, firms, corporations, or grain dealers, named in said reports of said Department of Commerce, have been duly complied with and performed by such persons, firms, corporations, or grain dealers: Provided, That the amount to be paid by such persons, firms, corporations, or grain dealers to their attorneys, as fees, exclusive of their expenses, shall not exceed 10 percent of the amount so paid to each such person, firm, corporation, or grain dealer hereunder.

SEC. 2. The resolution entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the President to ascertain, adjust, and pay certain claims of grain elevators and grain firms to cover insurance and interest in wheat during the years 1919 and 1920 as per a certain contract authorized by the President," approved February 4, 1929, as amended, is hereby repealed.

With the following committee amendment:

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title VII—(S. 1093. For the relief of Mike Chetkovich.)

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mike Chetkovich the sum of $10,000. Such sum was the face amount of a certificate of war-risk insurance (No. T-3229247) issued to the said Mike Chetkovich following his induction into the military service on July 2, 1918. Such insurance was in effect when he became totally and permanently disabled as the result of an operation performed on or about August 12, 1918, at the Army base hospital at Camp Lewis, Wash.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to strike out all of title VI.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK: Beginning on page 11, line 18, strike out all of title VI.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, by this item we are asked to reverse a decision of a court and jury of the United States District Court of Montana, and also to reverse the Circuit Court of Appeals. Furthermore, we are asked to overrule the Supreme Court of the United States, which refused to hear an appeal on a writ of certiorari.

The claimant was drafted into the service of the Army during the World War in July 1918. He was found to be suffering from a hernia and was ordered to the hospital for an operation. It is true he protested against the operation, but he was forced to submit to it. He was discharged some time early in 1919. He now claims and has claimed for a long period of years that as a result of the operation performed in August 1918 he was permanently disabled during the life of his war-risk insurance, which lapsed in 1919.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. On what disability does he claim permanent and total disability and a $10,000 insurance payment?

Mr. HANCOCK. I do not know the proper medical term, but he claims he never fully recovered from the operation.

I want briefly to lay the facts before the membership of the House, then the Members may use their own good judgment. Some years ago he applied to the Veterans' Bureau for compensation and was awarded compensation on the basis of a 40-percent disability. Undoubtedly he is disabled to a certain extent. He has not been able to work steadily since his discharge from the Army, but for a number of years after his operation he was able to engage in a gainful occupation, at least part of the time.

The point I want to stress is that this man brought suit on his war-risk insurance policy before a court and jury and was defeated. The verdict of the jury was against him and the judge refused to order a new trial. He appealed to the circuit court of appeals and the verdict and judgment of the lower court were sustained. He attempted to go to the Supreme Court of the United States and a writ of certiorari was denied.

Mr. Speaker, there must be a point beyond which we are not willing to go in connection with these private bills. If we are going to constitute ourselves a supercourt in this case, we ought to have the entire record before us and we should not take any action without examining it carefully.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is it not a fact that if we pass this title we pay $10,000 insurance and hold that this man was permanently and totally disabled on account of a disability which if incurred while going over the top would only rate $25 a month?

Mr. HANCOCK. As a matter of fact, the Veterans' Bureau has held repeatedly that 40 percent is the most liberal allowance he can get for his disability and that is what he is receiving now.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is it not a fact that the cause of this claimant's ailment was an operation that he was forced to undergo, which had no relation to the hernia for which he was put in the hospital?

Mr. HANCOCK. That is my understanding.

Mr. O'CONNOR. And did they not mutilate the man in the hospital to such an extent that he has never been any good since?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. For what?

Mr. O'CONNOR. For anything.

Mr. HANCOCK. I do not so understand the facts.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is the fact.

Mr. HANCOCK. He was found by the Veterans' Bureau to be 40 percent disabled. He was not totally and permanently disabled, in the judgment of the Veterans' Bureau, a court and jury, and an appellate court. We are being asked, let me say to the gentleman from Montana, to reverse the court, the jury, the appellate court, and the Supreme Court of the United States on self-serving declarations by the claimant himself, plus the eloquence of the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does not the gentleman know that when these cases were first presented to the Federal courts that they operated in a high-handed and hard-boiled manner?

Mr. HANCOCK. No. My understanding is that the plaintiffs won 9 out of 10 cases when they reached a jury, but in this case the plaintiff was defeated by a jury.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR and Mr. THORKELSON rose.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Two gentlemen from Montana have risen. The Chair assumes that each gentleman from Montana wishes to oppose the amendment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I may say that the claimant comes from the district of my colleague and his residence is in Butte. If my colleague insists on addressing the House in opposition to the amendment I yield to him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under those circumstances the Chair believes the gentleman from Montana [Mr. THORKELSON] is entitled to the time.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that decision of three courts may have to be reversed. This case is not one anyone should laugh about. This man enlisted on the 2d of July and after having been in training for 1 month it was found that he had a hernia in the undescended testicle. He was ordered to the hospital and held under observation for 5 days and was operated on the 12th of August. The man weighed 190 pounds and was in good health when he enlisted. He worked in the mines in Butte, and in order to work in the mines one must be in reasonably good health.

When this man reached the hospital he was what we term a clean surgical case, that is, there was no infection. He was operated on by the surgeons in the hospital, and for some reason or other he became infected. He developed blood poisoning after the operation; in other words, he was the victim of circumstances beyond his control. He could not help that he became infected. The point to bear in mind is that when you die from an operation you usually die from infection, and not necessarily from the surgery.

It is said that the man was sent to the infirmary because of laryngitis, or sore throat, but it was found that he had a suppurating post-operative wound. This infection, of course, brought about a breaking down of the tissue in the area of the operation, which was on the left side of his abdomen, so that he now has difficulty in keeping his intestines within his abdomen. A man cannot work when the abdominal wall is so weak that the intestine protrudes, and there is no manner in which an appliance can be used to control such hernia and keep the bowels within the abdominal cavity. That is this man's position. He is alive, that is quite true, but at the same time he is not in a physical condition to do any labor such as he did before he enlisted in the United States Army. He is entitled to exactly the same compensation as any other man who enlisted in the armed forces of the United States.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THORKELSON. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MILLER. Does the gentleman believe that the 40-percent rating is unfair? Will the gentleman say as a doctor that the man was permanently and totally disabled?

Mr. THORKELSON. I say he is permanently and totally disabled.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THORKELSON. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I wish to read into the RECORD a statement made by Senator MURRAY in regard to the trial feature of this case, when this bill was before the Senate and which has passed the Senate.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I should like to state that I believe there has been a real miscarriage of justice in this case.

I happen to know the man, and I have seen a great deal of him. I know that he is in a totally disabled condition, and that in the trial of the case at Butte the case was rushed through by the judge, and certain remarks were made which I think prejudiced the case. Since the case was tried it has also been brought out that there was evidence which was not presented to the jury. That is referred to in the record here. It seems to me that the decision in that case should not be conclusive; I do not understand that it is; and that, in view of the real facts in the case, it would be an utter injustice, a miscarriage of justice, to this man to deprive him of the rights he had under his insurance policy.

This is the argument made by Senator MURRAY before the Senate in regard to this bill and ought to be given weight, as Senator MURRAY lives in Butte, knows the man, and also the judge that tried the case.

Mr. THORKELSON. Yes; but I wish to make this additional remark: In ordinary testimony before the courts actual facts as to infection and other unforeseen conditions are not brought out as clearly as they should be. These facts were probably not placed before the jury, and they did not understand that this man had become infected and that his abdominal wall is broken down because of this infection. He is actually 100 percent disabled, because he cannot perform the work he was accustomed to do before he enlisted in the armed forces of the United States.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THORKELSON. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is the gentleman in favor of holding every World War veteran permanently and totally disabled for compensation and insurance purposes because he may have a hernia or have lost a portion of his anatomy, which rates a payment of $25 a month if it was incurred while going over the top?

Mr. THORKELSON. No; I do not hold any opinion of that sort.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. This man is now getting compensation, and this bill is to give him $10,000 insurance and hold that he is totally and permanently disabled.

Mr. THORKELSON. Let me answer the question in this way: Anyone who has had an infection after an operation is liable to develop a post-operative hernia, and if there is a massive destruction of tissue, such hernia cannot be repaired by surgery. A person suffering from an inoperable hernia is certainly entitled to compensation for total and permanent disability. The question in issue is not a simple operation for a hernia, it is not a question of an orchiectomy; the point is that he had an infection, after an operation for a hernia, which caused mass destruction of tissue of the abdominal wall which cannot be repaired by operative procedure. It cannot be retained by a truss, and he is therefore unable to perform the work he did before he enlisted in the Army. He is, as I have said, a total disability, and therefore entitled to the same consideration given to others suffering from similar service-connected disability.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York to strike out the title.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. O'CONNOR) there were—ayes 54, noes 21.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 226, nays 79, not voting 125, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Appropriations may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report on the first deficiency bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it the intention of the gentleman to bring this up in the morning?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I hope to be able to do so. I have not spoken to the leadership about it, but I think we can do so, I will say to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have 1 minute within which to make an announcement to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege of announcing to the House that Mr. Lothrop Stoddard, one of the foremost lecturers and authors of this country, has recently returned from quite an extended tour in Germany and has agreed to speak "off the record" with the Members of the House tomorrow evening in the caucus room. Seven thirty, I believe, is the hour. The notice is on the bulletin board. In addition to the Members of the House themselves, I think Mr. Stoddard would be pleased if you would bring your wife or—well, I guess somebody else, with you [laughter]; but we will have to hold the number down to one.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein excerpts from the address of President Roosevelt, also an address by Hon. Charles W. Eliot, Director of the National Resources Planning Board.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a radio address by myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I was greatly startled to read yesterday that the chairman of my committee, charged with watching expenditures of the Government, was advocating at once an additional appropriation of $500,000,000 for W. P. A. I was sorry, indeed, to note the source from which the request comes. I had hoped this year there would be recognition of the fact that relief could be cut in half by some formula whereby the wealthier States and communities would look after their own problems of relief and relieve the Federal Government to that extent. Local tax rates are going down. Economy in local government now prevails. Let us abandon the old vote-getting idea and recognize the fact that there are wealthy communities far more capable of bearing this burden than the Federal Government. Let us not have another "bought" election. I bring this thought to you because it is high time that we resorted to some such plan as the one I have indicated. Holders of Government debt are now extremely nervous, even though present surface appearances do not proclaim it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHORT. I simply rise at this time to ask, Mr. Speaker, when the membership of the House can look forward to a report from the special committee which is a subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee, with respect to its investigation of W. P. A. activities? If I recall correctly, about a year ago the House voted this committee, composed of very able men both on the majority and the minority side, $100,000 to investigate W. P. A. activities in different States. The press has contained very serious charges as to the administration of this agency, particularly in the States of Louisiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, and I understand the situation in Indiana is not so good. It has not been too good out in Missouri either, but as a private citizen, as well as a Member of this House, I would like to know when we may expect a report from the committee that is investigating these activities.

INCREASE OF PENSIONS TO SUNDRY WIDOWS

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask that we may resume consideration of the bills on the Private Calendar, beginning with Calendar No. 519, the bill (H. R. 7831) granting increase of pensions to sundry widows.

THE CURRENT REVOLUTION

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, for 7 years we have been undergoing a revolution in this country. While it has been a more or less bloodless revolution from the standpoint of the use of firearms, cannons, and the accouterments of war, it has nevertheless taken a heavy toll in human suffering, in business casualties, in its effects on industry, on agriculture, and on labor. Revolutions are measured not alone by those who fall before the guns. Revolutions are measured in the human agony which they cause, and the changes which they set in motion. Not all revolutions are bad by any means. As a matter of fact, our Nation had its birth as a result of a revolution. But the revolution about which I desire to talk to you tonight is a revolution reactionary in its nature, radical in its effects, which would hurl this Nation back from the advances it has made along the road of free government and individual liberty into the tyrannies of an autocracy and toward the evils of an ultimate political despotism.

The principal characteristic of this revolution is the centralization of power in the executive department at Washington. Not only is the political bureaucratic propaganda all designed to persuade the people of America that they are no longer competent to conduct their own affairs, but that a paternalistic political bureaucracy in Washington must take over the job.

Grotesque as it is, it has been seriously and continuously suggested by this New Deal bureaucracy at Washington, feeding and fattening on the taxpayers' money, and naturally desirous of remaining in power, that there is in all this broad land only one individual with intelligence enough, capacity enough, integrity enough, ability enough, and character enough, to be President of the United States, to be the Chief Executive of this Nation, and to administer the laws of the country. It will not surprise you to know that the individual, this lone individual out of 130,000,000 Americans, who is accredited with the ability and capacity to be President by this New Deal bureaucratic propaganda, is Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

Now, there is today in the United States Senate a living, breathing refutation of that oft-repeated statement that Mr. Roosevelt must be drafted for a third term because he is the only man capable of being President. The gentleman I have in mind, and whom I believe has every quality fitting him to be a successful President of the United States, particularly during the great emergency now facing the country, is a man who first saw the light of day within the confines of my own State. He is a son of Michigan. He is the Honorable ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG.

There is another point, however, that I wish to mention at this time, and that is the importance of giving Senator VANDENBERG, or any other Republican President, a Republican House of Representatives with which to work. As I develop the theme I have in mind somewhat further, you will more and more clearly see the vital necessity for the Republicans recapturing control of the House of Representatives in November.

Under any circumstances it will not be possible in 1940 for the Republicans to take control of the Senate; therefore, any Republican President goes into office with one strike on him, and it becomes all the more important that he have a Republican majority in the House of Representatives in order that constructive legislation can be put through that body by the traditional American method, and sent to the Senate, a majority of which will be members of the opposition party.

Concerning this point, it cannot be other than encouraging as we look at Senator VANDENBERG's record and find there that he has led, successfully and repeatedly, fights in the Senate which required great ability, vision, courage, leadership, and a broad grasp of the problems which confront this Nation.

The qualities of leadership already displayed on numerous occasions by Senator VANDENBERG constitute a most valuable asset to any Republican President under conditions that will prevail after the next election. It will contribute much to the success of his administration.

At this time I wish to give credit to the United States News in Washington for its clear statement of some of the ideas which I desire to incorporate in my remarks in order that we may see more clearly what has been transpiring in this Nation for the past 7 years, and what probably will transpire in this Nation if we have 4 years more of the same influences that have been operating during that time.

As this unbiased and nonpartisan publication recently put it in an editorial:

> Much has been said and written about the changes the United States has undergone in our system of government in the last 7 years, but it is doubtful whether any considerable number of the American people have really sensed the transformation.

In these 7 years governmental processes have been altered in so many ways that only a broad perspective of the whole can reveal what has happened to us since the New Deal came into power on March 4, 1933. It was well said by the man who is now President of the United States, when he was Governor of the State of New York back in 1930, that the preservation of home rule by the States—

> Is not a cry of jealous Commonwealths seeking their own aggrandizement at the expense of sister States. It is a fundamental necessity if we are to remain a truly united country.
> A proper understanding of the fundamental powers of the States—> is very necessary and important. A lack of study and knowledge of the matter of the sovereign power of the people through State government has led us to drift insensibly toward that dangerous disregard of minority needs which marks the beginning of autocracy.

He said—

Mr. Roosevelt then made this remarkable observation:

> The doctrine of regulation and legislation by master minds, in whose judgment and will all the people may gladly and quietly acquiesce, has been too glaringly apparent at Washington during these last 10 years. Were it possible to find master minds so unselfish, so willing to decide unhesitatingly against their own personal interests or private prejudices, men almost godlike in their ability to hold the scales of justice with an even hand, such a government might be in the interests of the country, but there are none such on our political horizon, and we cannot expect a complete reversal of all the teachings of history.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if there has been any single characteristic that has marked this revolution of the past 7 years, it is the change brought about by the New Deal administration from the doctrine of regulation and legislation by the people through their representatives in Congress to a policy of regulation and legislation by master minds. But it remains the unfortunate fact, as foreseen by Mr. Roosevelt in 1932, that those master minds have not been unselfish; they have not been willing to decide unhesitatingly against their own personal interests or private prejudices; they have not been men almost godlike in their ability to hold the scales of justice with an even hand. Ah, no, my friends; they have been—these master minds—selfish, corrupt, willing to decide unhesitatingly in favor of their own personal interests and private prejudices, as against the interests of the people and the country they were supposed to serve. Instead of being godlike, they have been exactly like the usual political henchmen, the political spoilsmen, the fat and bloated political bureaucrats who are willing to sit in swivel chairs at Washington, or out in the various States, eating up the substance of the people and wasting the taxpayers' money in order to perpetuate themselves in power.

Now let me quote another paragraph from this speech made by Mr. Roosevelt in 1930. Said he:

> As a matter of fact and law, the governing rights of the States are all of those which have not been surrendered to the National Government by the Constitution or its amendments. Wisely and unwisely, people know that under the eighteenth amendment Congress has been given the right to legislate on this particular subject, but this is not the case in the matter of a great number of other vital problems of government, such as the conduct of public utilities, of banks, of insurance, of business, of agriculture, of education, of social welfare, and of a dozen other important features. In these Washington must not be encouraged to interfere.

Could you imagine, fellow citizens, that that paragraph was written and uttered by Franklin Delano Roosevelt if I did not tell you? Why, there has not been a single one of the activities he named in that paragraph which has not been invaded by the Federal Government at Washington under the New Deal administration and under his leadership. The Government has gone into competition with every one of the businesses he mentioned in that paragraph, and is taxing the privately owned businesses in order to subsidize, by their money, governmental competition with them.

Now, Mr. Roosevelt said something else in that speech that I want to quote to you:

> Now, to bring about government by oligarchy, masquerading as democracy, it is fundamentally essential that practically all authority and control be centralized in our National Government. The individual sovereignty of our States must first be destroyed, except in mere minor matters of legislation. We are safe from the danger of any such departure from the principles on which this country was founded just so long as the individual home rule of the States is scrupulously preserved and fought for whenever it seems in danger.
> Thus it will be seen that this home rule is a most important thing, a most vital thing, if we are to continue along the course on which we have so far progressed with such unprecedented success.

Now, my fellow citizens, there has been no 7-year period in the history of this Nation in which there has been so great an attempt by the administration at Washington to wrest the sovereignty of the States away from them than has been the case in the last 7 years.

As has been pointed out in the editorial I referred to a while ago, the prime characteristic of the New Deal today is its autocracy. It never admits an error. Its policy is that the end justifies the means.

This very concentration of economic power in the hands of the governmental bureaucrats, those "master minds," against whom Mr. Roosevelt warned us in 1930, has been shocking to those who are familiar with the complicated affairs of business and finance, but it has thus far largely escaped the attention of the citizens, who generally are not aware of the dangers that now face them.

You all realize, when you stop to think about it, that one by one, little by little, the New Deal agencies have filched from a careless Congress broad discretionary powers. They have boldly written into the statutes regulations that have no sanction of law.

Now, under ordinary circumstances the courts could be expected to check such abuses. But we might just as well face the fact here and now that even the judiciary has been captured by the New Deal.

Our Federal judiciary is no longer bipartisan in character. Active politicians and New Deal partisans have been put on the benches in the Federal courts. On the Supreme Court Bench all five new appointees, constituting a majority of that body, were appointed by the President from the ranks of the active New Deal. It is not a question now whether the Nation can really expect justice from the very men who helped to develop the New Deal technique, as it is the question of what those who helped to develop the New Deal technique will consider justice. After all, men who for years have held certain beliefs, and who have been devoted to certain doctrines, and who have believed in certain policies, cannot and do not suddenly divest themselves of such conditioned mentalities the moment they don the robes of the Federal bench.

Control of the judiciary, control of the prosecuting departments, control of the so-called independent commissions and boards, complete control of the purse strings, and the control of disbursements to groups through subsidies has accomplished just as great a revolution in the United States as could have been wrought by physical force.

We have learned just recently that even the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been solicited to use its lending power to force compliance, on the part of private industry and business, with standards that have never been authorized by the Congress but which were set up by autocratic commissions and autocratic commissioners. The placing of governmental contracts, involving millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money, has too often been conditioned on acceptance of so-called reforms imposed by this political bureaucracy.

The use of the W. P. A. for corrupt political purposes is too well known to need reiteration. The same thing is true of appropriations that place State governments at the mercy of the Federal Government. Just within the last few days the Hatch bill, designed to eliminate political corruptions to some extent from these various bureaus and commissions, the W. P. A., and the farm administrations, narrowly missed being undone in the United States Senate.

Mr. Roosevelt was perfectly correct when he said that to bring about government by oligarchy, masquerading as democracy, it is fundamentally essential that practically all authority and control be centralized in our National Government.

The technique of the New Deal revolutionists in our democracy has been to gain control of all branches of the Government and to hold them indefinitely. That is why the bureaucrats of the New Deal are using every dollar and every dime of the taxpayers' money that they can use to keep themselves entrenched in power for another 4 years.

As has been pointed out, Mr. Roosevelt may think his benevolence and good intentions will save the Nation and hold these radicals at bay. He may regard with tranquillity the implications of what may follow if the third-term precedent is broken. However this may be, there is no escaping the attitude which the "revolutionists" in Washington have toward the whole third-term question. If it proves to be the device by which they can keep their own power absolute, and themselves enthroned in places of influence and power, they will disregard the third-term tradition with as little compunction as they have sought to disregard the plain terms of the Constitution itself.

No one can examine the way in which the whole economic system has been dominated by the New Deal agencies without being shocked by the degree of control which the Government has taken, over all of those activities which Mr. Roosevelt warned in 1930 "must not be interfered with by Washington."

Under the guise of protecting investors, the Securities and Exchange Commission was created. Today this Commission goes further than the protection of investors. It interferes in management. It attempts to dictate financial operations of private companies. The result is that millions of dollars that normally would have been spent, and which ought to be spent in construction, and in the creation of employment, are not being spent because capital is afraid.

Then there is the National Labor Relations Board, which brazenly confesses before an investigating committee its policy that the end justifies the means. Here we see members of a quasi-judicial body in intimate collusion with one faction of labor unionism, conspiring to bring charges against employers and making an empty farce of the whole theory of judicial procedure and fair hearings.

When arbitrary power has no check, of course, it runs wild. The so-called liberals of the New Deal are trying to condemn the moderates because they resist what the liberals are pleased to call reform. But it is apparent, and it is a good thing that it is, that those of us who believe in moderate and progressive government will never agree to reforms that are to be obtained by coercion or by governmental disregard of the due process of law as guaranteed by the Constitution. The Bill of Rights must be sustained if private initiative, as we have known it, is to continue in this country.

Everybody in the New Deal administration, from the President down, has pleaded good intentions for these high-handed and autocratic proceedings. No one has better stated the case of the benevolent autocrat than did Daniel Webster nearly a century ago when he declared, and I quote:

> It is hardly too strong to say the Constitution was made to guard the people against the dangers of good intentions, real or intended. * * * There are men in all ages who mean to exercise power usefully, but who mean to exercise it. They mean to govern well, but they mean to govern; they promise to be kind masters, but they mean to be masters. They think they need but little restraint upon themselves. Their notion of the public interest is apt to be quite closely connected with their own exercise of authority. They may not, indeed, always understand their own motives. The love of power may sink too deep in their own hearts even for their own security and may pass with themselves for mere patriotism and benevolence.

Taxes have grown to an intolerable volume. The deficits of the Federal Government have increased beyond any limits ever conceived of by our people; and still there is not the slightest sign of repentance or economy displayed by the New Deal administration.

The reason is because the new dealers feel themselves to be revolutionists. They think they know best what the people need, and the people therefore should be happy, presumably because of the benevolent purposes which the Roosevelt revolutionists have proclaimed.

"So many good things have been done" is the reason urged by them for condoning or minimizing the improper use of public power and public money.

You will recall that, in his annual message to the Congress on January 3, 1936, Mr. Roosevelt said, and I quote:

> In 34 months we have built up new instruments of public power. In the hands of a people's government this power is wholesome and proper. But in the hands of political puppets of an economic autocracy such power would provide shackles for the liberties of the people.

Yes, my fellow citizens; and since that eventful message of January 3, 1936, still more instruments of public power have been added to those of which the President then boasted. And all of those instruments of public power in the hands of the puppets of a political autocracy also provide shackles for the liberties of the people. Let us not forget that.

Edward Livingston described our situation of today perfectly when he said, and I quote:

> The gloss of zeal for the public service is always spread over acts of oppression, and the people are sometimes made to consider that zeal as a brilliant exertion of energy in their favor, which, when viewed in its true light, would be found a fatal blow to their rights. In no government is this effect so easily produced as in a free republic; party spirit, inseparable from its existence, aid the illusion, and a popular leader is allowed in many instances impunity—and sometimes is rewarded with applause—for acts which would make a tyrant tremble on his throne.

It is time, ladies and gentlemen, that we understand the spirit and the intent of this New Deal conquest. It is time that we face the clear implications of what a third term for the New Deal administration actually means to this country. It is a fact, of course, that the New Deal came in on a wave of reform through the usual and proper electoral processes, and there was no intimidation at the polls in 1932. It was a different story, however, in the 1936 elections. In that campaign we had a repetition of the methods characteristic of the most autocratic and corrupt administrations that have ever been witnessed in this country. It was reminiscent of the days of the Roman Empire, when direct subsidies from the governing authorities were used to guarantee a perpetuation of political power. Again in 1938 we saw political corruption and the prostitution of relief to improper political purposes rampant throughout this land. We cannot say that this campaign of 1940 will be free from governmental coercion or force, because the mechanisms through which organizations and individuals are linked politically to an administration, which dispenses favors to them as against others, makes it impossible for us to ignore the question of how far this governmental power can be, or will be, a factor in maintaining the existing administration by influencing a substantial number of electoral votes.

These last 7 years have served to reveal the concept of government which the new dealers had in 1932, but which they did not then clarify. These last 7 years have shown their purposes and intentions to use governmental power for their own ends; to exercise that governmental power to curtail civil liberties, to destroy individual initiative, and freedom of enterprise.

During 7 years these vast powers, never before exercised by the Federal Government, have been assumed, and yet not a single amendment to the Constitution has been submitted to the people in that time. We must awaken now to the fact that although the constitutional method of changing the organic law of this Nation is by the submission of a proposed amendment to the will of the people, that is not the New Deal method for amending the Constitution. They do it without the consent of the people. Practically speaking, the Constitution can be amended by judicial interpretation. It may be amended by Federal regulation so long as the courts are acquiescent.

There is one body today in which the American people may place their hope of continued liberty; there is one body which can be the guardian of the Constitution and of the people's rights and privileges, and that body is a Republican House of Representatives.

It has been well said in the editorial to which I referred in the beginning:

> Seven years of this "revolution" have passed and still 8,000,000 persons are idle. The economic system is full of friction and domestic war.
> Selfishness and a quest for personal power reign supreme in Washington.

The old idea that maybe self-sacrifice and unselfish public service is a basic necessity among the public servants in a democracy has gone by the boards.

It may be, Mr. Speaker, that the 1940 elections will be a counter "revolution." If the New Deal administration should win another 4 years of power, it is my opinion that the 1940 elections would simply confirm the fear of many that the election of 1932 was really the last free election in America, and that as long as the administration in power can tax and borrow and spend, squander, and elect, the New Deal will remain at the helm.

Now, the fact of the matter is, this tendency of the Government to reach out for more and more power, to perform more and more of the functions formerly performed by the States, the municipalities, and the individual citizens has been growing up for the past 30 years.

The World War vastly accentuated the trend.

Under the New Deal we have gone ahead by leaps and bounds toward that autocracy against which Mr. Roosevelt himself warned the country in 1930.

Now, what is the answer to the problem? How are we to stop this trend?

The answer is this, and it is the only answer possible:

First, we must return the White House and the House of Representatives to the control of a party that believes that a system of government under which the Nation as a whole has enjoyed a larger share of the more abundant life, is entitled to the respect of our people and preservation for future generations.

We must then provide for an independent, nonpartisan, scientific survey of every function, department, bureau, commission, and board of the Government, by experts, for the purpose of determining where these functions can be curtailed; to find where functions belonging to the States, but usurped by the Federal Government, should be returned to the States or municipalities; to determine where every activity of the Government in which efficiency can be increased without an increase in cost; to determine every activity of Government in which efficiency can be maintained and the cost reduced; in short, to do what every sensible American family must do when it finds its outgo greater than its income—to cut out all useless activities, to stop overlapping, weed out waste and extravagance, ruthlessly stamp out corruption, and make every dollar spent for governmental operations count.

Great savings can thus be achieved without causing any citizen to suffer; without depriving any citizen, worthy of help, of the relief he should have; without impairing the Government in the least, and without creating any new discouragement or fears.

Why, the very prospect of such a survey would act as the needed stimulant to business. Private investment would be resumed. Unemployment would be reduced. Prosperity would again be in sight.

Now, a word as to our foreign affairs. Mr. Roosevelt now has two personal emissaries—two "Colonel Houses"—abroad. He has his counterpart of Mr. Wilson's ambassador, Walter Hines Page, at the Court of St. James. He has his counterpart of an internationally minded Secretary of State—his Robert Lansing—in Mr. Secretary Hull.

If this Nation is not so badly involved in foreign quarrels and conflicts as to be unable to withdraw by election day next November, I shall be happily surprised.

But let me say to you, Mr. Speaker, that America's prosperity will not be found in mixing into any wars in Europe. Our salvation and the security of our constitutional government, and the safety of our personal liberties under the Bill of Rights, lie in solving our domestic problems and not in the artificial and destructive activities of war, nor in attempting to solve all the difficulties of the world. Our problem is immediate; it is here at home. It is not "on the Rhine."

It behooves every man and woman who is concerned for the welfare of this Nation and our people to ponder these questions well and then to register their sentiments at the ballot boxes next November.

After all, the country is still free enough that if the people are determined to do it they can express their will as the sovereign people of this Nation. And they can stop this trend toward totalitarianism that has been going on for the past 7 years.

It is up to the people themselves. The fate of this country is in safe hands. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address made by my colleague the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SASSCER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the subject of chain stores.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. CRAVENS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLS] may have leave of absence from and including today to and including next Monday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting a radio address recently delivered by my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include a brief statement by Mr. Alvin E. O. Konsky.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CAMPS

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I introduced a bill, which is a very short one, and which I shall read:

That no Civilian Conservation Corps camp existing on February 1, 1940, shall be abandoned or eliminated on account of reductions, or anticipated reductions, in appropriations for the Civilian Conservation Corps for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941.

SEC. 2. Any reduction in the administrative personnel of, or in the enrollment of, any Civilian Conservation Corps camp in existence on February 1, 1940, necessitated by any reduction, or anticipated reduction, in appropriations for the Civilian Conservation Corps for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, shall be made in such a manner that the percentage of reduction for each such camp shall, insofar as practicable, be the same.

I think we should not cut out the C. C. C. camps. The bill was referred to the Committee on Labor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

AMENDMENTS TO WAGNER ACT

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, my attention has been called to an article in this morning's Washington Times-Herald under the caption "Washington Daily Merry-Go-Round." The article, in part, reads as follows:

For the first time this year, all 21 members of the committee were present when it met behind closed doors. Chairman MARY NORTON promptly put them on the spot by asking each his opinion about the drastic proposals authored by Representative HOWARD SMITH, Virginia antiunionite, who is chairman of the special committee investigating the Labor Board.

That is absolutely incorrect. I continue with the article.

Result of the secret poll was: Ten—nine Democrats and one Republican—were flatly opposed to all the amendments; five favored them; five voiced partial approval; one refused to commit himself. The individual members of these groups were:

Flatly opposed: Democrats—Mrs. NORTON, KENT KELLER, MATT DUNN, REUBEN T. WOOD (president of the Missouri State Federation of Labor), JOHN LESINSKI, ALBERT THOMAS, FRANK FRIES, LAWRENCE CONNERY (brother and successor to the late Bill Connery, coauthor with Senator WAGNER of the Labor Act), and THOMAS D'ALESANDRO; and RICHARD WELCH, liberal California Republican.

Favorable: Republicans—FRED HARTLEY, CHESTER GROSS, and CLARE HOFFMAN; Democrats—GRAHAM BARDEN (author of a bill to emasculate the Wage and Hour Act, and W. F. NORRELL, of Arkansas, elected as a new dealer in 1938.

Partially favorable: Democrats—ROBERT RAMSPECK and JENNINGS RANDOLPH; Republicans—CLYDE SMITH, BRUCE BARTON, and GERALD LANDIS.

No comment: Democrat—Dow HARTER, of Akron, Ohio, elected with C. I. O. support.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentlewoman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentlewoman from New Jersey may be permitted to proceed for 2 minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. It will be interesting to note at this time that the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Dow HARTER, of Akron, Ohio, is not a member of the Labor Committee. Therefore, that portion of the article speaks for itself, and may I say that it is about as true as all of the rest of the article. The entire article is absolutely and entirely untrue. First of all, the Smith amendments were not before the committee. When the committee met, the chairman asked the committee to consider all amendments before the committee, and the committee agreed to do so, and all amendments are being considered. That is the procedure we agreed upon.

We had nine bills before the committee in which are included the Smith amendments. There was never at any time any vote taken on whether or not we should consider the Smith amendments. The entire article, consequently, is just as untrue as is the statement that the gentleman from Ohio, Dow HARTER, of Akron, Ohio, is a member of the committee. The gentleman from Ohio, Mr. HUNTER, is a member of the committee, and apparently the gentlemen from Ohio, Mr. HARTER or Mr. HUNTER, made little difference to the Merry-Go-Round.

Mr. Speaker, this article is entirely incorrect. It does a great injustice to the members of the Committee on Labor, and it certainly should be corrected by the authors of the Merry-Go-Round if they want to play fair with the Labor Committee of the House of Representatives and also with the public interested in their articles.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman from New Jersey yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I shall be very glad to.

Mr. RICH. We have had so many investigations in the last year or so that it might be well to have a congressional investigation of this article.

Mrs. NORTON. If the gentleman would like to conduct a one-man investigation, I can assure him that the Labor Committee will heartily endorse it.

Mr. RICH. I think the Labor Committee ought to do the investigating.

THE W. P. A. INVESTIGATION

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I am reluctant to answer the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] on the point he raised a few minutes ago, but I think he and the other Members of the House should be reminded that the special subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations who investigated W. P. A. did make a report. I cannot speak for the committee, I am about the least on it, but I think somebody should answer and point out that not only was a report made last spring but as a result of that investigation and on the report the House passed a bill that adopted the 18-months' provision, took out the prevailing wage, eliminated the theater projects, and a few other things. We did a good job, and we have been doing some good work, indirectly and incidentally in Louisiana and other places. The committee undoubtedly will make a further report, but for the time being I do not want the House to forget that we passed a bill on top of making a report last spring. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we want to continue with omnibus bills on the Private Calendar; but if there are going to be so many 1-minute speeches, we shall not be able to proceed with the next bill, in which many Members are interested.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I assure the gentleman that I have no desire to detain the House.

Mr. LESINSKI. I appreciate that; but so many Members are asking to make 1-minute speeches that it looks to me as though it were an effort to prevent consideration of this next bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how much time did the gentleman ask for?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asked to address the House for 2 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I think we should adhere to the regular rules of the House and not permit speeches exceeding 1 minute, inasmuch as the legislative program for the day has not been concluded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma modify his request?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I ask for 2 minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object to the gentleman's proceeding for 2 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

THE CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS CAMPS

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I am in full sympathy with the objectives of the bill of the gentleman from Arkansas as announced by him a few moments ago. I am delighted to join with him in his desire to keep all of the present C. C. C. camps. I feel that is the sentiment of a majority of the Members of the House. But I am fearful that my good friend's bill to which he referred, if actually passed, would not accomplish the purpose that we all desire. It is going to be humanly impossible to maintain all of the present camps if the appropriation is reduced $56,000,000 below the amount expended for the same camps this fiscal year. As Members know, the committee will make its report this week, at which time Members of the House will have an opportunity to speak by their votes on this important question.

If a reduction of $56,000,000 is actually made, I am advised that it would mean the elimination of 273 camps in the United States. Certainly Members of Congress and the country expect the Civilian Conservation Corps and other departments and agencies to inaugurate every reasonable economy, but it would be false economy to eliminate 273 camps at this time.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. ELLIS. Does the gentleman realize that there are 1,500 C. C. C. camps in the Nation now?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Oh, yes; and the point I am trying to make is that if the appropriation for the camps takes the drastic reduction proposed of $56,000,000 that all the legislative bills in the world will not save the day so far as the C. C. C. camps are concerned.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD on two subjects; in one to include an article by Ernest Lindley, and in the other to insert a brief editorial from the Los Angeles Daily News.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LANDIS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes on tomorrow after the disposition of the legislative business for the day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA SUBCOMMITTEE ON POLICE AND FIREMEN

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the subcommittee on police and firemen of the Committee on the District of Columbia may sit during the session of the House tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this agreeable to the minority Members?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I say that it is; yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a quotation from a press release of the First Lady of the Land with reference to the housing census.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes tomorrow, at the conclusion of business on the Speaker's table and after the address of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

INCREASE OF PENSIONS TO SUNDRY WIDOWS

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 7831) granting increase of pensions to sundry widows.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this merely to consider the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For the present consideration of the bill under the Private Calendar rule.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.—

Title I—(H. R. 326. Granting an increase of pension to Mary W. Osterhaus.)

That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll subject to the provisions and limitations of the pensions laws, the name of Mary W. Osterhaus, widow of Hugo Osterhaus, late rear admiral, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $100 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK: Strike out title I.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I offer this amendment for the purpose of getting the judgment of the Members of the House on the first of these 13 separate items. All of them are for the purpose of increasing the pensions given to the widows of certain high-ranking officers of the Army and Navy. All of them have a strong appeal. The question involved is, Do we wish to base widows' pensions on the rank of their deceased husbands?

I notice in this bill that 11 of the beneficiaries are the widows of rear admirals or major generals. The bill gives them $100-a-month pensions in lieu of the $30 which most of them are receiving under the general law as widows of Spanish-American War veterans. There are two widows mentioned, one of a colonel and the other of a lieutenant colonel, who would receive $75 per month under the bill. The question, and it will be decided, insofar as I am concerned, by the vote on the first item, is whether we wish to depart from the general law and award pensions to widows on the basis of the rank of their deceased husbands.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Shortly after the Spanish-American War there was an attempt made in Congress, as I recall, to do this very thing. Congress has always frowned on it. Down through the years it has been the policy of the Congress that when pensions are granted they should go alike to the widows of all soldiers.

Mr. HANCOCK. That is right.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I take it from the gentleman's amendment that he does not approve of paying a large pension to the widow of an admiral when the widow of a soldier who died going over the top only receives $30 a month?

Mr. HANCOCK. That is what I think, and it is the attitude taken by the Veterans' Bureau. I call attention to the latter part of the report of General Hines, in which he directs our attention to the fact that—

Widows of officers who have not attained high or highest rank are often left with minor children to support and educate—and this is true of widows of enlisted men—who, because of the lower pay income of their husbands, have been unable to build a fund to adequately provide for their economic needs when death terminates the husband's income. The financial crisis with which such group of widows is confronted is ordinarily as great and probably greater than that which the widows of high-ranking officers must meet.

This is an invitation, if the bill passes, to widows of high-ranking officers who are not in affluent circumstances to come in and ask for special consideration. In other words, the widows of high-ranking officers may receive a hundred dollars per month, while the widows of lieutenants, captains, and sergeants in similar circumstances receive $20 or $30. Personally, I am opposed to this policy, but I am only one Member of this jury. I am offering this amendment so the House may go on record on this question. I do not intend to object to the other 12 cases in the bill if the House approves the first one. It is for the House to decide and not for the handful of men who watch the Private Calendar. This will establish a policy which will be a guide in the future, as far as I am concerned, in connection with widows' pension bills. I merely want you to understand what the question is. I am going to ask for a roll call, so that we may go on record and the country may know what to expect and the widows of high-ranking officers will know what to expect when private bills of this kind are introduced.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. It has always been my understanding that all pensions were based upon the principle of the need of the pensioner. If we adopt the rule of giving a pension to a widow of a high ranking officer in either the Army or the Navy higher than the usual amount, we will be basing it on rank rather than on need?

Mr. HANCOCK. That is what this bill does.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman's amendment cure this situation?

Mr. HANCOCK. I have offered an amendment to strike out the first item of the bill and I will regard the vote as a test. There are 12 other items in the bill awarding pensions up to $100. One of the beneficiaries is the widow of a colonel and another of a lieutenant colonel. They are awarded $75 by this bill, which would indicate that the Invalid Pension Committee wishes to base such pensions on the rank of the deceased officer. I agree with the gentleman that a junior officer does not have as much opportunity to accumulate an estate for his family as the senior officer, and his widow and children are usually in greater need than those of the high ranking officer.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I voted for this bill in committee and I may say that it will not establish a precedent. May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that more than a hundred similar bills have been enacted which grant a pension to the widows of high ranking officers of the Army and Navy. In fact, a Republican administration granted Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood's widow an annual pension of $5,000. Let us not therefore make the statement and convey the impression that this bill would be a precedent.

Mr. HANCOCK. I do not care anything about that; I am raising the question now. I want the House to decide it. Personally, I believe it is the wrong policy.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MASSINGALE. May I ask the gentleman, who has evidently given some study to this bill, if there is anything in the hearings to indicate a reason why the widow of a major general should have any more money in the way of a pension than the widow of a buck private?

Mr. HANCOCK. There is a strong sentimental appeal here because the deceased officers have all had fine records. It is alleged that their widows are not in comfortable circumstances and are living on small pensions, plus war-risk-insurance benefits and whatever other estate the husbands were able to build.

Mr. MASSINGALE. As I understand, there is no showing of need.

Mr. HANCOCK. Not of real need. As a matter of fact, I believe the widows of officers can never suffer real privation because there is a mutual fund to prevent it. I do not like the duty of opposing this bill. I do so because I think the principle involved is too important to be established by unanimous consent and that the whole House should pass on it.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I very gravely doubt the wisdom of applying the policy which the gentleman proposes to one of the items in a bill of this kind. I shall not take much time in discussing that because if we are invoking a question of policy we should have far more time than 5 minutes in which to discuss it. There may be cases in which the widow of an admiral should not be entitled to any pension at all, and there may be other cases in which she should be granted the pension which is provided in the bill. If any pensions are to be granted, I believe this item comes well within that rule.

Let me call attention to a letter I have received from the son of this widow. May I say that she is not a resident of my district. My only connection with this case is that her son is employed in the Veterans' Administration facility in my district. This is a letter he wrote me under date of July 13, 1939:

> It is desired to express to you my very sincere thanks and appreciation for your efforts in my mother's behalf and also hers. I hope very much that favorable final action on this bill will be taken at this session of Congress as within the last 6 months my mother has entirely lost her sight, and it is necessary for her to have constant supervision.

Information in my possession shows that on May 16, 1940, this lady will be 85 years old. She is the widow of one of the most distinguished admirals in the service, Admiral Osterhaus. I quote from the statement that was made at the time a pension of $50 per month was granted her:

> It is shown by testimony filed with the committee that Admiral Osterhaus left an estate of about $15,000, and that her annual income, including her pension of $30 a month recently granted her, is about $1,200.

This was in 1928.

Other information has come to me that she has an income of $100 a month, made up of an annuity plus the $50 per month pension, The item in this bill will mean an increase of $50 a month for this old lady, who is now nearly 85 years old, who is blind, and needs constant supervision.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I cannot yield because, as the gentleman realizes, under the rules of the House I have only 5 minutes. This is the reason the broad policy question ought not to be discussed on these separate bills.

Admiral Osterhaus retired in 1913, yet when the World War came along, after filling some of the most important positions in the Navy, he returned to duty, April 7, 1917, in the office of the supervisor of naval auxiliaries, Norfolk, Va., and on October 16 he undertook the duties of supervisor, naval auxiliaries, Navy Department. On October 19, 1920, he was relieved of duty as director of naval districts, naval operations, Navy Department. He received the Spanish Campaign Medal, the Philippine Campaign Medal, U. S. S. Kentucky, the Victory Medal, World War Service, and commendation for service in the World War, although he was entitled to retirement and had retired before the World War.

Under all these circumstances, I submit that in a case such as this and in other cases where widows are in a position of need, the need itself ought to be considered apart from any question of policy. I hope the Members will not be governed here by the question of policy, which has been raised, and I hope that if the question of policy is to come up, a special rule may be provided for the consideration of these bills so that there may be ample time to discuss that question. On that we should not be limited to a 5-minute presentation by only one speaker.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the point of order that a quorum is not present is going to be made after the question is taken on this amendment anyway, so I make the point of order right now that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-five Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 51]

Alexander	Douglas	Kellar	Sandager
Allen, Ill.	Duncan	Kennedy, Martin	Schiffler
Allen, Pa.	Edelstein	Keogh	Scrugham

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three hundred and ten Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK] to strike out title I of the pending bill.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, since this question establishes the policy of the House, I think we ought to have a roll call, and I therefore demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 224, nays 68, not votng 138, as follows:

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE] is recognized for 20 minutes.

THE STRIKE AT THE MID-CONTINENT PETROLEUM CO.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, some time during the session in 1934 there was passed by this House legislation titled the National Industrial Recovery Act, the N. R. A. Under section 7 of that particular act, for the first time within my knowledge, any party ever undertook to protect the working man in his right to organize. He was given that right because of the fact that there had been so much interference by the companies at that particular time in refusing to allow men working in the mills and plants and in the oil industries to organize. Immediately there came into being a great many new unions, among them local No. 210, International Oil and Refinery Workers of my district, an organization of whom we are all mighty proud of, men who are taking their part in the civic affairs of the city in which they are living, highly respected. The Members of this House at that particular time thought that surely that would help to eliminate strikes, and give everyone an equal opportunity. Apparently it did not. Then to relieve this situation because of the turmoil that had been created—because of the existence of the act, both labor and employers complaining that it did not give them equal rights—this administration saw fit to introduce a new piece of legislation that would meet with everybody's approval and there was brought into being the National Labor Relations Board, to act as a sort of umpire in the event of any dispute between those working in particular industries and the managers of the industries themselves. A great deal of controversy has arisen since that time relative to the action of the Board. I am not here this afternoon to defend or condemn the actions of the Board. Certainly in my opinion the Board has served a purpose. They are not infallible. They are liable to mistakes the same as any of us, but as a whole I think they are to be complimented. An attempt is being made at this particular time to do away with the Board entirely. I do not believe that this Congress will ever consent to that nor will the workingman give up without a fight the ground that he has gained. Suggestion has been made that more members be added to the Board. I am very much in sympathy with the idea of adding two more men to that Board. I want to see men appointed there who will be a little broader in their views. Both sides have the right to be heard, but I do not want to see the National Labor Relations Board destroyed, and I am afraid that attempt is going to be made. Those who are attempting it are not friendly to labor unions because the unions feel that is the only safeguard that they have. Now, in spite of all this protection that we are trying to give the workers, it seems that some industries will still try to take advantage of them.

There is a situation that I desire to present relative to an oil strike in the city of Tulsa, Okla. The reason I am interested is because of the fact that during the days I have just mentioned there was born in my district Local 210 of the International Oil and Refinery Workers of the United States and Canada. They are very much interested, and, in view of the fact that they are an affiliate of the organization that now exists in Tulsa, Okla., I shall address myself to some of the testimony that was presented to us.

BRIEF ON THE MID-CONTINENT STRIKE

The history of the strike of the Oil Workers' International Union against the Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation is one of the outstanding chapters of labor suppression and of collusion of corporate and political officials in denying the rights of workingmen to bargain collectively in the annals of modern times.

Before going into the history of the strike itself, however, it is well to examine the industrial-relations record of this company in order to understand some of the reasons for the vicious attitude taken by this company.

Prior to 1921 two craft organizations, namely, the Machinists International Union and the International Brotherhood of Boiler Makers and Helpers of North America, having organized, a majority of the Mid-Continent Petroleum Co.'s employees in those crafts attempted to negotiate a wage agreement, and, failing to receive any consideration at all from the company, called their men out on strike in 1921 and 1922, respectively. These strikes remain unsettled to this day. This and the subsequent attitude of the company may be partly attributed to the American plan, one of the first antiunion programs of this country, which was very strong in Tulsa, Okla., at that time, and of which J. C. Denton, vice president and general manager of the company at the present time, was one of the outstanding leaders in the Tulsa, Okla., area.

Another phase of the company's industrial relations was the participation of various company officials in various business enterprises, such as real estate and insurance, making it necessary for employees to purchase these items at high prices in order to hold their jobs.

One of the participators in these projects was the personnel representative of the company. The employees' political viewpoints and activities were also dominated and controlled at election time. These conditions plus a definite substandard of wages and working conditions among the employees of the company resulted in the employees starting a movement to form a union as early as 1933; however, their efforts were not really successful until 1935, when some degree of success began to be achieved, and by the fall of 1936 the Oil Workers' International Union, representing a majority of the company's employees, started negotiating with the company for a contract covering wages, hours, and working conditions.

The outstanding phases of these negotiations were that—

First. Finally in the spring of 1937 the negotiations were consummated after intense pressure by the union.

Second. The contract was not entirely satisfactory in several points, namely, the seniority principle as embodied was very loose, and was later to prove unenforceable because of the fact the contract provided no arbitration clause for the impartial adjustment of grievances arising under the contract. Neither was the union recognized as the exclusive bargaining agency under the contract, the management admitting the union had a majority of the employees in the union.

The union, however, was willing to accept the contract on the theory that they would be able to improve it at a later date as their relationship improved with the company, and also on the belief that some of the shortcomings of the agreement were compensated for by statements of the company of representatives into a verbatim transcript as to the application of various portions of the agreement. The company representative, Mr. J. C. Denton, general manager, promised the union committee a copy of this transcript to be used as a reference guide. This promise was never kept.

EFFORTS TO AMEND 1937 CONTRACT

In the summer of 1938 the union proposed to amend the contract with the company. After many delays conferences were finally arranged and started during the latter part of October 1938.

The following amendments were proposed by the union:

First. The establishment of impartial arbitration machinery for the settlement of unsettled grievances.

Second. A more fair and equitable seniority clause.

Third. Vacations comparable to that of other companies in the competitive area.

Fourth. The voluntary right of employees to assign a portion of their wages as dues, which the company would deduct from the men who might authorize deduction and send to the union.

Fifth. A fifth proposal was for a wage adjustment for some 20 men up to the prevailing level.

The experience of the union with the contract of 1937 was such as to make them feel these changes were imperative.

Union membership had become a cause for discrimination in promotions and demotions, and the union lacking an impartial means of arbitrating disputes such as discriminations and promotions and demotions in violation of seniority was rapidly finding the company was making it impossible for a man to be a member of the union. These conditions along with the other improvements sought, and which from any viewpoint, seemed to be fair and equitable to the union when the conference opened in October 1938.

The representatives of the company were Mr. George Bush, personnel representative, and Mr. J. C. Denton, general manager and vice president. The union had a representative committee from four locals having members employed by the Mid-Continent Petroleum Co. The union also was represented by H. C. Fremming, president, B. J. Schafer, vice president, and R. H. Stickel, representative of the Oil Workers' International Union.

The committee representing the union proceeded to present their demands. Mr. Denton, for the company, informed the committee that he would have to take the proposals of the union up with the president of the company, Mr. Jacob France, who, he said, was presently in Tulsa. The union representatives pointed out that they had asked, at the same time the conference was asked for, for someone to represent the company who had authority to negotiate for the company to a successful conclusion. Mr. Denton stated Mr. France could not meet with the committee, but he, Mr. Denton, would have to obtain Mr. France's approval on any or all points.

Mr. Denton stated he would listen to the union's arguments on each point and then transmit them to Mr. France, and bring back Mr. France's reply.

Two days' negotiations then ensued, at the end of which time Mr. Denton reported the company felt they could not grant any of the union's requests. Negotiations were then broken off.

The local unions requested permission of the international union to take a strike vote. The international executive council granted their request. The vote was taken on November 1, 1938, and carried by the required three-fourths constitutional majority, voting by secret ballot, and the unions were authorized to proceed to strike the Mid-Continent Petroleum Co.

A strike date was set for November 14, 1938. In the meantime, B. J. Schafer, vice president of the Oil Workers' International Union, petitioned the United States Department of Conciliation to send a representative into Tulsa to attempt to use their offices to work out a settlement.

Mr. W. H. Houston was sent in.

Mr. Houston obtained a conference with the Mid-Continent Petroleum Co. representative, Mr. J. C. Denton, on November 14, and asked that the strike be called off. Pending conferences this was done by the union.

Conferences were then arranged between the union and the company by Mr. Houston, of the Conciliation Department. Present at these conferences were representatives of the Governor's office of the State of Oklahoma. The State Department of Labor, and the National Labor Relations Board, sixteenth region, was represented by Mr. Dwight Blackmore. After 2 days of conferences, no progress could be noted, the company's attitude remaining unchanged, and as further evidences of their hostile attitude the employment of about 100 armed guards was noted around November 1, 1938.

Additional conferences were arranged by the Conciliation Department between the union and the company, up to December 22, and they were likewise unproductive.

On December 22, the long-pending strike against the Mid-Continent Petroleum Co. was called.

In summarizing the principal points that were instrumental in bringing about the Mid-Continent strike, we find them about as follows:

First. Failure of company to keep the agreement either in letter or in spirit.

Second. Unsatisfactory settlement of grievances under the agreement.

Third. Departure from seniority in many cases contrary to understanding had in contract.

Fourth. Apparent discrimination against union members.

Fifth. Putting on of armed guards when any labor dispute arose.

Sixth. Attempted intimidation of committee members.

Seventh. Refusal to arbitrate any labor dispute on the grounds that it was no one's business what the company did.

Eighth. Men penalized for filing and prosecuting grievances.

Ninth. Antiunion activities of certain foremen and superintendents condoned, if not openly sponsored and encouraged.

Tenth. Clubroom in which many employees have paid membership dues and spent idle time before and after work, and which has been openly sponsored by the company, has been closed and padlocked by the company without consulting the membership of the club.

Eleventh. Men have been unjustly discharged by company on fictitious grounds.

Twelfth. Company has not granted its employees privileges that are enjoyed by employees of other companies.

Thirteenth. Pay not comparable to that being paid by the Texas Co. in West Tulsa and Sinclair in Sand Springs which are the only ones whose employees have the same living expenses and conditions.

Fourteenth. Refusal of the services of the labor conciliator of the United States Department of Labor and the labor representatives of the State government by the company.

THE ACTUAL STRIKE SHUT-DOWN

On December 22 the strike was called against the Mid-Continent Petroleum Co.

One of the first problems confronting the striking employees was the proper shutting down of a plant and property containing such highly technical and hazardous equipment.

To walk off and leave such equipment operating would be a very hazardous thing to do, so the employees chose to remain on the property long enough to shut their equipment down. This was done under threats from armed guards who had instructions to shoot to kill. The men employed by the company finally completed shutting the hazardous equipment down and leaving the company's premises.

Immediately after the strike started, a picket line was formed and peaceful picketing was started at the company's Tulsa refinery main gate.

Even though the plant was outside the city limits, the Tulsa police department sent their riot squad at the request of the Mid-Continent Petroleum Co. to guard the company's plant and main gate. Affidavits and testimony show this squad of police officers were sent with instructions to break up the picket line on orders from the man in charge of the police to the strikers to break up and disperse. The picket line kept on going. At this time, testimony will show company officials passed tear gas through the fence to the police squad and the police started throwing gas at the strikers to disperse them, although the strikers had done nothing but form picket lines.

The following is a brief résumé of the police department's activities as a strike-breaking agency for the Mid-Continent Petroleum Co.:

June 2, 1938, police demonstration at refinery gate by about 30 officers, under the leadership of Berg Hughes. This demonstration took place immediately after the adjournment of the local union meeting.

The police were armed with sawed-off shotguns, submachine guns, police clubs, and pistols. A part of them were stationed inside the refinery gates, which is outside the city limits, and the others were marching up and down on the outside of plant and also outside city limits.

Tear-gas cans which were used on night of December 22 at refinery gate are reported by Elmer Davis, N. L. R. B. attorney, to have been purchased in June 1938.

On December 26, 1938, there was a large amount of tear gas delivered through the Tulsa city police department, to the Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation refinery in Diamond 760 Motor Oil cases. The tear-gas salesman reported the amount as $12,000 worth (see affidavits of Harry Dunn). The N. L. R. B. has copies of affidavits.

The tear gassing of people at refinery gates December 22 was done by the chief detective of city police department and Bill Kelly, policeman. The tear gas was handed over the fence from inside the refinery by D. G. Morgan, superintendent, and Dan Lairmore, refinery guard. The tear gas, gas guns, rifles, shotguns, police clubs, and other strike-breaking weapons were delivered to the company agents, Harry Morton, superintendent of stills, and Fred Heffner, investigator for the Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation.

Tulsa city police patrol cars were used to transport workers to and from their homes to the plant.

During this period, January, February, and March, many arrests were made and charges filed against strikers. High bonds were required. Records of the supposed offenses are on file in the union office.

NATIONAL GUARD

On December 25, 1938, 3 days after the Mid-Continent Petroleum Co. strike was called by the Oil Workers International Union, 125 National Guardsmen were ordered into the Tulsa, Okla., area by the Governor of Oklahoma, supposedly for the purpose of protecting life and property and at the request of the county prosecutor and sheriff. In reality, the reason they were requested was because of the episode that occurred at the time of the shut-down, when the police department of Tulsa threw tear gas into peaceful picket lines in front of the Tulsa plant of the company.

In fact, it would appear that the motive of the police department was to make it appear that the strikers were causing the trouble in Tulsa in order that the National Guard might be brought in to intimidate the strikers in the hopes of breaking it at its very inception. Failing this, the National Guard could serve as a valuable aid to the prosecutors and police department's offices in carrying on their strike-breaking tactics.

A brief summary of one National Guardsman, Frank Munroe's, testimony before the National Labor Relations Board hearing in connection with the strike is as follows:

The charge of wire tapping and dictaphoning against the Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation was strongly enforced from the witness stand by National Guardsman Frank Munroe.

Guardsman Munroe told of the line tap receiver being in the basement of the administration building at the refinery, at which place the corporation maintained a 24-hour daily set-up. He also told of his instructions to hold telephone employees in guard headquarters until he had phoned the switchboard operators and they had time to disconnect taps on union lines and called back by phone or reported in person that everything was O. K.

Mr. Munroe further testified that he was required to make three copies of his reports of supposed union happenings, such as fights, trucks of food coming in, strikers losing cars, furniture or homes, amount of money, and such matter. One copy of such report was furnished Ed B. Moffett of the Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation.

Guard Munroe was called into service on orders of Major Taylor to assist Police Commissioner Floyd Rheam and refinery superintendent Glen Morgan to install a dictaphone in the Tulsa Hotel room of John L. Coulter, president of the Oil Workers International Union. In placing the microphone, Munroe was required to completely undress and to crawl up through a ventilator in one room to the opening in the adjoining room which was occupied by President Coulter.

The testimony showed that one dictaphone did not work and that Commissioner Rheam called refinery superintendent Morgan for another, which was a little later brought to the room by Morgan and Rheam.

It has often been charged that the National Guard was used as a strike-breaking agency, but the testimony of Guardsman Munroe definitely clinches the charge in this case and also proves beyond any reasonable doubt that the Governor of the State of Oklahoma had full knowledge of such action while it was being perpetrated.

The testimony by the National Labor Relations Board witnesses to date has woven a web of proof of collusion between police officials, county officials, National Guard, Governor Phillips, and the Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation that surpasses even the wildest imagination of union men.

The National Guard, although finally reduced in March to 60 men on duty, was not removed from Tulsa until some time in May.

A great deal of money was paid out during this time by the Federal Government and the people of Oklahoma for strike-breaking activities on the part of the National Guard.

No known strikers were called before the grand jury. The union was not given a chance to appear and offer any kind of testimony.

Out of this grand-jury investigation came 104 indictments for unlawful assembly. Nineteen were indicted for conspiracy. These charges were later changed to riot charges when Prosecutor Gilmer found riot charges carried a heavier penalty.

The 104 men were later acquitted of the charges of unlawful assembly by jury trial, and 1 of the 19 charged with riot, Jack Hays, was tried separately and there was a hung jury. The cases of the other 18 men are still pending.

In reality, the incident which occurred on December 22, 1938, when the police broke up the picket line with the company-supplied tear gas, was the basis for the charges against all of these strikers.

That the purpose was to demoralize and deplete the union's finances is indicated by the methods pursued by the grand jury and the acquittals of 104 in jury trial.

At the same time, the prosecutor's office was prosecuting union men. The company had known parolees with criminal records on their pay rolls as guards, who violated every basis of parole and yet nothing was done.

The dynamiting of pipe lines was a frequent occurrence. The union offered to help uncover the perpetrators of these incidents, and when the facts were known, company agents were found to be responsible, and yet the prosecutor's office did nothing.

The following brief facts have been developed on the Tulsa County prosecutor, Mr. Dixie Gilmer:

On or about January 5, 1939, it was agreed by and between the Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation and Dixie Gilmer, county attorney, that all cases in which strikers were involved would be filed in the county.

There had been a fight between a group of strikers who were not armed and a group of refinery workers who were armed with guns and knives, and in which fight a striker was seriously stabbed. One of the strikers, who was in no way involved in the fight, called the police and all those in the fight were arrested. The nonstrikers were in such an intoxicated condition that the police had to drive their car to the station. They were all charged with disorderly conduct. When the case came up the county attorney appeared in police court and stated he was filing riot charges against the strikers. He filed no charges against the nonstrikers, even though they were armed and had not only precipitated the fight, but had threatened to kill and had used a knife to stab W. H. O'Hara seriously. Upon the insistence of the union men he did file a charge of carrying a gun against three and of assault against the man who did the stabbing. The bonds of the nonstriking men were set at $100 and the union men at $2,000.

While Mr. Gilmer has been very free in issuing warrants against strikers he has at the same time either refused or been very reluctant in allowing any charges to be filed against nonstrikers.

Mr. Gilmer has been very vicious in his prosecution of striker cases, while he has failed to set for trial or prosecute any nonstriker.

He severely and publicly criticized a jury for voting acquittal of a number of strikers charged with unlawful assembly and in the Hays trial for conducting a riot he arrested one juryman who voted for acquittal and placed him in jail, charged with perjury.

The supposed reason for this persecution of jurymen is so to intimidate them that they would be afraid to vote acquittal in any striker case.

The county attorney keeps in close touch with the Governor, who also is very vicious to organized labor.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

The National Labor Relations Board received charges from the Oil Workers International Union last spring advising that the men who were discharged by the Mid-Continent Petroleum were unjustly discharged. This refers to the 247 discharged by the company for alleged infractions of rules.

After investigations, a complaint was issued and hearings started in May 1939. These hearings have been going on almost constantly since. It is from these hearings that some of the statements used herein were obtained.

A study of the transcript of these hearings should bring to light a great deal of material that has a bearing on the subject matter of this brief.

GENERAL SUMMARY

It may be seen from each of the subject matters dealt with since the inception of the strike how the various law-enforcement agencies named have worked together for the ultimate defeat of the strikers, to the end the Mid-Continent Petroleum Co. might benefit.

The strikers have been deprived of relief. Union funds have been expended to protect union people from attacks of a prejudiced prosecutor.

There have been numerous conferences held with the company representative, Mr. J. C. Denton, in an effort to find a basis of settlement since the strike was called. The union has offered to accept the services of the State labor board in setting up a board to arbitrate the controversial issues that caused the strike; all of these offers have been refused.

CONCLUSION

In view of the foregoing facts, we feel it is time some responsible agency, preferably the Congress of the United States, should step in and investigate this matter to determine why such a miscarriage of justice prevails, to the end that commerce might again flow freely.

We further feel there is a conspiracy prevailing to defeat the workers' rights under the National Labor Relations Act.

This firm now has a contract with the Federal Government to supply oil to the T. V. A. This matter is now being called to the attention of the proper authorities to try and stop this, in view of the fact that they believe this will come under the Walsh-Healey bill, and the Government should refuse to buy from any firm whose men are striking for a living wage so that they may have the right to continue to exist; and certainly the facts that have been presented here this afternoon should prove conclusively that it is about time that the Federal Government must intervene; and I shall in the very near future introduce a resolution asking for a complete investigation of this strike situation in Tulsa, Okla., where they are trying to starve the men into submission and to force them back into the plants and to work for starvation wages. [Applause.]

COMMITTEE ON LABOR

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Labor may sit during the session of the House tomorrow afternoon to continue its hearings.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on two subjects and to include certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

INDUSTRIAL PATERNALISM

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there is no objection from the standpoint of the Members who have the special orders the Chair will recognize the gentlewoman from Massachusetts to submit the request.

Mr. ANGELL. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MILLER. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein the last two of the series of articles by Mr. Thomas Stokes, of the Washington News, regarding the Bata plant in Belcamp, Md., and also to include an application for enrollment in the Bata Industrial and Business Institute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, permit me to point out that in this application for employment, a long questionnaire, the applicant is asked whether he or she wants to engage in leather shoes, rubber shoes, shoe repairing, hosiery, tannery, machine shop, chemistry, electrical engineering, retailing, internal trade, export business, purchasing in the United States or in foreign lands. All of this indicates, apparently, a plan to manufacture things other than boots and shoes.

In the application the children who apply for 3-year training under the absolute control of Mr. Bata are also asked whether any members of their families have held any political or public office and what they were. It looks, therefore, as though Mr. Bata were trying to control the politics of his workers as well as the conditions of their employment and the type of their education. [Applause.]

The application for enrollment follows:

BATA INDUSTRIAL AND BUSINESS INSTITUTE, BELCAMP, MD.

APPLICATION FOR ENROLLMENT

INDUSTRIAL PATERNALISM GUIDES POLICIES OF BATA

(EDITOR'S NOTE.—This is the fourth of five articles)

(By Thomas L. Stokes)

BALTIMORE, MD., March 14.—The basic concept of the Bata Shoe Co.'s industrial colony now being established at Belcamp, 20 miles from here, derives from the parent enterprise at Zlin, Czechoslovakia.

But it partakes likewise of an industrial paternalism once familiar in many parts of this country and still lingering in some, including the South. As a matter of fact, Jan A. Bata learned much about industrial methods in a study of shoe manufacturing in this country several years ago, and took the information back to Czechoslovakia.

At the time he had a small business. From this he began to expand, building an industrial town of his own, Zlin—the name is said to be derived from Lynn, Mass.—with a great covey of factory buildings surrounded by a wall and, outside this wall, stores, restaurants, two moving-picture theaters, a school, dormitories for young men and women workers, houses for workers with families, a hospital.

PICKED POOR SECTION

For this vast enterprise he selected a rural section of Moravia where the people were poor and backward and not long since emerged from the domination of the great Austrian land-owning families, according to a survey of the Bata system by the International Labor Review, published by the International Labor Office at Geneva.

For his workers, he recruited largely young people from this backward region.

In seeking to transplant his system to the United States and get a foothold for expansion in this country, Mr. Bata chose a rural section in Maryland and is recruiting his workers here from youngsters in farm families and in a region where he is free, at least so far, from labor unions. A cardinal policy wherever he has operated has been a stanch resistance to unions.

BUILDING MODERN TOWN

Here, too, he is building a settlement modern in every respect. The five-story factory building already completed and turning out shoes is light and airy. It is surrounded by a high fence and admission is via a little cagelike room where a young man in uniform inquires your business. Brick duplex houses for workers are modern and attractive. A retail shoe store is doing business in the first floor of the administration building.

The formula is similar to that of American industries which in recent years have migrated to the South to escape labor unions and labor laws and to capitalize on surplus farm labor. They get encouragement from local business interests and chambers of commerce, as the Bata company from the Baltimore Association of Commerce and like organizations.

Very low wages, much below the minimum now required by the Wage and Hour Act, were paid by these runaway factories when they first moved South. This was one of the influences helping passage of the Wage and Hour Act.

IN LOW-WAGE AREA

The section where the Bata company has located, the home county of Senator TYDINGS, chief political sponsor of the project, is a rural low-wage area. The average wage for shoe workers in Maryland last year was 38 cents an hour, compared with a national average of 48 cents, while a much higher rate was paid in many sections where strong union organizations exist.

Most of the young men and women at the Bata plant were recently being paid the minimum under the Wage-Hour Act, 30 cents an hour, an investigation by the Labor Department disclosed. Charges have been filed with the Wage-Hour Division that the company has violated the law.

The hostility aroused among American shoe manufacturers and labor unions over the Bata invasion of the United States is similar to its reception in other parts of the world, as revealed in the Commerce Department's reports published in Leather Footwear. In France the company was compelled to curtail its operations; resentment arose in other countries. England and the Netherlands among them, with charges that wages below the prevailing rate were being paid.

STUDY BARES POLICIES

The general attitude motivating the Bata enterprise, as developed abroad, is told in a study made by Kurt Roth, presented as a doctor's thesis to the University of Wurzburg in 1931.

"It is important to note," he says, "that the Bata system was conceived under the stress of generally depressed economic conditions; that it was put into effect under the pressure of a distressed labor condition; and that it is apparently kept in effect by superlative authority, strict discipline, by an automatic meting out of penalties and rewards, and by a hope for profit and a fear of loss."

Mr. Roth also said that "the danger of an intellectual and cultural enlightenment of his employees is fully recognized by Bata," who "keeps at a distance every labor-organizing influence, and takes care in the second place that his personnel is held at a definite intellectual level. Only the less worth-while films are run in the movie houses, and in the whole of Zlin no classic or intellectually valuable book can be found."

Next—How Senator TYDINGS helped to establish Bata Co.

[From the Washington Daily News of March 15, 1940]

CHEAP LABOR SHOE PLANT SPONSORED BY TYDINGS

(Editor's note: This is the last of five dispatches)

(By Thomas L. Stokes)

BALTIMORE, March 15.—Senator MILLARD E. TYDINGS, of Maryland, a conservative Democrat, has been most helpful as the political sponsor of the industrial colony which the Bata Shoe Co. is establishing at Belcamp, Md., not far from the Senator's country estate.

Mr. TYDINGS' local political organization has been cooperative.

The company's weekly newspaper recently front-paged the story of a luncheon given 18 women of the Harford County Women's Democratic Club, including Mrs. Tydings, by Jan A. Bata and his family at their home on the reservation.

On an inspection tour of the project the women were escorted by the Senator's law partner, Robert H. Archer, who is counsel for the company.

BEGAN WORK IN 1934

Senator TYDINGS began in 1934 to pave the way for establishment of the company in Maryland. In a letter dated September 5, that year, to Daniel W. MacCormack, then United States Immigration Commissioner, he introduced John B. Gray, Jr., attorney for the Maryland Roads Commission. "Mr. Gray," he wrote, "is very anxious to discuss with you a question of right-of-way through the property of the Bata Shoe Co., a European concern to be located at Belcamp." The Senator asked every possible assistance to Mr. Gray.

The success of the road project was revealed at Washington in a speech to the House by Representative ROGERS (Republican, Massachusetts).

"Actually the Bata Co. had planned to establish its American factory at Belcamp as early as the summer of 1934," she said, "and late that September made arrangements that the new Philadelphia road pass through its property. They later paid the Maryland State highway commission $11,000 for this arrangement."

AIDED ALIENS' ENTRY

Senator TYDINGS also was active in obtaining an order from the Labor Department authorizing admission of 100 Czechoslovakian instructors for the plant. Subsequently the order was revised to permit only 10 such instructors and 15 administrative employees to work at the plant—after 76 Bata employees had come into the country as instructors.

A Labor Department investigation, made after protest by labor unions, showed that no large number of instructors was necessary, since the Bata method differed only slightly from American methods.

The company now has filed suit against the Labor Department to prevent deportation of 45 Czechoslovakians who were admitted, but whom the revised order denied the right to work at the plant. These Czechs, while remaining at Belcamp, are not working, according to company representatives.

GOT EXTENSIONS

Senator Tydings also has interceded successfully in the last 2 or 3 years for admissions and extensions, in the case of individual Bata employees.

Bata employees who were admitted on a temporary basis at the Senator's request became regular employees in Bata retail stores in the Midwest.

Labor Department files contain reports from an inspector in the Midwest charging irregularities to the company in several cases, including the admission of workers as executives.

Immigration Commissioner James L. Houghteling has confessed his dissatisfaction with the company. On last July 10, he wrote Mr. Archer, company counsel that "our past experience with the Bata Shoe Co. is that that organization does not cooperate very well with this service in connection with favors which it has in the past asked of us." On July 21 he wrote that "there has been so much bad faith on the part of this company in bringing employees for specific purposes and then trying to keep them here on various excuses." A vice president, for instance, was admitted as an instructor.

FIVE HUNDRED ADMITTED

Mrs. ROGERS told the House that, with revision of the original order to include families, servants, chauffeurs, and the like, altogether some 200 were admitted in connection with the Belcamp factory alone, instead of 76, and that the total of Bata employees admitted would run up to 500 counting those admitted as visitors to work in retail stores.

Mrs. ROGERS also pointed out an "amazing fact"—the youth of the so-called instructors, of whom one was a 16-year-old girl, while a fourth of the total were 20 or younger, and half under 25. She added that the company, in its petition, had said 5 years was necessary to develop the skill necessary to be a Bata instructor.

Carol King, who filed a brief on behalf of the United Shoe Workers in connection with admission of the Czechoslovakian "instructors," charged that those admitted were in reality contract laborers, in violation of immigration laws.

GET LOW WAGES

"Mr. Frank J. Pelz, the personnel manager," she said, "had to admit that 'the imported instructors are now receiving $18 a week, if single, and $25, if married, but that those having children here are paid a few dollars more per week.' These wages are far below the American standard.

"Thus Bata brings in cheap, nonunion skilled labor, hires untrained youths for most of the work, and by means of low wages, speed-up, and keeping out union organizers from the plant and its dormitories—in which most of the workers reside—keeps costs down at the expense of the American worker."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement placed in the RECORD many years ago by the Honorable Champ Clark entitled "The Making of a Representative."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the House heretofore entered the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] is recognized for 20 minutes.

POLITICS IN RELIEF

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, although the hour is very late I think the subject I wish to bring to your attention is sufficiently important to take at least a few minutes of your time.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Senate enacted a new Hatch bill, an extension of legislation the Congress passed last year. After all is said and done, the Congress can do no more than enact legislation laying down desired principles. Other departments of the Government must enforce the laws Congress enacts. I wish to call attention to a situation that exists at the present time in the city of New Britain, in the State of Connecticut.

New Britain is the second largest city in my congressional district and I am sure the conditions I shall describe are such that no Member of the House would want to see them continue. I felt when we passed the original Hatch bill that we had passed legislation strong enough to prevent political activity on the part of those working for the Federal Government and handling the administration of relief. I have in my possession what seems like sufficient proof to make the charge that supervisors and employees of W. P. A. in the State of Connecticut, in the city of New Britain, are going on to W. P. A. projects, taking with them what we know as "to-be-made" cards, which is simply a written application addressed to the registrar of voters indicating the desire of the applicant to be made a voter under the Connecticut law. These cards are filed, and the following week the citizen presents himself to be made a voter. In addition to that they are circulating on W. P. A. jobs cards and enrolling voters in the Democratic Party in the city of New Britain.

I made inquiry as to the kind of political activity that could be conducted and the right to conduct political activity under such conditions and was rather astonished to learn from the Assistant Administrator of W. P. A. that political activity under the Hatch bill was prevented only on the part of those having supervisory or administrative positions.

In the city of New Britain a man by the name of Borselle employed on W. P. A., held membership on the city council. I direct your attention to the fact that the city council appropriates money to make possible the local projects. This man is still working on W. P. A. I cannot find out whether he is classified as a supervisor or administrative official, but I am told he is drawing his money from the administrative pay roll. An election will be held in New Britain in the next few months and he desires to continue as a member of the city council. A letter was written to the administrator and a reply received, signed by one Howard C. Hunter, deputy commissioner, in which he states that if as indicated in Mr. Borselle's letter he is not employed in any administrative or supervisory capacity with this administration, he would be eligible to run for membership in the common council in his community without prejudice to his W. P. A. employment.

I am not a lawyer, but it seems to me very clear that Congress must have intended at least two prohibitions by section 9 of the Hatch Act passed last year.

Section 9 (a) reads as follows:

It shall be unlawful for any person employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof.

The same section goes on to add what seems to me to be a definite prohibition.

No officer or employee in the executive branch of the Federal Government—

And I do not think anybody will charge that the W. P. A. is not an agency of an executive branch of the Government—or any agency or department thereof, shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

It is impossible for a man to be a candidate for the city council of a city or to go into a contest in his own primary and set up the claim that he is not engaged in a political campaign.

I do not know how we are expected to know what these prohibitions mean. I made inquiry of the Department of Justice in connection with an episode in Connecticut that I thought was a violation of the Hatch Act. In this particular case the W. P. A. supervisor for the State of Connecticut went on the air recently with a definitely political broadcast.

He answered a previous address made by the Governor of the State of Connecticut. Anybody who read or heard it will agree that it was a political address. I have no quarrel with the W. P. A. administrator of Connecticut. I believe he is trying to do an honest job. But I would like to determine what is to be considered political activity under the Hatch Act and if it is going to be necessary for the House to put more teeth in the act when that bill comes over to us, or amend the act which was passed last year.

In an effort to find out what some of these prohibitions were, I wrote a letter directly to the Attorney General and I received this interesting reply, under date of March 13:

MY DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: Reference is made to your letter of March 5, 1940, in which you request a ruling by the Department whether a broadcast made by State W. P. A. Administrator Vincent J Sullivan, was made in violation of the Hatch Act.

For a brief period following the enactment of the law, when its provisions and application were little understood, it was the practice of the Department to answer general queries with respect to its meaning and interpretation in particular situations. This practice has been discontinued, however, and no further rulings are being issued except on request of the President and heads of executive departments in accordance with the rule heretofore established and followed for many years.

Respectfully,

For the Attorney General:

O. JOHN ROGGE,
Assistant Attorney General.

If that is going to be the policy of the Department of Justice, there is no alternative for a citizen or even a Member of Congress who feels he wants to stop some political activity on the part of a Federal employee, but to go to the United States district attorney and swear out a complaint. There are many of us who want to see this situation cleared up without the taking of such a drastic step, but as far as the situation that exists in New Britain at the present time and in my congressional district is concerned, if it is necessary to take that action, I, for one, am perfectly willing to take it. I have been assured that investigators will be sent to New Britain today or tomorrow and that the situation will be thoroughly investigated.

Mr. Speaker, I have taken the time to insert this matter in the RECORD so that those of us who will have to consider additions to the Hatch Act may have an example of the way these prohibitions are being interpreted at the present time. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a special order heretofore entered, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL] is recognized for 20 minutes.

UNEMPLOYMENT, OLD-AGE SECURITY, AND NATIONAL RECOVERY

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short quotation from a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, unemployment is America's problem No. 1. Unemployment as a national problem is intertwined with the youth problem, old-age security, and industrial and farm prosperity. The Congress, after 7 years of wrestling with this paramount issue has failed to find a solution. Notwithstanding the many laws enacted and the huge Federal expenditures made there is still a vast army of ten to twelve million of our American citizens unemployed. In the last 8 years alone, the United States has expended over sixty-five and one-half billion dollars and has increased the Federal indebtedness over twenty-two and one-half billion dollars seeking a solution. In 1909 the gross debt was $12.91 per capita, whereas in 1939 it was $308 per capita, which means an American family of five has a mortgage of $1,540 to pay or to hand down to future generations to pay. Thomas Jefferson said, "The principle of spending money to be paid by posterity under the name of funding is but swindling futurity on a large scale." Regardless of all our efforts, savings and private capital fill our banks and remain idle and private investment is at a standstill.

These stark facts most forcibly remind us that this problem facing America today demands the unselfish nonpartisan devotion of every American. The Supreme Court speaking through Mr. Justice Cardozo recently said (Helvering v. Davis, 301 U. S. 641):

Spreading from State to State, unemployment is an ill, not particular but general, which may be checked, if Congress so determines, by the resources of the Nation. * * * But the ill is all one, or at least not greatly different, whether men are thrown out of work because there is no longer work to do or because the disabilities of age make them incapable of doing it. Rescue becomes necessary irrespective of the cause. The hope behind this statute is to save men and women from the rigors of the poorhouse as well as from the haunting fear that such a lot awaits them when journey's end is near.

We not only have 10,000,000 or more unemployed, but each year we add to the list 500,000 young men and women pouring out of our schools and universities seeking in vain a niche in the business life of America. Some 10,000,000 of our population are 60 years of age or older, many of whom have been cast off by industry and find themselves stranded without income and without hope. We should not be unmindful of the fact that these senior citizens were the workers of yesterday. They helped build our cities and clear our lands. They were the trail blazers, the pioneers. They built for us. Now that they are old, we cannot pass them by. They do not seek our charity. They only ask simple justice—a modest share in the fruits of American industry, to the production of which their labors in the past have contributed. Discussing the plight of these discarded workers, the Supreme Court, in the decision to which I have referred, said:

Congress did not improvise a judgment when it found that the award of old-age benefits would be conducive to the general welfare. * * * The evidence is impressive that among industrial workers the younger men and women are preferred over the older. In times of retrenchment the older are commonly the first to go, and, even if retained, their wages are likely to be lowered. The plight of men and women at so low an age as 40 is hard, almost hopeless, when they are driven to seek for reemployment. Statistics are in the brief. A few illustrations will be chosen from many there collected. In 1930, out of 224 American factories investigated, 71, or almost one-third, had fixed maximum hiring-age limits; in 4 plants the limit was under 40; in 41 it was under 46. In the other 153 plants there were no fixed limits, but in practice few were hired if they were over 50 years of age. With the loss of savings inevitable in periods of idleness, the fate of workers over 65, when thrown out of work, is little less than desperate. A recent study of the Social Security Board informs us that "one-fifth of the aged in the United States were receiving old-age assistance, emergency relief, institutional care, employment under the works program, or some other form of aid from public or private funds; two-fifths to one-half were dependent on friends and relatives; one-eighth had some income from earnings; and possibly one-sixth had some savings or property. Approximately 3 out of 4 persons 65 years or over were probably dependent wholly or partially on others for support.

We all agree that a solution of this perplexing problem is possible if we can increase to full strength the consumer purchasing power of the people of America. The answer is not in curtailing production or destruction or sacrifice of surplus commodities, but in making available to the rank and file of our American citizens sufficient income or purchasing power with which to buy the products of industry. We need to put America back to work. More jobs mean more income; more income means more purchasing power; more purchasing power means more markets for agriculture and industry; more markets for agriculture and industry mean prosperity for America, and our problem will be solved. The farmers make up 25 percent of our population, but they receive only 11 percent of our national income. If we can increase the income or purchasing power of the mass of our American citizens, they will provide the markets for our farm products and industrial output.

Mr. Speaker, not only is one-third of our people underfed, underclothed, and ill-housed, but two-thirds of them are unable, with their present income—an average of $69 per month per family—to supply the necessities of life. A study made of the income of the United States during 1935 and 1936 by the Government discloses these startling facts with reference to our national consuming power and the deplorable economic condition of our people; 4,000,000 families, or 14 percent, had an average income of $312 a year; 8,000,000, or 27.5 percent, had an average income of $758; and 7,000,000 families, or 23 percent, has an income of $1,224. Two-thirds of our families had an average income of only $826 a year, or $69 a month for an entire family. These disclosures show not only a lack of purchasing power but underconsumption so critical as to threaten the health and welfare of a large portion of our population. The American family is still the keystone of American democracy. If the American way is to endure, we must preserve at all costs the economic and social security and independence of the American family. If it falls, the whole structure falls. This study further shows that in the lowest income families, 14 percent received only 6 percent of the food, and 42 percent of the families received only 26 percent of the food. The low-income group spent approximately a dollar a week per person for food—about 5 cents a meal—whereas the families receiving $100 a month spent more than twice as much, or $2.18 per person a week for food. As a result of this survey it is found that if these American families getting less than $100 a month for an entire family had their income or purchasing power increased to $100 a month, the expenditures for food would be increased by $2,000,000,000, or an increase of 51 percent. This would not only provide markets for our farmers, but it would also protect the health and preserve the lives of this major portion of our American citizens and give them the opportunity and ambition to carry on with renewed faith in our democracy.

The Congress in an endeavor to give some relief to these citizens who are being deprived of the necessities of life enacted the social-security law. It sought, among other things, to provide unemployment insurance, old-age assistance, and some relief to the blind and handicapped and other underprivileged groups. While the humanitarian purposes of this act are commendable and many of its accomplishments worthy, it has failed to solve the problem of old-age security. First of all, it is too narrow in its application leaving many groups of old people entirely without relief. Its payments are inadequate—an average of $19 a month—and its method of financing is indefensible. It impedes business recovery by imposing a heavy tax upon it which is not returned to the unemployed and aged, but spent for general costs of government. Under the old-age insurance provision of the act on June 30, 1939, $1,180,000,000 remained unexpended for old-age insurance. This huge fund was drained out of industry and was not returned to the annuitants but was spent by the Government for other purposes. Such a program instead of aiding old people or helping recovery retards recovery. It cannot be defended.

A sound deduction from our experience with old-age security is that the only solution of this problem is the enactment of a Nation-wide plan on a pay-as-you-go broad-tax base affording uniform adequate annuities to all citizens 60 years of age or older who are not gainfully employed.

Mr. Speaker, the Townsend plan as embodied in H. R. 8264, pending in the present Congress, proposes such a solution. Funds are provided under it by the imposition of a 2-percent tax upon all gross incomes, except wages and salaries of workers up to $250 a month, which are exempt, with a similar exemption of $3,000 annually from gross business income. The funds raised from this tax are equally divided monthly among all American citizens 60 years of age or over not gainfully employed, which funds would have to be spent under the terms of the law within 30 days from time of receipt. It is estimated that under existing conditions, this plan would provide $50 a month for each annuitant, increasing as national income increases. It is estimated that $3,000,000,000 of taxes now collected for the care of old people would be displaced by the tax under the plan, and that the net burden of the tax would, therefore, approximate $3,000,000,000 under existing conditions. The tax formula set forth in the bill is subject to change or amendment when the bill is up for final passage. The type or kind of tax is a debatable question. It should be a tax laid on a broad base, designed not to impede business but to force idle capital from hiding and into business investment.

While this tax would place an additional burden upon American enterprise, it would likewise provide an added stimulus to it by pumping into the blood stream of business activity each month this large volume of purchasing power coming from monthly annuities which, as I have pointed out, would go immediately into the purchase of food, clothing, and other necessities of life. Industry cannot escape some responsibility for the care of its employees who have been cast off by reason of age. The present social-security tax on pay rolls is a tax on industry and must necessarily be added to the price of goods which the consuming public pays. In effect it amounts to a general tax, as the public has to pay in the end.

Workers 60 years of age or over are unable to find employment in industry. Even younger workers are displaced. The statistics given by the Supreme Court, to which I have referred, show these workers are discarded by industry and are forced into idleness, and that approximately 3 out of 4 persons 65 or over are dependent wholly on the public, charity, or others for support. In the main, the support comes from the public now. The tax under the proposed plan, therefore, would not shift the burden for the support of these old people to the public, but would only make the care of these senior citizens more certain, uniform, and effective. The plan would bring uniformity throughout the United States which does not now exist. We now have as many plans as there are States in the Union, most of them bogged down by red tape and insufficient funds to meet payments for the bare necessities of life. State lines cause many inequalities. As pointed out by the Supreme Court, in the decision to which I have referred:

> The problem is plainly national in area and dimensions. Moreover, laws of the separate States cannot deal with it effectively. Congress, at least, had a basis for that belief. States and local governments are often lacking in the resources that are necessary to finance an adequate program of security for the aged. This is brought out with a wealth of illustration in recent studies of the problem. Apart from the failure of resources, States and local governments are at times reluctant to increase so heavily the burden of taxation to be borne by their residents for fear of placing themselves in a position of economic disadvantage as compared with neighbors or competitors. We have seen this in our study of the problem of unemployment compensation. Steward Machine Co. v. Davis, supra. A system of old-age pensions has special dangers of its own, if put in force in one State and rejected in another. The existence of such a system is a bait to the needy and dependent elsewhere, encouraging them to migrate and seek a haven of repose. Only a power that is national can serve the interests of all.

It is reported that production last year equaled that of 1929 but 1,000,000 less workers were employed in industry. Machines take the places of the laborers released.

As disclosed by the United Mine Workers of America, in the last 5 years 25,000 men and women have been thrown out of the steel industry and the leaders of this industry estimate that within the next 15 months an additional 65,000 steel workers will be dismissed due to the introduction of new labor-saving machinery. It is also shown that 19 men in the automobile industry are making the same number of blocks that were made by 250 men 10 years ago. These reductions in working force are due directly to technological improvements. Its effect upon industry as a whole is at once apparent. The laborers who are forced out by machines are the older men and women and the young are retained. The discharged workers will join the ranks of the 10,000,000 men and women 60 years of age or older who make up that great body of permanently unemployed through no fault of their own.

Mr. Speaker, recently I inspected the Grand Coulee Reclamation and Hydroelectric Power Project in the State of Washington. This is the greatest man-made structure ever conceived and built. When completed it will be three times the size of the Egyptian pyramids which 360,000 slaves took 20 years to build. The immense concrete dam being constructed across the Columbia River, the second largest river in the United States, is nearing completion. It will provide 1,980,000 kilowatt-hours of electrical energy and water for reclaiming 1,200,000 acres of land. The sand and gravel going into the dam is taken from the hills several miles distant by huge electric shovels. The material is removed by mechanical belt conveyors to the sizing and washing plants, and from there to the storage bins. One man in the control tower by means of mechanical devices transfers the sand, four sizes of gravel, cement, and water to the mixing bins which are weighed automatically in correct proportions to form the concrete pursuant to Federal specifications. The concrete mixture is then carried by machines to the dam where huge cranes mechanically dump it into the structure. Through the perfected machines and mechanical devices used in this process, one man is able to do the work which without the machines would require 500 or more laborers. This is a typical example of what is taking place throughout industrial America today.

Mr. Speaker, in the dawn of civilization primitive man first discovered the use of the fulcrum, the wheel, and the pulley as instruments of power to do his bidding. The modern wizards of invention have evolved the steam engine and airplane and discovered electric energy and radio and a thousand other subtle powers and mechanical devices to make the elements of nature and the secrets of science our slaves. The tireless energies of the human mind have wrought unceasingly, by inventions, scientific discoveries, and new processes, to extend the scope of human activity and accomplishment in the field of technology. Through such processes has America developed the American productive system to its present marvelous perfection.

In the United States today through the use of the physical sciences and mechanical arts, the major part of the goods and services consumed are provided by scientific processes and power machinery. Our workers are able to produce a much greater volume and variety of goods than heretofore to provide food, clothing, and shelter, as well as a higher standard of life to our people. Our productive capacity per man has multiplied manyfold. In supplanting handicrafts by scientific process and mechanical devices a maladjustment has taken place in manpower or labor, resulting in unemployment and loss in purchasing power. The loss of purchasing power in the workers displaced has thrown the industrial machine out of balance. To restore this balance, purchasing power must be recovered. Fewer workers being required in productive enterprise to supply our wants, it follows a portion of the body of workers must be retired.

The arguments are well-known that mechanized industry has not caused unemployment, that while production per worker has increased, new sources of employment in new industries is provided by the increased volume of production. It is true that new enterprises are thus created and new jobs provided, but it is also true that in the process the aged workers are displaced by young men and women. The United States census for 1890 shows that at that time 75 percent of all our people over 65 years of age were gainfully employed. At the present time 75 percent of them over 65 are not gainfully employed or self-supported. At the present time 75 percent over 65 are not only dependent upon others for support and are not employed, but practically no persons of that age can secure a new job. The United States census shows that normally less than 40 percent of our population is gainfully employed. Children, housewives, and persons retired by age or otherwise make up the remainder. When workers are retired by mechanized industry, their places are filled by workers in the 60-percent group of unemployed who are under 60 years of age. It is logical therefore that the group to be retired by an annuity plan should be those advanced in years who are less efficient, already largely dependent on the public, and who by reason of their work through the years have earned their retirement as a reward. Their retirement being due entirely to the plan of operation of the modern productive enterprise, considered as one Nation-wide project, it is not economically unsound or unjust to require this enterprise to assume the burden of supplying the retirement annuities. This identical plan is now being used in many large industrial, railway, and commercial enterprises. A national old-age annuity plan is only coordinating and extending such a plan to embrace all old citizens. By so doing, all will contribute to the plan and all will be entitled to share in its benefits on attaining the age requirement if otherwise qualified. Such a project would help to relieve productive enterprise of its excess labor, provide decent and dignified earned retirement annuities for aged workers, and restore purchasing power needed to help save private enterprise and the profit system.

Thus, manpower has given way to machine power through technological improvements in this machine age in which we are living. No longer is our problem that of our pioneer forbears, namely, how to produce enough necessities of life. On the other hand, our problem today is how to distribute the products of our machines and farms to the citizens of America who are in need of them, and how to furnish employment for the workers displaced by the machines and mass production. With the use of machinery a part of our people can produce abundantly for all. Obviously, if our economic and social structure can be revamped so that the millions of workers who are displaced by machines and mass production can share in the output of industry and receive sufficient purchasing power to meet their needs, the problem will be solved. We have shifted the burden of industry from the backs of labor to power-driven machines. We must not permit these instruments science has developed to do our work to become Frankensteins to destroy our social and economic structure.

Mr. Speaker, this is America's problem. It is your problem. It is mine. Seven years of experimentation have come to naught. Seven years of deficit spending without avail. Our unemployed are still here. Five million youths are becoming skeptical and critical of our American way. Ten million unemployed are still living from hand to mouth. America is hungry, and yet our warehouses are bulging with surplus food. The tragedy of it all is America is still the richest nation on earth. She is blessed by Providence with abundance. We have two-thirds of the world's monetary gold and are fast acquiring the balance. We have unmeasured natural resources. We have an abundance of factories, machines, tools, and raw products with 10,000,000 unemployed expert workers clamoring to work. We have 130,000,000 customers in our own broad land needing desperately the products of these idle factories, untilled fields, unworked mines, and decaying forests. We always have consumed approximately 96 percent of our production, only 4 percent going abroad. If America should recover tomorrow its full purchasing power every surplus commodity would disappear at once. We would have an undersupply. With all our blunders and failures now seeming about to engulf us, America has had a record of achievement for almost 150 years without parallel in the history of mankind. America is sound at heart. Our foundations are still secure. We can and must throw off this blight on our democracy. For one, I am not willing to admit defeat. We can and will, by the combined unselfish efforts of our people, put America back to work, provide useful occupations for our young Americans, and respectable employment for all our unemployed in private industry, and dignified and secure compensation for our senior citizens, who, through the years, have labored that we of today might have this America which we all cherish and defend. Let us again prove to the whole world that every American citizen is entitled to, and shall have vouchsafed to him by his country, life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Let us prove that humanity is still on the march here in America, and enact an old-age annuity plan that will put America to work and provide for our old people, and at the same time restore purchasing power. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein two short articles sent to me by constituents.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHANLEY]?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. VINSON of Georgia, for 10 days, on account of important business.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 3046. An act to extend to certain officers and employees in the several States and the District of Columbia the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities", approved August 2, 1939; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 4868. An act to amend the act authorizing the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 8068. An act making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 4868. An act to amend the act authorizing the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 8068. An act making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, March 20, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold hearings at 10 a. m. on the following dates on the matters named:

Thursday, March 21, 1940:

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold public hearings on Thursday, March 21, 1940, at 10 a. m., on the following bills providing for the establishment of marine hospitals: H. R. 2985 (GREEN), at Jacksonville, Fla.; H. R. 3214 (GEYER of California), at Los Angeles, Calif.; H. R. 3578 (CANNON of Florida), at Miami, Fla.; H. R. 3700 (PETERSON of Florida), State of Florida; H. R. 4427 (GREEN), State of Florida; H. R. 5577 (IZAC), at San Diego, Calif.; H. R. 6983 (WELCH), State of California.

Wednesday, March 27, 1940:

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold public hearings on Wednesday, March 27, 1940, at 10 a. m., on the following bills providing for Government aid in the lumber industry: H. R. 7463 (ANGELL) and H. R. 7505 (BOYKIN).

Tuesday, April 2, 1940:

H. R. 7169, authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to establish additional boards of local inspectors in the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation.

Tuesday, April 9, 1940:

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold public hearings on Tuesday, April 9, 1940, at 10 a. m., on the following bill: H. R. 7637, relative to liability of vessels in collision.

Tuesday, April 16, 1940:

H. R. 8475, to define "American fishery."

COMMITTEE ON PATENTS

The Committee on Patents will hold hearings Thursday, March 21, 1940, at 10:30 a. m., on S. 2689, to amend section 33 of the Copyright Act of March 4, 1909, relating to unlawful importation of copyrighted works.

The Committee on Patents will hold hearings Wednesday and Thursday, April 10 and 11, 1940, at 10:30 a. m. each day, on H. R. 8441, to afford greater protection to the purchaser of patent rights; H. SENATE

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 20, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, March 4, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Great Shepherd of the sheep, who came to seek and to save the lost: We beseech Thee that Thy spirit may strive with those who, having strayed from Thy fold, are wandering in the wilderness of worldliness and sin. Let Thy love constrain them and Thy grace abound toward them, that so they may return to Thee in penitence and fresh consecration of their lives.

Grant to us at this moment, O righteous Father, the spirit of worship and true godliness. Bind us together with cords of sympathy and friendliness, and give us the vision of our common duty, making us glad and strong in doing it. By the memories of our Nation's glorious past, make us alert to the call of the present, that, inspired by the spirit of wisdom, courage, and patience, we may respond with signal devotion to its just claims upon us.

We ask it in the name of Him who at this very hour hung upon the cross, stretching forth His loving arms to draw all men unto Himself, Jesus Christ Thy Son our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Tuesday, March 19, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

FREEDOM OF ELECTIONS

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in today's Washington News appears an editorial speaking in high favor of the speech delivered on the floor of the Senate last week by the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. It gives me pleasure at this time to ask that the editorial be printed in full in the body of the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the Washington Daily News]

FREEDOM OF ELECTIONS

One of the finest speeches in the 2 weeks of Senate debate on the Hatch bil was made by Senator George of Georgia. For reasons of space we can quote here only a small portion of it:

"The bill does not invade States' rights, and it is not intended to invade States' rights. It is intended to protect the States, it is intended to protect both the State governments and the General Government, because it is intended to preserve freedom in elections; and without the free election there is no democratic process as we know it, whether in the State or in the Federal Government.

"Within the past seven and a fraction years, under our party, there has been the most rapid concentration of power that has taken place at any given period of time in our whole history. In order to relieve many of the conditions which we found in 1933 to be intolerable, in order to relieve conditions which we as Democrats knew should be relieved, we found it necessary to appropriate the largest sums of money that have ever been appropriated by our Government in peacetimes.

"We found it necessary to create in the country the vastest army of Federal officials that we have ever had in peace or in war; and included in that army are also those State officials and employees who are really and in truth engaged in administering Federal funds * * *.

"We are not going to discontinue that practice altogether. Some of us may desire to see it discontinued, but it will not be discontinued * * *.

"What does it mean? It means that the State must assent to the conditions under which it receives appropriations. What does the bill propose to do? To give to the Federal Government power to impose conditions upon the States? Not at all. It is a simple and feeble attempt to write one prohibition against further Federal imposition of power upon the States. We say that whatever the Federal Government may do about funds that are going to be sent into Virginia or into Georgia, funds shall not be sent down there to be used for political purposes; that we will not permit the political use of those funds in the States to corrupt the election in those States."

C. Z. BUSH AND W. D. KENNEDY

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3481) for the relief of C. Z. Bush and W. D. Kennedy, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BROWN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. BROWN, Mr. SCHWARTZ, and Mr. CAPPER conferees on the part of the Senate.

WARREN ZIMMERMAN

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4126) for the relief of Warren Zimmerman, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ELLENDER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. SCHWARTZ, and Mr. CAPPER conferees on the part of the Senate.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE OF APPROPRIATION, LEGISLATIVE ESTABLISHMENT (S. DOC. NO. 168)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the fiscal year 1941 in the amount of $4,000, together with draft of a proposed provision to amend an existing appropriation for the fiscal year 1940, pertaining to the Legislative Establishment under the Architect of the Capitol, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the California State Board of Agriculture, in session at Sacramento, Calif., favoring a national investigation of the problem of migratory agricultural labor, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also laid before the Senate memorials of several citizens of the State of Washington, remonstrating against the sending of American boys to war for any cause except a direct and unprovoked invasion of the Nation, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Fifteenth Annual Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense, protesting against the enactment of pending American-youth legislation entailing an appropriation of $500,000,000 annually, with related resolutions, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of West Coast Local No. 90, National Organization of Masters, Mates, and Pilots of America, San Francisco, Calif., favoring the enactment of legislation to authorize the Secretary of War, in the interest of the national defense, to make a survey of the proposed T-tunnel as a means of communication between San Pedro, Wilmington, Terminal Island, and Long Beach, Calif., which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of Mrs. Philip Terry, of Hingham, Mass., praying that personal questions be eliminated from the 1940 census questionnaire, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HOLT presented a paper in the nature of a petition from the Flood Control Committee of the Board of Commerce of Parkersburg, W. Va., praying for a flood-control appropriation so that Parkersburg may have the benefit of a wall and levee, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7809) authorizing the reconstruction or replacement of certain bridges necessitated by the Rio Grande canalization project and authorizing appropriation for that purpose, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1330) thereon.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3406) for forest protection against the white-pine blister rust, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1331) thereon.

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 785) to repeal the Silver Purchase Act of 1934, to provide for the sale of silver, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1332) thereon.

Mr. BILBO, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6884) to encourage travel in the United States, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1333) thereon.

Mr. PEPPER, from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, to which was recommitted the bill (S. 1162) to provide for the recognition of the services of the civilian officials and employees, citizens of the United States, engaged in and about the construction of the Panama Canal, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1334) thereon.

INVESTIGATION RELATIVE TO WIRE TAPPING AND LISTENING DEVICES

Mr. BYRNES. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back Senate Resolution 224, without further amendment, and with the recommendation that the amendment of the Committee on Interstate Commerce be disagreed to. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, submitted by Mr. GREEN on February 1, 1940.

The amendment of the Committee on Interstate Commerce was, on page 2, line 16, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$25,000."

The amendment was rejected.

The resolution was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation of alleged instances of (1) interception, by means of wire tapping or otherwise, of wire communications to or from officials and employees of the Federal, State, and local governments, and (2) installation of dictographs or similar devices for the purpose of listening to or recording conversations participated in by such officials and employees. The committee shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable the results of its investigation, together with its recommendation for the enactment of any remedial legislation it may deem necessary.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-sixth and succeeding Congresses, to employ and to call upon the executive departments for clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $15,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. DONAHEY:

S. 3635. A bill to provide for the establishment of a national wildlife refuge at Indian Lake, Ohio, and to provide regulation and protection pursuant to the Migratory Bird Conservation Act (45 Stat. 1222) and the Migratory Bird Treaty Act (40 Stat. 755); to the Special Committee on Conservation of Wildlife Resources.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

S. 3636. A bill to amend the National Defense Act, as amended, so as to provide for retirement of assistant chiefs of branches and of wing commanders of the Air Corps with the rank and pay of the highest grade held by such officers as assistant chiefs and wing commanders, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TYDINGS:

S. 3637. A bill to provide for refund of processing taxes which were paid by processors on behalf of planters of sugarcane and sugar beets; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WALSH:

S. 3638. A bill to permit the Smithsonian Gallery of Art Commission to purchase a model of the winning design for the proposed Smithsonian Gallery of Art, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. NEELY:

S. 3639. A bill for the relief of Clark Wiley; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 3640. A bill to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930, as amended; to the Committee on Civil Service.

By Mr. PEPPER:

S. 3641. A bill to provide for employment, for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States in relieving the hardships and suffering caused by unemployment and for other purposes; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. MEAD:

S. J. Res. 233. Joint resolution authorizing and requesting the President of the United States of America to proclaim the third Sunday in May of each year as New Citizens Day; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WHEELER:

S. J. Res. 234 (by request). Joint resolution providing for more uniform coverage under the Railroad Retirement Acts of 1935 and 1937, the Carriers Taxing Act of 1937, and subchapter B of chapter 9 of the Internal Revenue Code; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 554. An act for the relief of Meta De Rene McLoskey; and

H. R. 2853. An act for the relief of Frank Burgess Bruce; to the Committee on Finance.

H. R. 2014. An act for the relief of Margaret Redmond; and

H. R. 5719. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, consider, and render judgment on the claims of Joliet National Bank, of Joliet, Ill., and Commercial Trust & Savings Bank, of Joliet, Ill., arising out of loans to the Joliet Forge Co., of Joliet, Ill., for the providing of additional plant facilities and material for the construction of steel forgings during the World War; to the Committee on Claims.

INVESTIGATION OF LOSSES INCIDENT TO FLORIDA CAMPAIGN AGAINST MEDITERRANEAN FRUITFLY

Mr. SCHWARTZ submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 40), which was referred to the Committee on Claims:

Whereas pursuant to Senate Joint Resolution 177, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, a subcommittee of the Committee on Claims of the Senate has held a hearing with respect to the losses sustained by certain persons in the State of Florida as a result of the Mediterranean fruitfly eradication and quarantine campaign conducted in the State of Florida by the United States Government; and

Whereas in the opinion of such subcommittee a satisfactory showing has been made to justify and require an accurate and dependable determination of the actual losses sustained as a result of such campaign, the nature and character of such losses, and the persons by whom such losses were sustained: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there is hereby created a special joint congressional committee to be composed of three members of the Committee on Claims of the Senate, to be appointed by the chairman thereof, and three members of the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the chairman of such committee. It shall be the duty of such special committee to make a full and complete investigation with respect to the losses sustained as a result of the Mediterranean fruitfly eradication and quarantine campaign conducted in the State of Florida in 1929 and 1930 by the United States Government, with a view to determining, among other things, the nature, character, and amount of such losses, the circumstances under which such losses occurred, and the persons by whom such losses were sustained. The committee shall report to the Congress at the earliest practicable date the results of its investigation, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses and adjourned periods of the Seventy-sixth and succeeding Congresses, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate, and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, anounced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to each of the following bills of the Senate:

S. 186. An act to amend section 798 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, relating to murder in the first degree; and

S. 1955. An act to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to delegate certain regulatory functions, and to create the position of Second Assistant Secretary of Agriculture.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR MEAD ON PENDING LEGISLATION BEFORE CONGRESS

AN OPPORTUNITY FOR AMERICANS

[Mr. WALSH asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by Dr. Joseph F. Thorning, of Mount St. Marys College, entitled "An Opportunity for Americans," published in the magazine Spain, which appears in the Appendix.]

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8202) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate took a recess yesterday, the first amendment on page 12, line 5, was the pending business before the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, the pending amendment comprehends several items relating to research, and, although I intend to support the amendment, I address the Senate because I am greatly interested in the subject of agricultural research, and I know that nearly all other Senators are likewise interested. Many of them have already spoken to me about two amendments which I thought at one time I would offer to the committee amendment. I feel bound to have my colleagues know why I do not offer those amendments, and, so far as the public is concerned, I would answer by this method many letters and telegrams which have come to me urging these amendments. That is, my desire to avoid some letter writing is one of my reasons for addressing the Senate on this subject.

The two amendments relating to research appear very near together, one on page 12 and one on page 14, and both relate to Public, No. 182, Seventy-fourth Congress, parts 1 and 2 thereof, an act approved June 29, 1935, "to provide for research into basic laws and principles relating to agriculture and to provide for the further development of cooperative agricultural extension work and the more complete endowment and support of land-grant colleges."

Mr. President, that act provided a program of great importance to the public welfare, involving research in which both the Federal and the State Governments were intended to cooperate with funds and with service. The plan provided for a continuing appropriation, with an increment each year for 5 years, which I believe it is a duty of Congress to provide in order that there may not be suffered the dislocation of plans made by the States to conform to projects provided by the Federal Government.

Mr. President, it seems to me that functions in which the two Governments jointly undertake obligations differ entirely, when we come to consider what our duty is with respect to appropriations, from functions which are committed to the Federal Government alone. I can conform to the demands of economy very readily when I do not break an obligation into which I have entered with the State governments respecting such a function as research.

Our State legislatures meet uniformly once in 2 years, except as to one State. They have to make their appropriations and plans, therefore, to cover a biennial period, and I think that the President of the United States and the Bureau of the Budget should take that factor into account when they undertake to make up the Budget relating to such projects.

Mr. President, I have great sympathy with the President of the United States in his effort to make the income of the Government take care, so far as possible, of the routine expenditures of the Government, and therefore I feel a certain responsibility to support the efforts of any Chief Executive in making the funds fit the demands upon them, and vice versa. Yet the Budget is not sacrosanct. Perhaps it would not be sacrosanct even if the Chief Executive should take into consideration such obligations as this, when he makes up the Budget, and not make cuts there but make them where the function is purely a Federal one.

I speak not in criticism of the present President for cutting off this increment, which is absolutely necessary in order to enable the States to carry on the part of the program which they have assumed and started out upon. I raise my voice for a principle, in the hope that future Presidents of the United States, particularly the one to succeed the present President, will give proper regard to these obligations of the Federal Government and the States in making up the Budget, and that when the President makes a cut he will make it upon the Federal function alone, and not dislocate the arrangements made with the several States.

Mr. President, that statement goes also for the committees of Congress. The Budget is not solely in the hands of the President of the United States. The standing committees of Congress and special committees have enough authority over appropriations so that they may, in practical effect, change the amounts required for a certain function or activity. Rule XVI contains a prohibition relating to appropriations which I wish to have in the RECORD in order that those who are interested and who have urged me to offer these amendments may understand why I do not propose them.

The part of rule XVI which causes me to withhold the amendments is the following:

> All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations—

Now comes the prohibition—

> and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill * * * unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate submitted in accordance with law.

It happens that the Bureau of the Budget submitted the estimate without the increment for research for this year. A year ago the standing committees of the Congress, and afterward the Congress, following their advice, granted one-half of the increment and withheld the other half. This year the committees of the Congress have not seen fit to give even one-half the increment. Therefore this appropriation for research is affected injuriously to the extent of $600,000 in the item which appears on page 12, line 3, which is, as recommended by the committee, $2,400,000. In other words, the committee brought to the Senate a bill which carried $2,400,000 for research in the experiment stations in all the several States of the Union and omitted the increment for the year.

Whether one views this matter as being solely a moral one or views it as one carrying some element of a legal obligation makes very little difference. The object of my saying anything about it is that we may interest those who have to do with the making of the Budget and the bringing in of the appropriations another year, to regard this duty of the Federal Government to meet the States half way after having induced the States to make appropriations for this subject. Perhaps there may soon be brought to the attention of the President facts justifying an estimate in the Budget for a deficiency bill to supply the increment.

Mr. President, on the general subject of research I call attention to the fact that the committee have an amendment which appears on page 48 in which there is carried an appropriation of $45,100. That is also for research.

As a practical thing, I call attention to what has occurred during the past year relating to dairy products as an illustration of the need for this research service.

During the 12 months ending December 31, 1938, there were imported into the United States from foreign countries 417,366 pounds of casein—casein being a byproduct of skimmed milk. In the 12 months ending December 31, 1939, there were imported into the United States 15,832,462 pounds of casein.

Mr. President, that is a very significant item. We have been struggling for years in the United States to solve the problem of surplus fluid milk, and here we are, pursuing such policies as a Federal Government and such practices as a people that with this supply of surplus skimmed milk we cannot respond to the demands right in our own country for casein. Why is that? Because we have not so far conducted our own research relating to this subject as to be able to answer the demand. This was brought to my notice very vividly by the chairman of the Industrial Agricultural Products Commission of the State of Vermont, Mr. Joseph Winterbotham, who received a letter from Edward F. Maloney, vice president of Atlantic Research Associates, Inc., dated February 7, 1940, and reading as follows:

> We received in this morning's mail the report on imports put out by the United States Department of Agriculture—Agricultural Marketing Service. This indicated that imports of casein for 1939 were 15,832,462 pounds (as against 417,366 pounds in 1938). The writer cannot help feel but what the people of this country missed the boat on this one when it is realized that the fifteen-million-odd pounds came into this country in the face of a 5½-cent-per-pound tariff. Along the line consumers paid $2,250,000,000 for this imported casein.

Think of that! Think of what was lost to the producers of milk in this country! I continue reading the letter:

> This quantity of imported casein represents 527,000,000 pounds of skim, which is the annual skim-milk production of some 136,000 cows. Too bad the dairy industry, manufacturing casein, is not keyed up to the ability of quick response to sudden increased demand for its product—casein.
> Just felt rather slide rulish this morning and thought you and Dr. Barnard would be interested in these figures.

Dr. Harry E. Barnard is the chairman of the National Farm Chemurgic Council, and to him was appended this note:

> The above indicated the possibility of combining the milk-control ideas of the Government with the processing of a portion of our milk production. This might facilitate a better fluid-price situation for both producer and consumer.

In other words, this small item of agricultural research has ramifications into our economy that are very broad, and when considered in connection with other economic helps which we believe are readily available to us and ought to be encouraged by the Federal Government, I say that when we put the knife into the appropriation it makes us bleed, and does us more harm than good. It is not true economy, but false economy.

Mr. President, there is a principle involved here in addition to the practical question of finding industrial uses for agricultural products, and that is the question that relates to the Budget. I have already spoken of that as being the primary cause for my rising at this point and accounting for my failure to offer these amendments.

For some time there has been a trend on the part of the Bureau of the Budget to break down the annual appropriations which are made with a view to a long-time program. We have had to fight it before. We have been successful heretofore. This is the first time, so far as I know, that the Bureau of the Budget has been successful in the effort to break up these continuing appropriations upon which education of various kinds necessarily must rely. Any educational program, whether it is within the walls of a university or whether it is in the extension courses that take teachers and leaders out into the fields, must be a continuing one, and it must have money. It is not possible to carry forward such projects as education in agriculture and production and research in basic laws of economy and of agriculture without money.

And so, Mr. President, the camel is at last getting his head under the tent. I want my colleagues to understand that something is occurring that they may not realize, and that is the introduction into the Congress of the principle, or lack of principle, of breaking up and destroying a plan or a program by means of the use of an appropriation. Instead of meeting this thing face on and saying, "Now we no longer believe in the program; we want to amend it or repeal it," and coming in with a repealer of the program, and giving everyone an understanding of what is going on, they come in through the back door and kill it by stopping the appropriation.

Of course, this program is dead if the increment of the appropriation is refused.

All that I have said is but a continuation of the attack made some time ago on this same issue. I want to call attention to it. It will be found in the hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, Seventy-fifth Congress, third session, on H. R. 10238, and my views are stated beginning at page 483. There I reviewed the experience which we had had up to that time, preserving the authorization and the obligation of performing our duty as a Congress under laws that reach back to 1856, to 1860, to 1862, and coming up through the years with reference to agricultural education and research.

Mr. President, I have no remedy for this immediate situation, but I sincerely hope that the people of this country who are interested in this basic and fundamental project will make their opinion felt in the White House, where it must be felt if we are to continue such programs.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I rise with a good deal of temerity even to attempt to say anything following the very constructive and informing and able address of my dear friend and very distinguished colleague the Senator from Vermont. While I am certainly not going to delay the Senate more than a moment, I cannot resist the compelling impulse at least to add a word to what he has just said.

These very important and far-reaching matters referred to by the distinguished Senator from Vermont, who is such a recognized student of this whole broad problem in all its aspects, are activities that I myself have been very much interested in and have very closely studied. Undoubtedly the Senator will agree that, if not the first, I was one of the very first Senators who spoke to him about this particular matter to which he has addressed himself so ably, for I am one of those Senators who admit gladly that I turn unhesitatingly and very properly to him, who knows this whole subject so well, having in mind myself, if he did not have in mind introducing the amendments he spoke of, that I myself would do so. Undoubtedly there are other Senators, too, who may have had the same thing in mind.

The study and experimental work that he referred to I know about personally. I regret very much that it is apparently impossible at this time for us to do anything other than to draw attention, as he has drawn so vividly, so accurately, and so fairly, to this terrific blow to the experimentation and study in the field of development and constructive advancement of agriculture. This is, as I see it, the most economical and effective field in which public funds can be spent, as far as agriculture is concerned.

I suffered a great and keen disappointment and shock, together with those with whom I am in contact back home in my State in this field of work and study, in the land-grant colleges and agricultural extension work. None of us can understand why this was done. I certainly hope we will not again have to face an experience of this kind. It was not fair to cut out these increments in these appropriations. And this seems the more so because of the rule of the Senate which the distinguished Senator from Vermont refers to, which apparently leaves no avenue of redress open.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWARTZ in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 12, line 5.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Salaries and expenses", on page 13, line 19, after the word "Stations", to strike out "$7,104,735" and insert "$7,109,735", so as to read:

Total, Office of Experiment Stations, $7,109,735, of which amount not to exceed $150,105 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia, and not to exceed $750 shall be available for the purchase of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles necessary in the conduct of field work outside the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Extension service—Payments to States, Hawaii, Alaska, and Puerto Rico," on page 15, after line 10, to insert:

Extension work, act of April 24, 1939: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the further development of cooperative agricultural extension work," approved April 24, 1939 (53 Stat. 589), $203,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 13, after "343f–343g)", to strike out "$75,000" and insert "$128,000", so as to read:

Puerto Rico: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act entitled "An act to extend the benefits of section 21 of the Bankhead-Jones Act to Puerto Rico," approved August 28, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 343f–343g), $128,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 15, after the word "work", to strike out "$13,578,918" and insert "$13,834,918", so as to read:

In all, payments to States, Hawaii, Alaska, and Puerto Rico for agricultural extension work, $13,834,918.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Salaries and expenses", on page 17, line 15, after the word "material", to strike out "$225,000" and insert "$250,000", so as to read:

Extension information: For the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere for the development, preparation, distribution, and display by the Extension Service of exhibits, motion pictures, sound recordings, and other educational and informational media and for the dissemination of information, designed to increase the effectiveness of the cooperative extension work of the Department and the land-grant colleges in agriculture and home economics; and to cooperate with other bureaus and offices of the Department of Agriculture and with Federal, State, county, municipal, and other agencies, including State, interstate, international, and other fairs held within the United States, in such development, preparation, distribution, and display of such educational and informational material, $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 16, after the word "expenses", to strike out "$775,000" and insert "$800,000"; and in line 17, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$661,756" and insert "$671,916", so as to read:

In all, salaries and expenses, $800,000, of which amount not to exceed $671,916 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 19, after the word "Service", to strike out "$14,353,918" and insert "$14,634,918", so as to read:

Total, Extension Service, $14,634,918.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 12, to strike out "$26,236,451" and insert "$26,617,321", so as to read:

Grand total, Office of the Secretary of Agriculture, $26,617,321.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Weather Bureau—Salaries and expenses," on page 20, line 6, after the word "elsewhere", to strike out "$6,127,870" and insert "$6,243,870", so as to read:

Observations, warnings, and general weather service: For necessary expenses incident to collecting and disseminating meteorological, aerological, climatological, and marine information, and for investigations in meteorology, climatology, seismology, evaporation, and aerology in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, $6,243,870, of which not to exceed $1,500 may be expended for the contribution of the United States to the cost of the office of the secretariat of the International Meteorological Committee, and not to exceed $10,000 may be expended for the maintenance of a printing office in the city of Washington for the printing of weather maps, bulletins, circulars, forms, and other publications.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 16, after the name "Weather Bureau", to strike out "$6,272,870" and insert "$6,388,870", and in line 17, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$730,902" and insert "$742,427", so as to read:

Total salaries and expenses, Weather Bureau, $6,388,870, of which amount not to exceed $742,427 may be expended for departmental personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Animal Industry—Salaries and expenses", on page 22, line 14, after the word "experiments", to strike out "$814,380" and insert "$824,380", so as to read:

Animal husbandry: For investigations and experiments in animal husbandry; for experiments in animal feeding and breeding, including cooperation with the State agricultural experiment stations and other agencies, including repairs and additions to and erection of buildings absolutely necessary to carry on the experiments, $824,380, including $12,500 for livestock experiments and demonstrations at Big Spring or elsewhere in Texas to be available only when the State of Texas or other cooperating agency in Texas, shall have appropriated an equal amount or, in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, shall have furnished its equivalent in value in cooperation for the same purpose during the fiscal year for which appropriations are herein made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 5, after the word "ticks", to strike out "$300,000" and insert "$340,000", so as to read:

Eradicating cattle ticks: For the eradication of southern cattle ticks, $340,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, at the end of line 10, to strike out "$12,414,440" and insert "$12,464,440", so as to read:

In all, salaries and expenses, Bureau of Animal Industry, $12,464,440.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 20, after the word "Industry", to strike out "$12,414,440" and insert "$12,464,440", so as to read:

Total, Bureau of Animal Industry, $12,464,440, of which amount not to exceed $685,702 may be expended for departmental personal services in the District of Columbia, and not to exceed $100,000 shall be available for the purchase of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles necessary in the conduct of field work outside the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Dairy Industry—Salaries and expenses", on page 29, line 16, after the word "buildings", to strike out "$645,905" and insert "$655,905", so as to read:

Dairy investigations: For conducting investigations, experiments, and demonstrations in dairy industry, cooperative investigations of the dairy industry in the various States, and inspection of renovated-butter factories, including repairs to buildings, not to exceed $5,000 for the construction of buildings, $655,905.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 18, before the word "of", to strike out "$721,405" and insert "$731,405", and in the same line, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$343,580" and insert "$353,580", so as to read:

Total, salaries and expenses, Bureau of Dairy Industry, $731,405, of which amount not to exceed $353,580 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Plant Industry—Salaries and expenses", on page 32, line 4, after the word "use", to strike out "$225,000" and insert "$240,000", so as to read:

Fertilizer investigations: For investigations within the United States of fertilizers, fertilizer ingredients, including phosphoric acid and potash, and other soil amendments and their suitability for agricultural use, $240,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 21, after "581b)", to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$255,000", so as to read:

Forest pathology: For the investigation of diseases of forest and ornamental trees and shrubs, including a study of the nature and habits of the parasitic fungi causing the chestnut-tree bark disease, the white-pine blister rust, and other epidemic tree diseases, for the purpose of discovering new methods of control and applying methods of eradication or control already discovered, and including $110,969 for investigations of diseases of forest trees and forest products, under section 3 of the act approved May 22, 1928 (16 U. S. C. 581b), $255,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 5, after the word "storage", to strike out "$1,250,000" and insert "$1,350,000", so as to read:

Fruit and vegetable crops and diseases: For investigation and control of diseases, for improvement of methods of culture, propagation, breeding, selection, and related activities concerned with the production of fruits, nuts, vegetables, ornamentals, and related plants, for investigation of methods of harvesting, packing, shipping, storing, and utilizing these products, and for studies of the physiological and related changes of such products during processes of marketing and while in commercial storage, $1,350,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 12, after the word "soils", to strike out "$125,000" and insert "$152,674", so as to read:

Irrigation agriculture: For investigations of crop production on irrigable lands, the quality of irrigation water and its use by crops, and methods for improving and maintaining the productivity of irrigated soils, $152,674.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 12, after the word "diseases", to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$246,749", so as to read:

Plant exploration and introduction: For investigations in seed and plant introduction, including the study, collection, purchase, testing, propagation, and distribution of rare and valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants from foreign countries and from our possessions, for experiments with reference to their introduction and cultivation in this country, and for investigation of their diseases, $246,749.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 14, after the word "seed", to strike out "$300,000" and insert "$315,000", so as to read:

Sugar-plant investigations: For sugar-plant investigations, including studies of diseases and the improvement of sugar beets and sugar-beet seed, $315,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 19, before the word "of", to strike out "$5,005,077" and insert "$5,264,500", and in line 20, before the word "may", to strike out "$1,641,147" and insert "$1,664,291", so as to read:

Total, salaries and expenses, Bureau of Plant Industry, $5,264,500, of which amount not to exceed $1,664,291 may be expended for departmental personal services in the District of Columbia and not to exceed $12,520 shall be available for the purchase of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles necessary in the conduct of field work outside the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Forest Service—Salaries and expenses", on page 36, line 15, after the word "the", to strike out "cost of" and insert "expenditure out of this appropriation for", so as to read:

For the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to experiment and to make and continue investigations and report on forestry, national forests, forest fires, and lumbering, but no part of this appropriation shall be used for any experiment or test made outside the jurisdiction of the United States; to advise the owners of woodlands as to the proper care of the same; to investigate and test American timber and timber trees and their uses, and methods for the preservative treatment of timber; to seek, through investigations and the planting of native and foreign species, suitable trees for the treeless regions; to erect necessary buildings: Provided, That the expenditure out of this appropriation for any building purchased, erected, or as improved, exclusive of the cost of constructing a water-supply or sanitary system and of connecting the same with any such building, and exclusive of the cost of any tower upon which a lookout house may be erected, shall not exceed $7,500, with the exception that any building erected, purchased, or acquired, the cost of which was $7,500 or more, may be improved out of the appropriations made under this act for the Forest Service by an amount not to exceed 2 percent of the cost of such building as certified by the Secretary of Agriculture; to protect, administer, and improve the national forests, including tree planting and other measures to prevent erosion, drift, surface wash, soil waste, and the formation of floods, and to conserve water and including the payment of rewards under regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture for information leading to the arrest and conviction for violation of the laws and regulations relating to fires in or near national forests, or for the unlawful taking of, or injury to, Government property; to ascertain the natural conditions upon and utilize the national forests, to transport and care for fish and game supplied to stock the national forests or the waters therein; to collate, digest, report, and illustrate the results of experiments and investigations made by the Forest Service; to purchase lawbooks, reference and technical books, and technical journals for officers of the Forest Service stationed outside of Washington, and for medical supplies and services and other assistance necessary for the immediate relief of artisans, laborers, and other employees engaged in any hazardous work under the Forest Service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 10, after the word "Act", to strike out "$10,000,000" and insert "$12,005,785", so as to read:

National forest protection and management: For the administration, protection, use, maintenance, improvement, and development of the national forests, including the establishment and maintenance of forest tree nurseries, including the procurement of tree seed and nursery stock by purchase, production, or otherwise, seeding and tree planting and the care of plantations and young growth; the maintenance and operation of aerial fire control by contract or otherwise; the maintenance of roads and trails and the construction and maintenance of all other improvements necessary for the proper and economical administration, protection, development, and use of the national forests, including experimental areas under Forest Service administration: Provided, That where, in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, direct purchases will be more economical than construction, improvements may be purchased; the construction, equipment, and maintenance of sanitary, fire preventive, and recreational facilities; control of destructive forest tree diseases and insects; timber cultural operations; development and application of fish and game management plans; propagation and transplanting of plants suitable for planting on semiarid portions of the national forests; estimating and appraising of timber and other resources and development and application of plans for their effective management, sale, and use; examination, classification, surveying, and appraisal of land incident to effecting exchanges authorized by law and of lands within the boundaries of the national forests that may be opened to homestead settlement and entry under the act of June 11, 1906, and the act of August 10, 1912 (16 U. S. C. 506–509), as provided by the act of March 4, 1913 (16 U. S. C. 512); and all expenses necessary for the use, maintenance, improvement, protection, and general administration of the national forests, including lands under contract for purchase or for the acquisition of which condemnation proceedings have been instituted under the act of March 1, 1911 (16 U. S. C. 521), and the act of June 7, 1924 (16 U. S. C. 471, 499, 505, 564–570), lands transferred by authority of the Secretary of Agriculture from the Resettlement Administration to the Forest Service, and lands transferred to the Forest Service under authority of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, $12,005,785.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 9, after the word "elsewhere", to strike out "$245,000" and insert "$270,935", so as to read:

Range investigations: Investigations and experiments to develop improved methods of management of forest and other ranges under section 7, at forest or range experiment stations or elsewhere, $270,935.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 12, after the word "elsewhere", to strike out "$600,000" and insert "$665,000", so as to read:

Forest products: Experiments, investigations, and tests of forest products under section 8, at the Forest Products Laboratory or elsewhere, $665,000.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I think the clerk is now reading from line 9, page 42.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. McCARRAN. In that connection, may it be understood at this time that the sum of $15,000 was added to apply specifically to what is known as the San Joaquin Range Experiment Station?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is my understanding.

Mr. McCARRAN. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 24, after the word "expenses", to strike out "$12,795,000" and insert "$14,891,720", so as to read:

In all, salaries and expenses, $14,891,720; and in addition thereto there are hereby appropriated all moneys received as contributions toward cooperative work under the provisions of section 1 of the act approved March 3, 1925 (16 U. S. C. 572), which funds shall be covered into the Treasury and constitute a part of the special funds provided by the act of June 30, 1914 (16 U. S. C. 498).

The next amendment was, under the subhead "New England hurricane damage," on page 45, line 2, after the word "amount", to insert "heretofore or hereafter", so as to read:

For completion of the Federal undertaking: For reduction of the extreme forest-fire hazard, for intensification of forest-fire patrol and forest-fire suppression on State, county, municipal, and private forest lands in the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut, resulting from or made necessary by the New England hurricane of September 1938, including the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, printing and binding, purchase, exchange, operation, and maintenance of passenger-carrying vehicles, and other necessary expenses, $300,000, together with any balance of the appropriation "New England hurricane damage" contained in the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1939 (Public, No. 7, 76th Cong.), which remains unobligated on June 30, 1940: Provided, That section 3709, Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5), shall not apply in the case of any expenditure hereunder where the aggregate amount involved does not exceed $300: Provided further, That of the amount herein appropriated the Federal Government shall not expend in any State an amount in excess of the amount heretofore or hereafter made available by said State, or the political subdivisions thereof, for the purposes contained in this paragraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Acquisition of lands for national forests", on page 45, line 13, after the word "lands", to strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$2,000,000", and on the same page, line 14, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$80,000" and insert "$90,000", so as to read:

For the acquisition of forest lands under the provisions of the act approved March 1, 1911, as amended (16 U. S. C. 513–519, 521), under sound commercial title satisfactory to the Attorney General as provided in said act, including the transfer to the Office of the Solicitor of such funds for the employment by that office of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere as may be necessary in connection with the acquisition of such lands, $2,000,000: Provided, That not to exceed $90,000 of the sum appropriated in this paragraph may be expended for departmental personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 5, before the word "of", to strike out "$16,366,000" and insert "$19,462,720", so as to read:

Total, Forest Service, $19,462,720, of which amount not to exceed $61,628 shall be available for the purchase of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles necessary in the conduct of field work outside the District of Columbia, and in addition thereto there is authorized for expenditure from funds provided for carrying out the provisions of the Federal Highway Act of November 9, 1921 (23 U. S. C. 21, 23), not to exceed $9,755 for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for use by the Forest Service in the construction and maintenance of national-forest roads.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Forest roads and trails", on page 46, line 20, after the name "District of Columbia", to strike out "$7,500,000" and insert "$10,000,000", and in line 23, after the word "and", to strike out "$500,000" and insert "$3,000,000", so as to read:

For carrying out the provisions of section 23 of the Federal Highway Act approved November 9, 1921 (23 U. S. C. 23), including not to exceed $59,500 for departmental personal services in the District of Columbia, $10,000,000, which sum consists of the balance of the amount authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1940 and $3,000,000 of the amount authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1941 by the act approved June 8, 1938 (52 Stat. 635), to be immediately available and to remain available until expended: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for the rental, purchase, or construction of buildings necessary for the storage of equipment and supplies used for road and trail construction and maintenance, but the total cost of any such building purchased or constructed under this authorization shall not exceed $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Agricultural Chemistry and Engineering—Salaries and expenses", on page 48, after line 19, to insert:

Industrial utilization of farm products and byproducts: For the investigation, development, experimental demonstration, and application of methods for the industrial utilization of agricultural products, waste, and byproducts, and products made therefrom, except as otherwise provided for in this act, by the application of chemical, physical, and technological methods, including the changes produced by micro-organisms such as yeasts, bacteria, molds, and fungi, the utilization for color, medicinal, and technical purposes of substances grown or produced in the United States, $45,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 7, after the word "to", to strike out "agriculture" and insert "agriculture;"; in line 9, after the word "demonstration", to insert "and application of methods for the prevention and control of dust explosions and fires during the harvesting, handling, milling, processing, fumigating, and storing of agricultural products, and of other dust explosions and resulting fires not otherwise provided for, including fires in grain mills and elevators, cotton gins, cotton-oil mills, and other structures; the heating, charring, and ignition of agricultural products; fires on farms and in rural communities and other explosions and fires in connection with farm and agricultural operations"; and on page 50, line 9, after the word "reports", to strike out "$294,469" and insert "$334,469, of which amount $10,000 shall be available for the construction of a garage and workshop at the Farm Tillage Machinery Laboratory, Auburn, Ala.", so as to read:

Agricultural engineering investigations: For investigations, experiments, and demonstrations involving the application of engineering principles to agriculture; for the investigation, development, experimental demonstration, and application of methods for the prevention and control of dust explosions and fires during the harvesting, handling, milling, processing, fumigating, and storing of agricultural products, and of other dust explosions and resulting fires not otherwise provided for, including fires in grain mills and elevators, cotton gins, cotton-oil mills, and other structures; the heating, charring, and ignition of agricultural products; fires on farms and in rural communities and other explosions and fires in connection with farm and agricultural operations; for investigating and reporting upon the different kinds of farm power and appliances; upon farm domestic water supply and sewage disposal, upon the design and construction of farm buildings and their appurtenances and of buildings for processing and storing farm products; upon farm power and mechanical farm equipment and rural electrification; upon the engineering problems relating to the processing, transportation, and storage of perishable and other agricultural products; and upon the engineering problems involved in adapting physical characteristics of farm land to the use of modern farm machinery; for investigations of cotton ginning under the act approved April 19, 1930 (7 U. S. C., 424, 425); for giving expert advice and assistance in agricultural and chemical engineering; for collating, reporting, and illustrating the results of investigations and preparing, publishing, and distributing bulletins, plans, and reports, $334,469, of which amount $10,000 shall be available for the construction of a garage and workshop at the Farm Tillage Machinery Laboratory, Auburn, Ala.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 20, after "556b)", to strike out "$89,400" and insert "$93,400", so as to read:

Naval-stores investigations: For the investigation of naval stores (turpentine and rosin) and their components; the investigation and experimental demonstration of improved equipment, methods, or processes of preparing naval stores; the weighing, storing, handling, transportation, and utilization of naval stores; and for the assembling and compilation of data on production, distribution, and consumption of turpentine and rosin, pursuant to the act of August 15, 1935 (5 U. S. C. 556b), $93,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 22, before the word "of", to strike out "$868,775" and insert "$957,875"; and in line 23, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$457,602" and insert "$485,582", so as to read:

Total, salaries and expenses, Bureau of Agricultural Chemistry and Engineering, $957,875, of which amount not to exceed $485,582 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia, and not to exceed $3,725 shall be available for the purchase of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles necessary in the conduct of field work outside the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine—Salaries and expenses", on page 52, line 10, after the word "nuts", to strike out "$412,684" and insert "$426,684", so as to read:

Fruit insects: For insects affecting fruits, grapes, and nuts, $426,684.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 2, after the word "authorities", to strike out "$160,460" and insert "$175,460", so as to read:

Mexican fruitfly control: For the control and prevention of spread of the Mexican fruitfly, including necessary surveys and control operations in Mexico in cooperation with the Mexican Government or local Mexican authorities, $175,460.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 6, after the word "shrubs", to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$225,000", so as to read:

Forest insects: For insects affecting forests and forest products, under section 4 of the act approved May 22, 1928 (16 U. S. C. 581c), entitled "An act to insure adequate supplies of timber and other forest products for the people of the United States, to promote the full use for timber growing and other purposes of forest lands in the United States, including farm wood lots and those abandoned areas not suitable for agricultural production, and to secure the correlation and the most economical conduct of forest research in the Department of Agriculture, through research in reforestation, timber growing, protection, utilization, forest economics, and related subjects", and for insects affecting ornamental trees and shrubs, $225,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 24, after the word "borer", to strike out "$367,000" and insert "$392,000", so as to read:

Cereal and forage insects: For insects affecting cereal and forage crops, including sugarcane and rice, and including research on the European corn borer, $392,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, line 9, after the word "purposes", to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$175,000", so as to read:

Barberry eradication: For the eradication of the common barberry and for applying such other methods of eradication, control, and prevention of spread of cereal rusts as in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture may be necessary to accomplish such purposes, $175,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 2, after the word "authorities", to strike out "$526,800" and insert "$909,608", so as to read:

Pink bollworm and Thurberia weevil control: For the control and prevention of spread of the Thurberia weevil and the pink bollworm, including the establishment of such cotton-free areas as may be necessary to stamp out any infestation, and for necessary surveys and control operations in Mexico in cooperation with the Mexican Government or local Mexican authorities, $909,608.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] a question. I observe that this item is for the control and eradication of the pink bollworm, in cooperation with the Mexican Government. Is that correct?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. The amount carried in the Senate amendment is not as large as many of those who are intimately associated with this work think ought to be appropriated, but it is a very substantial increase over the amount allowed by the House. I wish to thank and congratulate the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the chairman of the subcommittee, for the fine and generous way in which this item has been handled. While I should like to see a larger amount appropriated, I shall not urge any increase in this item, because I think we shall probably have difficulty in the House keeping even this sum in the bill. As the bill came from the House it carried only $526,800, but with this amendment the amount is quite substantially increased, and, as I understand, it is approximately the amount carried in the last appropriation bill. Is that true?

Mr. RUSSELL. I will say to the Senator from Texas that while I appreciate his complimentary references, other members of the subcommittee were also tremendously interested in the item. The item which appears in the bill is exactly the amount which is available for this work for the current year. However, it is in excess of the estimate submitted by the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. RUSSELL. I join the Senator in the hope that the House will see fit to agree to this amendment, because, undoubtedly, it represents the very minimum amount the Bureau should have in undertaking to combat this very destructive insect.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I mentioned the Senator from Georgia in his individual as well as his representative capacity. I did not mean to exclude the other members of the subcommittee.

Mr. RUSSELL. I appreciate the remarks of the Senator from Texas; and had I not seen other members of the subcommittee in the Chamber, who I know are tremendously interested in this item, perhaps I should have let his compliment pass without qualification. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. I should be glad to have entered in the RECORD the names of all the members of the subcommittee who are in sympathy with this amendment. I think it is a badge of honor and distinction.

Mr. President, I wish to say only a few words in passing. This work is highly important, for the reason that the pink bollworm is probably the most destructive and the hardest to eradicate of any of the pests which assail the cotton industry. The pest comes into the United States from Mexico; and unless it is stopped at the border it will eventually invade all the cotton sections, including that very rich and productive section in southeast Missouri along the Mississippi Delta. I am sure the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] is as deeply interested as I am. If the control is to be effective, it is absolutely necessary that we authorize the Department of Agriculture to cooperate with the Mexican authorities and seek to induce them to eradicate the pest in Mexico before it reaches the United States. The moths are frequently carried by the wind at a very great height, over tremendous areas; and unless the pest is eradicated, it is only a question of time when it will invade the very productive and fine agricultural areas of Louisiana, Mississippi, and all the cotton-producing States.

Again I wish to thank the Senator from Georgia and his associates on the subcommittee for making proper provision for this work, although the amount is not quite as much as we should like to have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 57, after line 2, to insert:

White-fringed beetle control: For the control and prevention of spread of the white-fringed beetle, $600,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 8, after the word "animals", to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$181,500", so as to read:

Insects affecting man and animals: For insects affecting man, household possessions, and animals, $181,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 3, before the word "be", to strike out "shall" and insert "may", so as to read:

Control investigations: For developing equipment or apparatus to aid in enforcing plant quarantine, eradication and control of plant pests, determining methods of disinfecting plants and plant products to eliminate injurious pests, determining the toxicity of insecticides, and related phases of insect-pest control, $72,518, of which not less than $10,000 may be used for methyl bromide investigations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 8, after the word "fungicides", to strike out "$125,000" and insert "$134,984", so as to read:

Insecticide and fungicide investigations: For the investigation and development of methods of manufacturing insecticides and fungicides, and for investigating chemical problems relating to the composition, action, and application of insecticides and fungicides, $134,984.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 16, before the word "of", to strike out "$5,644,801" and insert "$6,773,093", and in line 17, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$867,648" and insert "$878,168", so as to read:

Total, salaries and expenses, Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine, $6,773,093, of which amount not to exceed $878,168 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia, and not to exceed $40,900 shall be available for the purchase of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles necessary in the conduct of field work outside the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Agricultural Economics—Salaries and expenses", on page 60, line 19, after the word "trends", to strike out "$750,000" and insert "$800,000", so as to read:

Economic investigations: For acquiring and diffusing useful information among the people of the United States, and for aiding in formulating programs for authorized activities of the Department of Agriculture, relative to agricultural production, distribution, land utilization, and conservation in their broadest aspects, including farm management and practice, utilization of farm and food products, purchasing of farm supplies, farm population and rural life, farm labor, farm finance, insurance and taxation, adjustments in production to probable demand for the different farm and food products; land ownership and values, costs, prices, and income in their relation to agriculture, including causes for their variations and trends, $800,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 2, before the word "of", to strike out "$838,900" and insert "$888,900", so as to read:

Total, salaries and expenses, Bureau of Agricultural Economics, $888,900, of which amount not to exceed $823,358 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Agricultural Marketing Service—Salaries and expenses", on page 61, line 21, after the word "world", to strike out "$400,000" and insert "$425,000", so as to read:

Marketing farm products: For acquiring and diffusing among the people of the United States useful information relative to the standardization, classification, grading, preparation for market, handling, and marketing of farm and food products, including the demonstration and promotion of the use of uniform standards of classification of American farm and food products throughout the world, $425,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 13, before the word "Provided", to strike out "$700,000" and insert "$725,000", so as to read:

Crop and livestock estimates: For collecting, compiling, abstracting, analyzing, summarizing, interpreting, and publishing data relating to agriculture, including crop and livestock estimates, acreage, yield, grades, staples of cotton, stocks, and value of farm crops and numbers, grades, and value of livestock and livestock products on farms, in cooperation with the Extension Service and other Federal, State, and local agencies, and for the collection and publication of statistics of peanuts as provided by the act approved June 24, 1936, as amended May 12, 1938 (7 U. S. C. 951–957), $725,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, line 16, after the word "contained", to strike out "$459,000" and insert "$475,000", so as to read:

Market inspection of farm products: For enabling the Secretary of Agriculture, independently and in cooperation with other branches of the Government, State agencies, purchasing and consuming organizations, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, or other associations of businessmen or trade organizations, and persons or corporations engaged in the production, transportation, marketing, and distribution of farm and food products, whether operating in one or more jurisdictions, to investigate and certify to shippers and other interested parties the class, quality, and condition of cotton, tobacco, fruits, and vegetables, whether raw, dried, or canned, poultry, butter, hay, and other perishable farm products when offered for interstate shipment or when received at such important central markets as the Secretary of Agriculture may from time to time designate, or at points which may be conveniently reached therefrom, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, including payment of such fees as will be reasonable and as nearly as may be to cover the cost for the service rendered: Provided, That certificates issued by the authorized agents of the Department shall be received in all courts of the United States as prima facie evidence of the truth of the statements therein contained, $475,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, line 1, after the word "amended", to strike out "$425,000" and insert "$442,187", so as to read:

Tobacco Inspection and Tobacco Stocks and Standards Acts: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of an act entitled "An act to establish and promote the use of standards of classification for tobacco, to provide and maintain an official tobacco-inspection service, and for other purposes", approved August 23, 1935 (7 U. S. C. 511–511q), and an act entitled "An act to provide for the collection and publication of statistics of tobacco by the Department of Agriculture," approved January 14, 1929 (7 U. S. C. 501–508), as amended, $442,187.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, line 14, after the word "products", to strike out "$1,100,000" and insert "$1,130,000", so as to read:

Market news service: For collecting, publishing, and distributing, by telegraph, mail, or otherwise, timely information on the market supply and demand, commercial movement, location, disposition, quality, condition, and market prices of livestock, meats, fish, and animal products, dairy and poultry products, fruits and vegetables, peanuts and their products, grain, hay, feeds, cottonseed, and seeds, and other agricultural products, independently and in cooperation with other branches of the Government, State agencies, purchasing and consuming organizations, and persons engaged in the production, transportation, marketing, and distribution of farm and food products, $1,130,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, line 1, after "491–497)", to strike out "$140,000" and insert "$152,000", so as to read:

Perishable Agricultural Commodities and Produce Agency Acts: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act entitled "An act to suppress unfair and fraudulent practices in the marketing of perishable agricultral commodities in interstate and foreign commerce," as amended (7 U. S. C. 499a–499r), and the act entitled "An act to prevent the destruction or dumping, without good and sufficient cause therefor, of farm produce received in interstate commerce by commission merchants and others and to require them truly and correctly to account for all farm produce received by them," approved March 3, 1927 (7 U. S. C. 491–497), $152,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, after line 1, to insert:

Standard Container Acts: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the act entitled "An act to fix standards for Climax baskets for grapes and other fruits and vegetables, and to fix standards for baskets and other containers for small fruits, berries, and vegetables, and for other purposes," approved August 31, 1916 (15 U. S. C. 251–256), and the act entitled "An act to fix standards for hampers, round stave baskets, and splint baskets for fruits and vegetables, and for other purposes," approved May 21, 1928 (15 U. S. C. 257–257i), $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 7, before the word "of", to strike out "$5,977,126" and insert "$6,122,313", and in line 8, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$1,523,378" and insert "$1,569,778", so as to read:

Total, salaries and expenses, Agricultural Marketing Service, $6,122,313, of which amount not to exceed $1,569,778 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia, and not to exceed $40,100 shall be available for the purchase of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles necessary in the conduct of field work outside the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Enforcement of the Commodity Exchange Act", on page 69, line 13, before the word "of", to strike out "$500,000" and insert "$623,380", so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended (7 U. S. C. 1–17a), $623,380, of which amount not to exceed $198,340 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Food and Drug Administration—Salaries and expenses", on page 70, line 23, after the word "therein", to strike out "$2,320,580" and insert "$2,335,580", so as to read:

Enforcement of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act: For enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act of June 25, 1938, entitled "An act to prohibit the movement in interstate commerce of adulterated and misbranded food, drugs, devices, and cosmetics, and for other purposes," as amended (21 U. S. C. 301–392); to cooperate with associations and scientific societies in the revision of the United States Pharmacopeia and development of methods of analysis, and for investigating the character of the chemical and physical tests which are applied to American food products in foreign countries, and for inspecting the same before shipment when desired by the shippers or owners of these products intended for countries where chemical and physical tests are required before the said products are allowed to be sold therein, $2,335,580.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, after line 24, to insert:

Enforcement of the Tea Importation Act: For enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act approved March 2, 1897 (21 U. S. C. 41–50), entitled "An act to prevent the importation of impure and unwholesome tea," as amended, including payment of compensation and expenses of the members of the Board appointed under section 2 of the act and all other necessary officers and employees, $30,094.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, line 23, before the word "of" to strike out "$2,743,244" and insert "$2,788,338", so as to read:

Total, salaries and expenses, Food and Drug Administration, $2,788,338, of which amount not to exceed $832,198 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia, and not to exceed $27,375 shall be available for the purchase of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles necessary in the conduct of field work outside the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Soil Conservation Service—Salaries and expenses," on page 75, line 24, after the word "information," to strike out "$17,965,750" and insert "$19,665,750: Provided, That any part of this appropriation allocated for the production or procurement of nursery stock by any Federal agency, or funds appropriated to any Federal agency for allocation to cooperating States for the production or procurement of nursery stock, shall remain available for expenditure for not more than 3 fiscal years", so as to read:

Soil and moisture conservation and land-use operations, demonstrations, and information: For carrying out preventive measures to conserve soil and moisture, including such special measures as may be necessary to prevent floods and the siltation of reservoirs, and including the improvement of farm irrigation and land drainage, the establishment and operation of erosion nurseries, the making of conservation plans and surveys, and the dissemination of information, $19,665,750: Provided, That any part of this appropriation allocated for the production or procurement of nursery stock by any Federal agency, or funds appropriated to any Federal agency for allocation to cooperating States for the production or procurement of nursery stock, shall remain available for expenditure for not more than 3 fiscal years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, line 12, after the name "Florida", to insert a comma and "or a political subdivision thereof", so as to read:

Emergency erosion control, Everglades region, Florida: For research and demonstration work in soil-conservation control measures, including research and demonstration work in fire-control and irrigation-construction work to eliminate fire hazards, in the Everglades region of Florida, $75,000: Provided, That no expenditures shall be made for these purposes until a sum at least equal to such expenditures shall have been made available by the State of Florida, or a political subdivision thereof, for the same purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, line 15, before the word "of", to strike out "$20,090,750" and insert "$21,790,750", so as to read:

Total, salaries and expenses, Soil Conservation Service, $21,790,750, of which not to exceed $1,724,174 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia, and not to exceed $200,000 shall be available for the purchase of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles necessary in the conduct of field work outside the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Conservation and use of agricultural land resources, Department of Agriculture", on page 77, line 12, after the word "newspapers", to strike out "$498,560,000" and insert "$438,560,000, together with not to exceed $60,000,000 of the unobligated balances of the appropriations made under this head by the Department of Agriculture Appropriation Act, 1940, approved June 30, 1939 (53 Stat. 939), and by the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1940", so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of sections 7 to 17, inclusive, of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, approved February 29, 1936, as amended (16 U. S. C. 590g–590q), and the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended (7 U. S. C. 1281–1407) (except the making of payments pursuant to sections 303 and 381 and the provisions of titles IV and V), including the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; rent in the District of Columbia; not to exceed $50,000 for the preparation and display of exhibits, including such displays at State, interstate, and international fairs within the United States; purchase of lawbooks, books of reference, periodicals, newspapers, $438,560,000, together with not to exceed $60,000,000 of the unobligated balances of the appropriations made under this head by the Department of Agriculture Appropriation Act, 1940, approved June 30, 1939 (53 Stat. 939), and by the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1940, to remain available until June 30, 1942, for compliances under said act of February 29, 1936, as amended, pursuant to the provisions of the 1940 programs carried out during the period September 1, 1939, to December 31, 1940, inclusive.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, line 2, after the word "commodities", to insert a colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That not to exceed $4,985,600 of such amount may be expended in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, for administrative expenses in the District of Columbia, including regional offices, and not to exceed $9,971,200 of such amount may be expended in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, for administrative expenses in the several States (not including expenses of county and local committees).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, line 14, before the word "other", to insert "any", so as to make the additional proviso read:

Provided further, That such amount shall be available for the purchase of seeds, fertilizers, lime, trees, or any other farming materials and making grants thereof to agricultural producers to aid them in carrying out farming practices approved by the Secretary of Agriculture in the 1940 and 1941 programs under said act of February 29, 1936, as amended; for the reimbursement of the Tennessee Valley Authority or any other Government agency for fertilizers, seeds, lime, trees, or any other farming materials furnished by such agency; and for the payment of all expenses necessary in making such grants including all or part of the costs incident to the delivery thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Georgia, if he can tell me what, if anything, has been done with reference to the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, that item in the bill has not yet been reached. Of course, the Senator from Montana is aware of the fact that there is a permanent and continuing appropriation available to the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, amounting to 30 percent of the customs receipts of any calendar year—not fiscal year—which will this year amount to slightly more than $100,000,000. In addition, the committee has recommended an appropriation of $85,000,000 to supplement that fund.

Mr. WHEELER. The reason I ask the question is that I have been interested in the matter. I feel that the Surplus Commodities Corporation has done a very excellent job. As the Senator knows, I have been engaged morning and afternoon on the conference report on the railroad situation, and I do not know whether or not I shall be engaged this afternoon when the matter comes up.

Recently I received a copy of a talk given by Milo Perkins, president of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, at the National Farm Institute at Des Moines. I was very much impressed by the work and by the things he said about it, and how it had tremendously increased the purchase of various commodities.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Perkins has appeared before the committee from year to year. I agree with the statement of the Senator from Montana. Mr. Perkins always makes a most impressive witness. He is clear in expression and able in thinking, and seems to have a very fine grasp of the affairs of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation.

Mr. WHEELER. The matters which have been called to my attention by persons in my own State and elsewhere are to the effect that this particular activity has been managed in a very businesslike way, and has not only been very helpful to the farmers but likewise has been extremely helpful to the underprivileged.

Mr. RUSSELL. Undoubtedly that is the case. There has been some discussion of this item, as the Senator will find by reference to the RECORD of yesterday; and undoubtedly there will be considerable further discussion when the committee amendment is reached in a few moments.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, the Federal Surplus Commodities Corportion for some years has been distributing surplus goods. Recently it has devised the food-stamp plan. I have watched its growth with interest. Three things have stood out in my mind in studying its development. First, there was a period of careful experiment and study. Second, this study overwhelmingly demonstrated the soundness of the approach to the farm problem. Third, the expansion has been accompanied by good, businesslike administration. The result has been complete acceptance of the program by all parts of our community. It is my firm conviction that we should support this activity by permitting it to expand to a size sufficient to meet our farm problems in a sound and social way.

Recently, as I have stated, I received a copy of a talk given by Mr. Milo Perkins, President of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, at the National Farm Institute, Des Moines, Iowa, on February 24. I was extremely impressed with the study of the whole field of underconsumption and the enormous significance to farmers of the facts presented. The charts and tables showing the potentialities of increasing the farmers' market by expanding the buying of food by low-income people present probably the most significant lesson in agriculture and agricultural marketing that any of us could have.

There were about 4,200,000 families in the United States in 1935–36 who spent nearly $850,000,000 for food. These people had an average income of less than $500 a year. They represented 14 percent of the total family population in the United States. By way of comparison, it is interesting to note in this table that there were another 4,200,000 with incomes of $1,500. to $2,000 a year. These people spent about $2,300,000,000 for food. In other words, they spent nearly three times as much for food as our lowest-income group.

I noted another chart that showed that our poorest people had spent an average of 5 cents per person per meal, while the average for other income groups rose to 8, 10, 15 cents, and more. The poor people do not have enough to eat. They can use more of all our agricultural products. As they go up the income scale, the people increase their food purchases, but they also buy radios, automobiles, and other goods.

Here are a few hard and inescapable facts:

First. The low-income market has been almost completely undeveloped.

Second. The low-income group can and will increase their purchases of food if given an opportunity.

Third. Farmers need that market if the product of their industry is to be used as it should be, namely, to meet human needs.

The charts and tables in that address showed how consumption might increase with expanded purchasing power. To me, it was of first-rank importance to discover that the market for meat products was nearly twice as great among people getting $100 a month as among our lowest-income groups. The market for dairy products was nearly two and one-half times as great. The market for eggs was twice as great, as was the market for vegetables. The market for fruits was nearly three times as great. The importance of that to me is that the farmers have a very real market among low-income people that is ready for development.

The food-stamp plan and the direct purchase and distribution activities of the Department of Agriculture have applied a simple and relatively inexpensive method of meeting the challenge for our farm population. The program of the Department through the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation narrows its range to concentrate on 14 or 15 farm products which are in the worst price position from an agricultural point of view. That is why it can achieve, with a relatively small amount of money, what would otherwise take place only with very tremendous changes in the income received by low-income families.

Thus, under the direct-purchase method and the food-stamp plan this activity helps the dairy producers, the fruit and vegetable producers, the poultry producers, and the meat producers. At the same time needy people in every State are receiving these products, and over 1,000,000 needy school children are getting hot lunches in whole or in part from surplus foods.

The food-stamp plan has been described by the Department officials in these simple terms:

First. Studies indicate that persons getting public assistance spend an average of about $1 a week per person for food.

Second. On a voluntary basis, such persons may buy a minimum of $1 worth of orange-colored stamps a week for each member of the family. These are good for food at any grocery store.

Third. Persons buying these orange stamps receive, free, half again as many blue-colored stamps. They receive these in place of the commodities they formerly got at food depots. These blue stamps also are good at any grocery store, but only for foods found to be "in surplus" by the Secretary of Agriculture—chiefly dairy and poultry products, meats, fruits, and vegetables.

Fourth. Grocers paste the stamps, each worth 25 cents, on $5 cards, and redeem them through their banks, their wholesalers, or through the Department of Agriculture. The blue stamps are redeemed from the same funds that are now used to purchase surplus commodities directly.

Fifth. Under the stamp plan, therefore, persons receiving public aid can get surplus foods at the corner grocery store. They have 7½ cents to spend for each meal rather than the 5 cents a meal that they formerly spent. That improves farm income as well as the public health. The idea is to eat the surplus—that is, the part that can be consumed in this country.

The March issue of the Poultry Tribune has been called to my attention. It contains interesting material. It surveyed 50 families using food stamps in Springfield, Ill. In this study it found that people were using eggs at the rate of 57 eggs per person per year prior to the stamp plan. It found that under the stamp plan they were using an amount equal to 320 eggs per person per year—in other words, an increase of 560 percent. This farm magazine concluded:

As the Federal stamp plan is expanded it may prove to be to the poultry industry one of the greatest boons of any Government measure yet adopted.

From the studies of the program that I have seen, here are some of the potentialities of the stamp plan: Butter was put on the surplus list. The plan offered a market in excess of 300,000,000 pounds for butter producers, a possible increase in demand of over 13 percent. For egg producers, a national program is able to provide low-income buying of over 300,000,000 dozen eggs per year, equivalent to 12 percent of the domestic market. For rice and dry beans, the potentialities appear to be increases of 8 percent or more. For dried fruits, the expansion possibilities are at least equivalent to 15 percent of the domestic market, and may be much more. Recently, pork was placed on the list, and, as I understand, during the first 2 months it took about one-quarter of the purchasing power. Lard took another 6 percent. This is very important to every farmer in the Corn Belt.

As I understand, the food-stamp plan is now operating in about 60 cities. The plans are for expansion up to 100 cities within the next 2 or 3 months. Quite frankly, I want this program for the cities in my State. It is good for the farmer; it is good for the needy people in my State; and since it works through regular trade channels, it is good for business and employment.

It is my understanding, however, that the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation has to spend over one-half of the funds available to it for other agricultural programs. Even if the Senate restores the $72,000,000 item recommended by the Budget Bureau for this work for the next fiscal year, I am informed that it will not be possible to do more than run the program for the coming fiscal year in the 100 areas which will already have been selected. Some 700 communities have applied for this program, and the applications are now coming into Washington at the rate of 5 to 10 a day for additional areas. Unless the Congress appropriates more than the $72,000,000 item to which I refer, it will not be possible to name any new areas of consequence for the stamp plan during the 1941 fiscal year. I believe it would be a major mistake to handicap a program which has already proved its worth in actual practice.

The Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation has gone forward cautiously in its administration of this work. I hope it will continue to do so. I am strongly of the opinion, however, that the designation of new cities during the fiscal year should not be stopped. Even if the Senate were to double the $72,000,000 appropriation suggested by the Budget Bureau for this important work, it would only be possible during the coming fiscal year to name an additional 100 cities of the average size already selected. Anything less than this would be a severe blow to the farmers whose markets are being broadened under this program, as well as to the millions of persons with inadequate diets who get a little more surplus food to eat as a result of it.

The Senate should make it possible to name at least a hundred new areas during the coming fiscal year of about the size of those already selected. If 200 such areas were named, between 7,000,000 and 8,000,000 underprivileged persons would then be participating in the program. That would not only improve the public health; it also would improve farm income. It would be a cautious expansion of this important work. I am for it in the interest of the general welfare.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next committee amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, under the heading "The Sugar Act of 1937," on page 82, line 4, after the word "Act", to strike out "$47,500,000" and insert "$46,675,000, together with $1,300,000 of the unobligated balance of the appropriation provided under this head by the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1939, approved May 2, 1939 (53 Stat. 626), in all not to exceed $47,975,000, to remain available until June 30, 1942:", so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions, other than those specifically relating to the Philippine Islands, of the Sugar Act of 1937, approved September 1, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1100–1183), and the employment of persons and means, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, as authorized by said act, $46,675,000, together with $1,300,000 of the unobligated balance of the appropriation provided under this head by the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1939, approved May 2, 1939 (53 Stat. 626), in all not to exceed $47,975,000, to remain available until June 30, 1942.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, after line 14, to insert:

PARITY PAYMENTS

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make parity payments to producers of wheat, cotton, corn (in the commercial corn-producing area), rice, and tobacco pursuant to the provisions of section 303 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, $212,000,000: Provided, however, That in expending the appropriation in this paragraph the rate of payment with respect to any commodity shall not exceed the amount by which the average farm price of the commodity is less than 75 percent of the parity price: Provided further, That such payments with respect to any such commodity shall be made with respect to a farm only in the event that the acreage planted to the commodity for harvest on the farm in 1940 is not in excess of the farm-acreage allotment established for the commodity under the agricultural conservation program.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the committee amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 82 in the committee amendment it is proposed to strike out all after line 15, down to and including line 5, on page 83, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make parity payments to producers of wheat, cotton, corn (in the commercial corn-producing area), rice, and tobacco, pursuant to the provisions of section 303 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, $607,000,000, which sum shall be apportioned to these commodities in proportion to the amount by which each fails to reach the parity income: Provided, That such payments with respect to any such commodity shall be made with respect to a farm only in the event that the acreage planted to the commodity for harvest on the farm in 1940 is not in excess of the farm acreage allotment established for the commodity under the agricultural conservation program.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I rise to speak in support of this amendment. The purpose of the amendment is to provide sufficient appropriation to pay the farmer full parity. The amount carried in the amendment is $607,000,000. According to the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the bill, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the amount of $212,000,000, as provided in the Senate committee amendment, would pay, at the time it was figured, from 68 to 69 percent of parity.

It may seem more than is necessary to provide $607,000,000, since the additional 31 percent of parity would not require as much as the difference between $212,000,000 and $607,000,000; but the reason for fixing the amount at $607,000,000 is that those figures were based on the agricultural prices of December, and upon the basis of the average agricultural prices for 1939 more than $607,000,000 would be required.

Mr. President, I cannot be too extravagant in my praise of the Appropriations Committee, and the chairman of the subcommittee which has brought in this bill. I know that the members of the commitee are champions of the farmer, and I believe they would vote for more except that they feel bound by the action of the committee; and the committee felt that it was useless to ask for more than is provided in the pending bill.

Mr. President, we here know that because of the parliamentary procedure quite often a member of a committee is bound by the action of the committee; and certainly my efforts in offering this amendment are not intended in any way to embarrass any member of the committee who in his heart would like to have a larger appropriation for the farmer, but feels bound by the action of the committee. But, Mr. President, I do not have to answer to the committee. I do not have to answer to the Members of the House who passed this part of the bill without any appropriation for parity payments; but I do have to answer to my own conscience and to the farmers of my own State. They elected me, and sent me here as their advocate to represent them. Therefore I am doing what I am doing because I think it is right.

I do not intend this effort on my part to be merely an empty gesture. I believe if we do what we think is right, then it is up to the other body to do as they feel they should; but I am not bound by the action of the other body in this respect. If we merely track them, and rubber stamp what they do, then we might as well disband. There is no reason for our existence as an organization if we are limited in our action to doing what the other body has done.

Mr. President, I favor our paying full parity as a matter of right and justice. When this program began we started talking about parity. We did not talk about two-thirds of parity when the bill was up for consideration. I did not favor all the machinery of the bill, but we passed it; and now I should like to see us keep faith with the farmer. We did not talk about three-fourths of parity; we talked about parity. Parity means that the farmer's commodity should buy as many of the things he must buy as it did during the base period of 1909–14. Therefore, as a matter of right, I believe we owe it to the farmer to provide for him full parity.

Suppose the farmer, in keeping his part of the contract, should curtail his production only three-fourths. Suppose he should reduce his acreage only two-thirds; and let me remind the Senate that there is no guaranty that the $212,000,000 carried by the Senate amendment will pay the farmer three-fourths of parity. As it is, it would provide at the present day only about 70 percent of parity.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HERRING in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. When the Senator speaks about the farmer I should like to ask him whether he refers to the dairy farmer or simply to the wheat, corn, cotton, rice, and tobacco farmer?

Mr. LEE. Of course, when I use the general term I mean all farmers, but in the case of this measure it applies only to those who raise the commodities referred to.

Mr. WILEY. In other words, the amendment does not take care of or attempt to help the largest segment of agriculture, dairying?

Mr. LEE. Of course, many dairy farmers are also engaged in the production of some of these other commodities; and, as a general proposition, if some of them are helped it indirectly helps all. Also, we are not heavy exporters of dairy products, as we are of the others. These are the heavy base products. I am informed that a million dollars out of the fund for the distribution of surplus commodities goes for the purchase of butter, and therefore, that is provided for in the bill.

Mr. President, the point is that the farmer has kept his part of the contract. Are we going to keep our part, or do we have the nerve to say that we are only going to keep three-fourths of our contract? Why not keep it all? Have we ever kept full faith on this program? When we passed it, we talked about parity. Did we give the farmer parity last year, or the year before, or the year before that? We have not provided the farmer with parity since we started this program.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. As a member of the subcommittee, I supported the figures of parity in the bill. I have heard the claim made many times that Congress has promised the farmer parity. When was that promise made, and in what statute can it be found?

Mr. LEE. Of course, the promise was an implied promise. Every farmer over the country thought it meant that, but there was no language saying, "We promise to pay parity."

Mr. McNARY. How did the farmer get that impression—from men who were running for office, seeking the votes of farmers? There is nothing in the statutes; there is nothing in the hearings; no declaration has ever been made by the Department of Agriculture or by Congress that the farmer was entitled to parity. I have heard that statement repeated so often that I think it is time for us to correct that impression.

Mr. LEE. If the able Senator will refer to the party platforms, I believe he will find language which would give the farmer that impression.

Mr. McNARY. I do not think the farmer reads the party platforms; and if he did, I do not think he would believe anything that is in them, anyway. [Laughter.]

I conclude by saying that the time is ripe for someone to say that the Congress has never promised the farmer parity payments in one form or the other. Though I am for parity, the farmer must be very thankful and very grateful for what Congress has done along that line.

Mr. LEE. Does the Senator deny that the impression has gone out through the length and breadth of the country that if the farmer will reduce his acreage we will provide parity? Does the Senator deny that that is the impression?

Mr. McNARY. If so, it has been the result of unwarranted statements made by the county agents and representatives of the Department of Agriculture. I am not responsible for any rumor that is prevalent over the country. I am saying that Congress never has made any promise to give the farmers of this country parity payments.

Mr. LEE. Does the Senator deny that it was the intent and purpose in writing this bill that Congress should provide parity? Was it not the whole purpose of this bill to provide parity for the farmer?

Mr. McNARY. What bill?

Mr. LEE. The agricultural law.

Mr. McNARY. What law?

Mr. LEE. The present agricultural law that we have.

Mr. McNARY. We have many agricultural laws. We have been enacting laws ever since I have been here.

Mr. LEE. I refer to the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

Mr. McNARY. The Agricultural Adjustment Act stated that "if and when"—that is the language—money was available an approach would be made to parity; and that is all that has been said.

I am not quarreling with the able Senator. He may have that impression but it is a false one, and I think it should be challenged; and that is my purpose in rising. I am not criticizing the Senator, but I think we should be sparing in our statements that we have broken faith with the farmer.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, for the first time on a farm proposition of any kind I find myself in complete disagreement with the capable minority leader, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY]. I was in the Senate at the time this law was passed, and so was the Senator from Oregon. From the action of this body I got the very definite impression that if the farmer would do his part by reducing acreage, we would provide him with parity—not only parity payments, but a parity income. We talked about that, and the farmers got that definite impression. Who gave it to them, and how, are matters too numerous for me to put my fingers on, but that is the impression that went out to them.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma further yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Let me again correct the able Senator. In the bill which we now call the Agricultural Adjustment Act, providing partly for parity payments, in the discussion of the matter upon the floor of the Senate former Senator Pope, then in charge of the bill, withdrew the provision then proposed for parity income, so that subject has never been considered. It is quite different from parity payments. All that ever has been said was said by Congress when it passed the Agricultural Adjustment Act approved on the 16th of February, 1938, at 3 p. m., as follows:

SEC. 303. If and when appropriations are made therefor, the Secretary is authorized and directed to make payments to producers of corn, wheat, cotton, rice, or tobacco, on their normal production of such commodities in amounts which, together with the proceeds thereof, will provide a return to such producers which is as nearly equal to parity price as the funds so made available will permit.

That is the only reference that has ever been made in legislation to parity—"if and when appropriations are made therefor." I am simply making the point that we ought to address ourselves to this subject upon the theory that Congress is doing all that it can. Many different methods have been suggested. We here in the Senate, through the able leadership of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], provided a fund toward parity 2 years ago, last year, and this year, and that is going beyond any promise that has ever been made by Congress in any deliberate action upon its part.

I mention that only in the most kindly way, to suggest to the Senator from Oklahoma that Congress had done more for the farmer along this line than any promise which has ever been made, for none was made, and I am sure he is grateful and thankful for what has been done.

Mr. LEE. Of course, the farmer is thankful for what has been done; but when we write into a statute language like that, stating that "if and when" funds are available the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to pay the farmer up to parity, and then we turn to the farmer and say, "Now, you reduce your acreage," there certainly is an implied promise, if not an actual contract, that we will do our part by providing funds to pay that parity. I cannot quarrel with the Senator about whether or not it is in black and white, but it certainly is the feeling on the part of the farmer. He has done his part, but we talk about giving him three-fourths of parity.

When the independent offices appropriation bill came before this body I do not remember anyone advocating that we appropriate three-fourths of what was necessary to meet the requirements under that bill. When the deficiency bill came before this body I do not remember anyone advocating that we pay 69 percent of the deficiencies. When the last bill for national defense came before this body, I do not remember anyone advocating that we provide appropriations for three-fourths of the national-defense program, and when the next one comes before us I do not believe anyone will advocate that we appropriate only enough money to provide for 69 percent of a national defense. I imagine we will increase the appropriation. But when it comes to the farmer, we take our economy program out of his hide by cutting him down to two-thirds of parity or three-fourths of parity. But he has done his part.

Suppose the farmer should say, "I am going to reduce my acreage only three-fourths." Does anyone think he would draw any of the benefit payments? Certainly he would not. In a few cases where farmers, through misunderstanding, have planted more than they were allowed under the acreage program, before a farmer could draw his benefit payments he had to plow under the additional crop. He had to measure up to the law 100 percent; he had to meet the requirements. But when we meet to provide the funds for this program, we talk in terms of two-thirds of parity or three-fourths of parity.

I say that it is a matter of justice that we should provide full parity for the farmer. Parity means keeping his product in line. Why is his product out of line? It is because of laws made which gave protection to the industrial group. That is why we have to provide parity for the farmer, and that is why we talk parity. It is because of the tariff laws which have protected the industrial group and allowed them to grow rich and powerful, while the farmer was forced to buy on a protected market and sell on an unprotected market. It was the law of this land which caused that inequality and that inequity. Now, we have proposed to adjust this inequity in the agricultural adjustment program. It is called an adjustment act because it was intended to adjust the difference between manufactured and raw products. So there is an obligation upon us, at least moral, if not legal, to provide the farmer with full parity.

Mr. President, I believe we should provide parity because it is just to the farmer. In 1913 the farmer was doing pretty well; he had what today we call parity. But since that time prices of the things he has had to buy have increased. The prices of the commodities the farmer must buy have increased 22 cents on each dollar. For every dollar's worth of overalls and work shirts the farmer must buy he has to pay 22 cents more than he did in 1913; and if we include the taxes and interest he pays, for every dollar of expense to which the farmer is put now he has to pay 28 cents more than he did in 1913. That means that his purchasing power has fallen off 28 cents.

But that is not all. While the prices of manufactured commodities which are protected by tariff laws have increased 28 cents on the dollar since 1913, the price of farm commodities has decreased. Today his commodity brings 1 cent less on every dollar than it did in 1913. Bring that decreased value of his commodity together with the increased value of the products he must buy, and we find that the farmer's dollar today is worth only 77 cents. It takes one dollar's worth of wheat to buy 77 cents' worth of overalls; it takes one dollar's worth of cotton to buy 77 cents' worth of work shirts.

In 1913 if a farmer wanted to buy a hundred pounds of nails in order to build a shed he put in his wagon a pig weighing 31 pounds and went to town, where he traded the pig for 100 pounds of eightpenny nails. Can he do that today? No. If he wants a hundred pounds of nails today he has to wait until the pig weighs 70 pounds, he has to put that much more care and labor into the pig, he has to put that much more feed into the pig. By the time the pig weighs 70 pounds, before the farmer can get the money with which to buy the 100 pounds of nails, he has other debts and other charges coming due. The result is that he takes the money he gets from the pig and, instead of buying nails, he pays interest charges and taxes and other expenses which he must meet. Therefore he does not buy the nails, the storekeeper does not sell the nails, and the manufacturer does not have an order to make the nails. So the cycle goes on. That is exactly what is happening in this country today.

In 1913 it took 31 pounds of pork to buy a hundred pounds of nails. Now it takes 70 pounds of pork to buy a hundred pounds of nails. That is an increase of 126 percent. That means that the farmer's purchasing power has decreased 126 percent since 1913. No wonder our market is falling off.

In 1913 if a farmer wanted to buy an ax, the ax cost 96 cents. The same ax today costs $1.89. Today if a farmer wants to buy an ax he has to take to town enough wheat to make 100 loaves of bread, which, at 10 cents a loaf, would amount to $10—wheat enough to make $10 worth of bread in order to get an ax which in 1913 cost him 96 cents. No wonder the farmer's purchasing power has fallen off.

What about the farmer's income in general? For the past 10 years the farmer's income has been $20,000,000,000 below parity. Suppose the farmer had been receiving parity for the past 10 years; his income would have been increased $20,000,000,000—$2,000,000,000 a year. The farmer has been selling his commodity each year for $2,000,000,000 less than it cost him to produce it. We might say that with that $2,000,000,000 the farmer has been subsidizing the American consumer, that that has been his contribution to our living. Two billion dollars every year the farmer has been contributing toward feeding and clothing the American people.

Last night when you slept between cotton sheets you were using cotton which was sold for less than it cost some farmer to raise it. This morning when you ate your toast, or your roll, or your hot cakes, you were eating wheat which was sold by some farmer at less than it cost him to produce it. The parity appropriation for which I am asking is not charity, it is not a bonus, it is not a subsidy, it is not a gratuity. It is an appropriation to pay an honest debt for what we consume of the farmer's products.

The American people are honest. I do not believe the American people want to ride on the back of the farmer. I do not believe our people want to "mooch" from the farmer. I do not believe our people want the farmer to feed and clothe them at less than it costs him to produce the commodities.

Our debt to the farmer is an honest one, and if we vote this appropriation it will not pay the debt which we owe the farmer for what we consume of what he produced in 1940; it will not pay him for what he produced in 1939; it will pay him only for what we consumed of that which he produces in 1941. It is an honest debt.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. Has the Senator read the testimony of Mr. Smith, of Illinois, the vice president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, before the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. LEE. I am sorry; I have not.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to call the Senator's attention to it:

> The parity goal for agriculture—

According to Mr. Smith—

> was established by Congress in the original Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933, also in the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act of 1936, and again in the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938.

As the Senator has heretofore stated, it seems to have been established on the basis of "as, if, and when." But section 303, authorizing parity payments, recognizes, according to Mr. Smith, no limitation short of parity. He said:

> It appears, at this time, that a substantial parity payment appropriation by Congress—> is fully justified. The estimate of all economists at this time projects parity income for agriculture in 1940 short of the authorized goal by at least 25 percent.

The pending bill, as passed by the House, carried no appropriation for parity payments. I have been informed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] that the $212,000,000 will pay 75 percent of parity.

Mr. LEE. I am sure the Senator will stand corrected; it will pay a little over 70 percent, with farm prices as they are at present.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Georgia thinks it will pay 75, he just stated to me. But if the tobacco situation gets bad—and my people in Kentucky are particularly interested in the tobacco situation because of the buying of tobacco by the British from Turkey and other countries instead of using the best tobacco in the world, which is the Kentucky Burley—that may cause our people some trouble. In Kentucky this year we sold 275,000,000 pounds of Burley tobacco at an average of about $17.50.

I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that I am anxious to vote substantial appropriations to the farmers, because it is my deliberate judgment that unless we get them to a point where they can have incomes and continue to have something to work for so that they can furnish the people of the country with the necessities of life we are never going to have any permanent prosperity. I think all agree upon that. But when the Senate is asked to vote $405,000,000, which the Senator's amendment seeks to add to the bill, I am not going to agree to vote a "cold check" to the farmer, because he is the hardest fellow to fool you ever saw in your life. If we vote him $405,000,000 without any prospect of its being paid—and I have gotten the genuine impression that there may be great difficulty in getting more than $212,000,000 approved by the President of the United States or by the House of Representatives—if we get it approved, if we do not raise the debt limit of the National Government or provide for raising more from taxation, we will have voted the farmers of the United States a "cold check" and made assurances to them which will be much worse than the assurances which have heretofore been made.

I should like to go along with any reasonable amount, but I wish the Senator would give consideration to the $212,000,000, which has to be agreed to hereafter by the House, if we agree on it here.

Mr. LEE. Are any taxes provided for raising the two hundred and twelve million?

Mr. CHANDLER. No; but it is generally conceded that we have a chance of getting that much, but I do not think anyone thinks we can get nearly $700,000,000 in addition.

Mr. LEE. It would not be seven hundred million.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator's amendment call for six hundred and seven million?

Mr. LEE. Yes; which is three hundred and ninety-five million above the committee amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. My arithmetic may be bad——

Mr. LEE. Perhaps mine is.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will take one number from the other, I think he will get the answer. I shall not argue with the Senator as to what result comes from the subtraction of one sum from the other.

Mr. President, I do not know where the money is coming from. Many of these things are provided for out of the general deficit. I shall vote for the appropriation of every cent for which I can see justification in paying the farmer any money. However, I shall not vote with my eyes open to pay any farmer in the United States with a "cold check."

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, the Senator just admitted he does not know where he is going to get the $212,000,000.

Mr. CHANDLER. I admit that. And the Senator has voted for appropriations of millions of dollars in the last few years, and he did not know where the money he voted for was going to come from.

Mr. LEE. The Senator from Kentucky then will vote for 70 percent of parity although he does not know where the money is going to come from, but he will not vote for full parity because he does not know where the money is going to come from. Is that logic?

Mr. CHANDLER. No; the Senator from Kentucky is going to vote for a smaller amount which is reasonable and which we believe is available. I have back of my statement the authority of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. LEE. The Senator is willing to give the farmer a "cold check" for 75 percent of parity.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is better than a 100-percent "cold check," and the Senator understands the difference. The Senator from Georgia, the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations in charge of the present bill, thinks we can get that money. Where are we going to get it? I do not know. But the Senator from Georgia thinks we can get it. If the President of the United States approves the bill, that indicates to me that he knows we can get the money. I do not think we can get the extra $405,000,000, however. The Senator from Georgia does not think we can get that money, and I do not think the House believes we can get it, either. So, Mr. President, I have more persons on my side who think we cannot get the money than the Senator from Oklahoma has at his side who think we can get the $212,000,000.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, since the Senator has raised that question I wish to answer him in all fairness. The Senator voted for the independent offices appropriation bill. I hope the Senator will not leave the Chamber just yet. The Senator voted for that bill, and the question was not raised then where we are going to get the money. The Senator from Kentucky voted for the deficiency bill and the Senator did not say anything about a "cold check" then. We voted for battleships, and no one said anything about a "cold check," or where we were going to get the money.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I have never yet voted for an appropriation when I was not willing to vote for a tax to pay it. I stand ready to do that today. We cannot originate tax measures in the Senate. I am not hiding behind that fact, however. I am ready to meet the situation in the first place. I am willing now to vote for the two tax measures offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and according to his estimate they would raise $234,000,000. That would go a long way toward meeting this parity payment.

Furthermore, I believe that the President under the present law has power further to devalue the gold content of the dollar, and put more money to the credit of the United States.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma rose.

Mr. LEE. I yield to my colleague if he has it on the tip of his tongue to tell how much under the present law the Government could make by further devaluing the gold content of the dollar.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, we now have in the United States Treasury $18,300,000,000 approximately in gold. The President had the authority originally to cut the gold dollar in two and make two for one. In place of doing that he took only 40 percent of gold from each dollar. Under existing law he has the right to take out the other 10 percent. If that should be done, in other words if the President should exercise his power under the existing law, he could make for the Treasury more than $3,000,000,000 by the signing of his name.

Mr. LEE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wanted to say to the Senator from Oklahoma that I did not vote for the bills he said I voted for, because I have not been in the Senate long enough to consider those measures.

Mr. LEE. Did the Senator vote for the deficiency bill?

Mr. CHANDLER. That was a small matter.

Mr. LEE. A rather small "cold check." Did the Senator vote for the independent offices bill?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes; I voted for a bill just before the first bill the Senator spoke of.

Mr. LEE. They are the only two I accused the Senator of voting for. I said we had passed other bills here, but——

Mr. CHANDLER. I want to compliment the Senator, who is willing to vote for taxes. I was afraid he might be cataloged or classed among those who vote for all appropriations, but vote against all taxes.

Mr. LEE. I hope the Senator will not leave the Chamber at this moment simply because he is hungry.

Mr. CHANDLER. No; I am leaving because I have an engagement.

Mr. LEE. I want to refer to one more source from which the money may be obtained. I have already referred to two sources. One is increasing the tax schedule, according to the amendment proposed every year for a number of years by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], which, according to his estimate, would raise $234,000,000. According to my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] the President under the present law has power to raise—and I did not understand the amount—was it $3,000,000,000?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, it is considerably more than $3,000,000,000. And I might suggest, if my colleague will permit, that of the former profit of $2,800,000,000, $2,000,000,000 was set aside in the so-called stabilization fund. That fund has been used now for years, and not to exceed $200,000,000 has been called for. So there remains now in the stabilization fund $1,800,000,000 which has not been used for any purpose. The Congress could draw on that $1,800,000,000 for any purpose it sees fit. It is not used as a stabilization fund. It may be used at some time for that purpose, but in years past it has not been so used. At the present time I can see no need for continuing $1,800,000,000 in the stabilization fund for which there is no great purpose in sight.

Mr. LEE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, in addition to that, we have in this country $50,000,000,000 of tax-exempt bonds. They are not all Federal, I grant you. But we have $50,000,000,000 of bonds that are tax-exempt, either entirely or in part. I have every year since I have been in this body urged the passage of a law to stop issuing tax-exempt bonds because tax exemption is a special privilege to the rich, because the poor cannot buy bonds, and the middle class cannot buy enough that the tax-exemption privilege amounts to anything to them. It is a special privilege to the rich.

Let me show an example: A man with an income of $500,000 makes more from a bond bearing 3 percent interest that is tax-exempt than he does from a bond bearing 10 percent interest that is not tax-exempt. In other words, the exemption privilege of a man with an income of $500,000 is worth 7 percent in interest.

How much is it worth to a man with an income of $5,000? It is worth two-tenths of 1 percent. So it is a special privilege to a special class.

There, Mr. President, is a source of revenue. The President himself, in a message asking us for laws permitting the taxing of tax-exempt securities, referred to them as a source of revenue. That $50,000,000,000 of wealth that paid no tax could be used to pay the farmer parity. Then there would not be any need to speak of the giving of "cold checks" to the farmers, or that we cannot get the money to pay the farmer the parity that we made the bluff we would pay him.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, has the Senator introduced a bill to accomplish the purpose he speaks of?

Mr. LEE. Certainly I have offered such a bill. When the late Senator Borah, of Idaho, was with us he offered an amendment to every revenue bill that came along for this purpose. I offered an amendment to the last revenue bill. Senators persuaded us not to push the amendment, but that they would take it up in connection with the next House bill that came along. I have said that I would offer it to the next bill that comes along. The Senator will not catch me blowing hot and cold.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is delighted with the statement made by the Senator from Oklahoma. He does not want to catch him. He just does not want Senators to catch the farmers. If Senators are willing to vote taxes, very well, I will join them. But I do want Senators to be careful and not vote the farmers a "cold check."

Mr. LEE. Those who are opposed to taxing the tax-exempt bonds use this old bromide. They say, "If you tax these bonds, you will have to raise the interest rate the same amount that you put the tax on, and there will be no gain." Let us see if that is true. The Government is losing millions of dollars in revenue because of these tax exemptions. By taxing incomes which are now exempt, the Government will gain much more in revenue than it will lose on account of the increased cost. I have examples which I wish to give the Senate. This example will apply anywhere, but I have used language applying to my State.

Suppose a school district in Oklahoma issues $1,000,000 worth of bonds bearing 3 percent interest, and suppose the entire issue is purchased by a man having an income of $500,000. If the bonds are tax exempt, the Government loses each year in income taxes $21,197.77; whereas, if the bonds were taxable, the increased cost in interest charges would average only $3,750 a year, according to the estimates of the Treasury Department. The difference between $21,197.77, which would be the loss in revenue if the bonds were tax exempt, and $3,750, which would be the increased cost if the bonds were not tax exempt, is $17,447.77.

In other words, the net loss in revenue on that $1,000,000 issue of tax-exempt bonds is $17,447.77 each year. Then suppose these bonds were issued for 20 years. The total amount of net loss in revenue on that $1,000,000 issue of tax-exempt bonds would be $348,955.40.

Now multiply that by $50,000,000,000 of tax-exempt bonds in this country and Senators will see the revenue that our country is losing. And then we talk about not being able to pay the farmer a parity for his crops.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. A while ago the Senator stated that a promise had been made to farmers to pay them parity. I suppose the basis for the Senator's view is to be found in statements made in debate when we considered the 1938 farm bill?

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Mr. ELLENDER. When that promise was made was it not contemplated that taxes would be imposed in order to meet the payments?

Mr. LEE. Yes; it was.

Mr. ELLENDER. Well, is it not contemplated now?

Mr. LEE. Of course it is.

Mr. ELLENDER. And the farmers, of course, do not expect parity unless a tax is imposed so as to raise a sufficient sum by which parity can be paid?

Mr. LEE. That is exactly right, and I thank the Senator.

Every mouthful of bread you eat is made of wheat raised by a farmer at a loss to himself. The loss in the farm revenue has been $2,000,000,000 each year for the past 10 years. If the farmer had parity, the agricultural income would have been increased $20,000,000,000 over the past 10 years.

How long are we willing to take advantage of the farmer's helpless condition? The farmer cannot help his condition. The consumer cannot help the farmer's condition. All they can do is to vote for men who when they run for office say they will vote for the farmers. Well, here is the vote. I ask Senators for their vote.

Senators said they would help the farmers. We have the power to levy taxes in order to raise the money necessary to make the parity payments. Yet we say, "Yes; we are his friend, but the House did not pass it; therefore we must not."

I answer to my conscience and to the people of Oklahoma.

Mr. President, did you ever visit a farm family in the cotton district. I have. Come with me; let us visit one of the poorer families. Let us go into their home, if we can call it a home. There is a large family of children. Each child has one rag fastened about its body to cover its nakedness. The man has a pair of ragged overalls and shirt. He has no shoes. The woman has no shoes. None of the children have shoes. They have a very limited amount of corn bread for the meal. They have black coffee with no cream and no sugar. They have some beans and some potatoes. The food chokes us, not because it is not clean or good but because we feel that we are taking food from the mouths of those children. They appear to be undernourished, as no doubt, they are.

But every time we consume something below cost we are taking bread from their mouths.

The mother has a very young baby, and yet she works in the field with the rest of the family. She hooks a long cotton sack over her shoulder. She places the baby on the sack and drags it along. As the sack fills with cotton, it gets heavier and bends her stooped back even more. All the children are compelled to work. The father and mother keep them at it. The cotton burrs scratch their fingers. Their hands are bleeding and look like little claws; yet they have to keep working. They have to produce cotton so we can wear it at less than it cost them to produce it. Sheets cost more than the farmer receives. Wheat cakes for breakfast cost more than the farmer receives.

I say they produce the sheets between which you sleep below the cost to them. Someone may say, "If they do not have anything, how can they produce them below cost?" Because they pay with the blood of their children. They pay with the health of their wives. They pay with the spirit of manhood itself, which is the most priceless thing in the United States.

What happens to a man when his farm is foreclosed? He loses his farm because he has sold his product below what it cost him to produce it. I have said that farmers produce below cost. According to Dr. Alexander, of the Farm Security Administration, in every year since 1935, 40,000 farmers have lost their farms and changed from the status of landowners to tenants. Forty thousand farmers a year for 5 years—200,000 tillers of the soil, the bone and sinew of America—have been turned from landowners to tenants, and started a trek down the road with the Joad family. The Joad family has added another recruit; another Okie has started—to where? To a new frontier where he can start life over again, as was once the case? Not at all. To the shanty towns and the garbage towns. I have seen them as they go into the garbage. I have seen them drag out of the garbage part of an old car fender and part of an old pasteboard box, and put them together to keep out the cold. Some of them go on to warmer climates, such as California. What kind of citizenship can we expect of them?

Mr. President, when a man is foreclosed after a valiant but unsuccessful fight he loses more than merely his farm—something dies within him. Something happens—a loss that is even a greater loss than our failure to balance the Budget this year, the loss of a patriot, the loss of a good citizen. He then becomes a fit subject for all the isms of the country. He has lost his hope.

Edwin Markham was a great poet. He has gone, but he left a scar seared on the brain of every person who ever read The Man With the Hoe.

> Bowed by the weight of centuries he leans
> Upon his hoe and gazes on the ground,
> The emptiness of ages in his face,
> And on his back the burden of the world.
> Who made him dead to rapture and despair,
> A thing that grieves not and that never hopes,
> Stolid and stunned, a brother to the ox?
> Who loosened and let down this brutal jaw?
> Whose was the hand that slanted back this brow?
> Whose breath blew out the light within this brain?
> Is this the Thing the Lord God made and gave
> To have dominion over sea and land;
> To trace the stars and search the heavens for power;
> To feel the passion of Eternity?

Some of us may have to answer those questions. That is what happens to farmers when they continue producing food and clothing for the rest of the world at a price below the cost to them. They pay with their farms. They pay with the health of their children. They pay with the spirit of America, which has made our Nation great. That is the greatest price we are paying.

After the war I stood at Bourges, France, before the cathedral of Bourges. As I stood before the beautiful cathedral, a poem in stone and masonry, I enjoyed the beautiful architecture. I enjoyed the pointed arches and the flying buttresses. An old French padre walked up to me, and I learned from that venerable person the story of the cathedral of Bourges. It was built in the thirteenth century. Its building required 100 years. The grandchildren completed the work begun by their grandparents.

When the cathedral was finished the rats tunneled under the foundation of the north tower, and the rains came, and the erosion continued, until, in the fifteenth century, the north tower of the Bourges cathedral leaned, quivered, tottered, and then came thundering, smashing down. We cannot build a great nation while the foundation strata of our society is being destroyed.

What good will it do us to gird ourselves with battleships enough to man both seas if we are rotting from within? What good will it do us to build a girdle of steel fortifications around the United States if the foundation gradually caves from under us because of destroyed humanity and lost hope in the hearts of men? What good will it do us to spend our billions for battleships and allow the very strength of America to be sapped by a farm program which does not put into the hands of the farmers sufficient income to maintain them on a decent standard of living?

Mr. President, there is enough wealth in the United States for everybody to have a decent living, clothes to wear, and a shelter. Does anyone deny that? If so, let him stand in his place and deny it. We are the wealthiest nation on earth. Does anyone deny it? There is enough labor to develop our natural resources. There are enough natural resources and there is enough capital to pay the labor. Is it not our job to put these three things together in proper ratio to spell out prosperity? I am willing to undertake it. We have brought about a maladjustment through a tariff system which has penalized the farmer. I am willing to correct that.

We say we are the farmers' friends. Let us see if we are. Let us not hide behind the excuse that any aid to the farmer would be a "cold check." We can vote taxes if we have courage enough. I have never advocated any expenditure for which I have not been willing to vote the taxes to meet it.

Mr. President, the farmer creates wealth. Some of the wealthiest men in the Nation never created a dollar in their lives. They accumulated it. There is a vast difference between manipulating finances so as to accumulate fortunes and creating wealth. The man who creates wealth makes those about him wealthy. The man who accumulates wealth makes those about him poor, because he accumulates at the expense of the other fellow.

Thousands of those who gamble on the stock market accumulate wealth. They might be called "lily" businessmen.

> They toil not, neither do they spin; and yet * * * even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.

Lily businessmen!

But the farmer creates wealth. He takes a hundred bushels of wheat and multiplies it into 2,000 bushels of golden grain to feed the world. We eat the grain, and he receives less than it cost him to produce it.

He goes to his field in the morning, fills his drill with wheat, gets up on it, starts his team across the fallow field back and forth, back and forth, until noon. Then he unhitches his sweating team, drives it into the barn, feeds it, and then goes to eat. As soon as his team has eaten he hitches it up again and starts back and forth, back and forth, sowing the grain.

At night, after sundown, after all our offices are usually closed, the farmer comes in from the field and unharnesses his team. They wallow in the lot, then they shake, and then they drink long drinks of cool water from the watering trough. Then he feeds them. Then he goes in and washes the dust of the field from his face and hands, and eats.

Then he goes back and milks, feeds the hogs, turns his horses out, and late in the night he is ready to go to bed.

The next morning, long before you and I are up, he is up bright and early. He feeds his horses, harnesses them, milks his cows, does his chores, and then goes back to the fertile field, back and forth, back and forth, sowing his grain.

Finally the 100-acre field is sowed. Then the farmer must wait and take his chances. He must wait to see that the moisture comes to cause the grain to swell and put forth its tender sprout. Then he must take his chances on a killing frost killing his wheat.

Then with the spring comes the danger from grasshoppers. There is danger from all insect pests. Gradually his wheat comes up. He watches every cloud that floats across the horizon for fear a hailstorm will come and destroy his entire investment.

Finally the harvest day comes, and if he has been lucky he harvests his crop. He has created 2,000 bushels of new wealth to feed humanity and to make other men wealthy. He has not merely accumulated. He has created.

Yet we discriminate against him at every turn. I mean it. Show me the farm product which can move in the freight routes as cheaply, according to weight, as gravel. Show me the farm product which can move at as cheap a freight rate, according to value, as a carload of shoes. Show me the farm commodity which can be shipped by freight in bulk as cheaply as many bulky things that are manufactured.

Is the farmer discriminated against by interest rates? The interest rates on call money, for gambling on the stock market, have gone down as low as twenty-five one-hundredths of 1 percent—not for the purpose creating wealth, but to shear the lambs. Stock-market operators can borrow money for twenty-five one-hundredths of 1 percent. Can the farmer do it? No. He pays 6 percent. The financiers can borrow money at 1.65 percent. They have done so. The Government can borrow money at less than 2 percent. But the lowest rate at which the farmer can borrow money is 3 percent. He could not obtain such a low rate until we passed the Bankhead-Jones Act. Now that opportunity has been cut off. I hope we can restore it.

The farmer is discriminated against on every side. Why can the man on the stock market borrow money at less than 1 percent? Because his security is good. What is his security? It is based upon stocks. What are those stocks based upon? They are based upon the products of the earth. The farmer, who owns the earth which produces the wealth of America, must pay three or four times as much as the man who is manipulating it. The farmer owns the greatest security in America—land; but on that security he cannot obtain interest rates comparable with those available to big business.

Then we discriminate against the farmer in taxes. If a poor farmer does not get enough money from his crops to pay the taxes on his farm he loses his farm. But if a rich man has an income of $1,000,000 from tax-exempt securities he is not required to pay one thin dime of taxes.

Then again, the farmer is discriminated against on the things which he must buy, as well as on the things which he must sell. He buys on a protected market, but he must sell on an unprotected market.

Mr. President, I feel that the most fundamentally important thing to do is to rehabilitate the farmer. I would like to see this amendment adopted. We should say to the country that we are keeping faith with the farmer. I feel that the most important question today is the farmer. He is the foundation of our economy. We cannot build a great building without a firm foundation. Forty thousand farmers every year lose their farms. What good will it do us to rehabilitate the farmers through a farm-tenant program unless we increase the prices of their commodities so that they can hold the land which they have?

I put the question on a business basis. I put it on the basis of good economics. Where is the greatest market? It is the farmer. Suppose our farmers today had full parity. What would they do with the additional $395,000,000? They would spend it. Those dollars would find their way right back into the channels of trade. Those dollars would flow right back into the arteries of commerce. Those dollars would go to town with the farmer.

Suppose every farmer today were able to paint his little house with two coats of paint. What would that do for the paint manufacturers? Do not think the farmers do not want to. Do not think the farmer does without these good things of life because he does not want them. He is living for the day when he can have some of the good things of life.

Suppose every farm home could be redecorated inside with some beautiful, bright wall paper, instead of the newspapers that the farmers now use. Suppose they could redecorate with some paint.

Suppose every farm home could buy bathroom equipment. What would that do for the manufacturers?

Suppose every farmer had electric power wired to his place. Suppose he could buy an electric refrigerator: What would that do for the manufacturer? The farmer would buy it if he could.

Suppose every dilapidated fence could be replaced with a new fence; suppose every tumble-down shack could be replaced with a new one: What about the lumber industry? What about the manufacturer of steel?

Suppose every old, broken set of harness could be discarded and replaced with new harness: What would that do for the manufacturers of leather; and, in turn, what would it do for the producers of cowhides?

It is a never-ending upward spiral of prosperity when we start it at the logical place, the grass roots. We shall never have prosperity in this country until we get money in the hands of the little fellow. Some have the philosophy of pouring money in at the top, with the hope that enough of it will trickle down to reach those at the bottom, but it never trickles down. We are oiling the machine at the wrong end when we do that. I believe in the philosophy of taking care of the little fellow, and the big fellow will usually take care of himself, instead of trying to take care of the big fellow, and hoping he will take care of the little fellow.

If we get money into the hands of the farmers, we shall have an upward surge of prosperity that is not artificial, that is secure and sound. If we depend on the temporary and artificial prosperity resulting from the wars in Europe and Asia, we are not on a very sound footing. But let us have a prosperity that springs from the grass roots, and we shall be back on the road to real, true, and permanent prosperity, and that will come about only when we put buying power in the hands of the farmer.

Mr. President, I hope the amendment I have offered to the committee amendment will be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LUCAS in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. LEE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	La Follette	Schwellenbach
Ashurst	Downey	Lee	Sheppard
Austin	Ellender	Lodge	Shipstead
Bailey	Frazier	Lucas	Smathers
Bankhead	George	Lundeen	Smith
Barbour	Gerry	McCarran	Stewart
Barkley	Gibson	McKellar	Taft
Bilbo	Gillette	McNary	Thomas, Idaho
Bone	Glass	Maloney	Thomas, Okla.
Bridges	Green	Mead	Thomas, Utah
Brown	Guffey	Miller	Tobey
Bulow	Gurney	Minton	Townsend
Byrd	Hale	Murray	Tydings
Byrnes	Harrison	Neely	Vandenberg
Capper	Hatch	Norris	Van Nuys
Caraway	Hayden	Nye	Wagner
Chandler	Herring	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Chavez	Hill	Pepper	Wheeler
Clark, Idaho	Holman	Pittman	White
Clark, Mo.	Holt	Reed	Wiley
Connally	Hughes	Reynolds
Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Russell
Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Schwartz

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, with respect to the question raised by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] a while ago about full parity payments, I read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 6, 1937. I believe that was the RECORD of the special session in which we passed the Farm Act. I read from the bottom of page 930:

> The next amendment was, on page 10, line 6, after the word "payments", to insert "for cotton, wheat, and corn", so as to make the subhead read:
> "Parity payments for cotton, wheat, and corn."
> Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, is that the amendment on page 10?
> The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; the subhead on page 10, line 6.
> Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I do not care about the heading. Referring to the body of the section I am curious to know whether the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] recalls my statement made a few days ago when I said that the language was mandatory requiring the Secretary to make parity payments, in the face of the statement of the Senator from Alabama that he did not expect parity payments.
> Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I did not say that. I said I did not expect full parity. There is a difference between payments on parity, or making payments based on parity, and parity payments in full.
> Mr. MCNARY. We were talking about parity. I assume that parity means full. When I say I will pay a man my obligation, I do not have to say my full obligation, but I am assumed to mean that I will pay my full obligation. When the Secretary is directed to make parity payments, I assume that that means parity payments, and not 10 percent of parity payments.

Then, down a little further, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] said:

> Mr. President, a great deal might be left out of the bill and it might be improved by so doing. I am not now suggesting that. The section begins, "Promptly following the close of each marketing year." It specifies when these payments shall be made; namely, that promptly following the close of the marketing year the Secretary shall do what? Make parity payments.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma a question before he yields the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator was reading from the original act, was he not?

Mr. LEE. I was reading from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. NORRIS. From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD dealing with the act which established parity, or attempted to do so, passed at the special session?

Mr. LEE. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. That was the session of Congress immediately after the Supreme Court had held the Agricultural Adjustment Act unconstitutional, was it not?

Mr. LEE. That was the special session in the fall of 1937, I believe, following the Court's decision.

Mr. NORRIS. Was it not called for the purpose of remedying the situation brought about by the decision of the Supreme Court?

Mr. LEE. It was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the amendment be stated for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 82, in the committee amendment, it is proposed to strike out all after line 15, down to and including line 5 on page 83, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make parity payments to producers of wheat, cotton, corn (in the commercial corn-producing area), rice, and tobacco, pursuant to the provisions of section 303 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, $607,000,000, which sum shall be apportioned to these commodities in proportion to the amount by which each falls to reach the parity income: Provided, That such payments with respect to any such commodity shall be made with respect to a farm only in the event that the acreage planted to the commodity for harvest on the farm in 1940 is not in excess of the farm acreage allotment established for the commodity under the agricultural conservation program.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the amendment of the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], who has so well stated the case, provides for an increase in the so-called parity appropriation of $395,000,000. The total of $607,000,000 is proposed to be appropriated to pay the difference between the market price of the five farm products included in the Agricultural Adjustment Act and the so-called parity as estimated by the Department of Agriculture. Some of us think that even parity is less than cost of production, but it is somewhere near the average cost of production, and would be a great benefit to the producers—a great deal better than the local market price or 75 percent of parity.

We appreciate the fact that our Appropriations Committee put in this parity item after the House had omitted it from the bill, providing for an appropriation of $212,000,000; but it is stated in the bill that it is not to exceed 75 percent of parity.

Mr. President, as the Senator from Oklahoma has well said, Congress has repeatedly promised the farmers parity payments. Seventy-five percent of parity is the closest they have ever come to it so far, and the farmers are continuing to go broke, and they will go broke just so long as they are getting less than the cost of production for their products, just so long as they are getting less than the parity price. They would not go broke quite so fast on 75 percent of parity as on 50 percent of parity, but they will go broke, as will any other businessman if he sells his product below cost of production. Of course, the farmer is no exception to the rule.

When the last Agricultural Adjustment Act was before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate, it was after we had held hearings throughout the agricultural States. I happened to be on the subcommittee which held hearings in the Wheat and Corn States. After we returned to Washington and the committee met, a provision was inserted in the agricultural adjustment measure authorizing the appropriation of a sufficient amount of money to carry out the purposes of the bill. Of course, the bill as it passed the House was entirely different from the bill as passed by the Senate. The conferees wrote a new bill, and the provision which the Senate committee had inserted, authorizing appropriations in a sufficient amount to carry out the purposes of the bill in order to pay the farmers parity, was stricken from the measure. As I remember, the 75-percent provision was inserted at that time also.

Of course, anyone must realize that unless the farmers get more than 75 percent of parity, or cost of production, they cannot possibly succeed, and the farmers must receive prices which will afford them parity or cost of production if they are to succeed. The present Agricultural Adjustment Act covers only five products; and as the Senator from Oklahoma so well said, Congress has the authority and the power to levy taxes to pay these appropriations. The Senator mentioned a number of ways by which the money might be raised to pay the additional amount necessary.

I did not hear the first part of the Senator's remarks, but I should like to mention one thing which occurs to me. I understand that in the very near future we will have before us so-called national-defense measures, a bill to increase the appropriations for the Army and a bill to increase the appropriations for the Navy and the air forces. In my opinion, we can save a good deal of money in those bills, the appropriations which have been approved by the Bureau of the Budget and recommended to Congress for enactment. We can save much more than enough to pay parity on the five principal products of the farmers, on which we have promised parity for the last several years but have not gotten within gunshot of it.

I do not intend to go into the national-defense situation, but I think it is generally conceded that it is not necessary at the present time to spend for national defense the billions that are recommended. I shall have something to say on that when the measures to which I have referred come before us.

So far as the parity-payment proposal is concerned, the farmers should have enough to insure them the difference between their local market prices and parity, and we believe the $607,000,000 covered by the amendment will accomplish that purpose. Of course, it depends somewhat on the prices of the products in the local market next fall. Some say that we do not need any parity-price legislation because the war situation will bring prices up. We do not know that prices will rise because of the war, but we do not care to have prices based on war hysteria and war conditions in the Old World. We want prices to which the farmers are entitled, which the Congress and this administration have promised the farmers, parity prices. The farmers are entitled to that; it is what they desire, and we want them to have it.

The Senator from Oklahoma referred to the cotton grower's home in the South. I have seen a few of the cotton growers' homes, and I know that those farmers are in a mighty tough situation. There have appeared before our Committee on Agriculture and Forestry persons from the Southern States representing that group, people who raise cotton, cotton sharecroppers and tenants especially. They have told us that the cotton farmers did not even have cotton rugs on the floor; that they did not even have cotton sheets on the beds; that they did not even have cotton covers on the beds, because they could not afford them. And why could they not? As the Senator so ably said, they could not afford them because they had to sell every pound of cotton they could produce in order to eke out an existence for themselves and their families, and that was only by the work of all the members of the family. It is a terrible situation. That condition exists in States other than the cotton States, perhaps in not so marked a degree, but it is bad enough in any agricultural community anywhere in the country.

A few days ago the able leader on the other side made a very eloquent speech recounting the accomplishments of the present administration during the past 7 years, and he took occasion to tell what had been done for agriculture. A good deal has been done for agriculture, we admit, and we are proud of it; but the present administration promised the farmers parity for their products, and they have not gotten it yet, and will not get it under the pending bill unless the amendment of the junior Senator from Oklahoma shall be agreed to here and agreed to by the House.

Mr. President, it seems to me only fair and honest to adopt the amendment to increase the parity payment appropriation so that the farmers can get parity on the five basic agricultural products. That is little enough. I hope we can get a bill through in the near future which will give the farmers parity on all the products they produce; and why not? Farmers are entitled to an honest parity on every product they produce.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. LEE. Knowing the Senator's philosophy, I am sure he is willing to vote for any reasonable tax in order to raise the money to pay parity; is he not?

Mr. FRAZIER. Certainly.

Mr. LEE. I wish to ask the Senator further whether it is not a fact that if the farmer does not receive enough to pay the taxes on his farm, the farm is taken away from him. Is that not true?

Mr. FRAZIER. It is.

Mr. LEE. It is sold from under him. But the man with an income of a million dollars, if the income represents interest on tax-exempt bonds, does not have to pay a thin dime. Is not that true?

Mr. FRAZIER. That is true. Thousands of farmers have lost their homes and their farms because they could not pay their taxes. Thousands of others have lost them because they could not pay the interest on the mortgages on the farms, the mortgages were foreclosed, and they were put off their farms, and had to go out on the road or become tenants or sharecroppers.

Mr. LEE. But there is $50,000,000,000 worth of wealth in the United States which is tax exempt, and that does not square very well with the fact that a farmer's farm is taken from him when he does not have money enough to pay the taxes. Yet some are afraid to vote enough money to pay the farmer parity, and afraid to levy taxes on the tax-exempt wealth in this country.

Mr. FRAZIER. That is very true. The Senator referred to $50,000,000,000 worth of tax-exempt bonds. I think all the so-called Progressives here have worked and fought to have tax-exempt bonds put on a taxable basis, but we have not been able to accomplish it. It should be done by all means. There is much more wealth besides the tax-exempt bonds that is not taxed. But the farmer cannot cover up the products he has which are subject to taxation. When the assessor comes around everything is right in plain sight, and if the farmer forgets to put down a wagon, or a cow, or a horse the assessor will look things over and put down the things which have been missed; so that the farmer cannot escape the taxation. But the wealthy citizen does escape many taxes—taxation on money he has, and all that kind of thing—and much of his property escapes taxation.

Further, the farmer's prices are manipulated by the stock markets and the commodity markets. A few days ago a farmer came into my office and while we were talking about fixing the prices of agricultural products, he said:

> There is one thing sure, that unless Congress fixes the prices of farm products the gamblers will continue to fix them.

That is about the situation, and that is another thing which should be corrected. So long as the gamblers are allowed to manipulate the cotton market, the wheat market, the beef and pork market, and the markets dealing in other farm products, we will never have an honest market for our farmers.

The farmer has nothing to say about the prices he will receive for his products. In the last four or five national platforms of both the old political parties they have promised, in substance, that if elected they would put the farmers on a parity with industry, but after election they have apparently forgotten the promises. At least we have not gotten anywhere near parity yet, and the pending committee amendment, which is a great improvement over the provision of the bill as it passed the House, provides for not to exceed 75 percent of parity. Everyone knows that in any line of business people will go broke if they receive only 75 percent of parity or cost of production.

Mr. President, I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma will be agreed to. It is no more than fair. The farmers produce the wealth of the Nation; they create the new wealth. As the Senator from Oklahoma has said, they produce the food products which other people must have in order to live, they produce the raw material out of which our clothing must be made, and they are entitled to fair prices for their products.

I have made the statement here a great many times, and will make it again, that if any other line of business—I do not care what it is—anywhere near as important as is agriculture were in the condition in which agriculture is today, Congress would stay in session night and day until the situation had been corrected, until that business had been taken care of. But the American farmer, who produces the food which we eat and the raw materials out of which the clothing we wear is made, is the forgotten man. We are merely trying, by the provisions of the bill, to afford the farmer 75 percent of parity, and that is all he has ever been getting; indeed, he has received less than 75 percent most of the time under the Agricultural Adjustment Act. The benefit payments, the soil-conservation payments, the parity payments, afford much relief, but they have not solved the farm problem by any means, and we will not solve it unless we provide for full parity payments and apply the parity payments to all farm products. Farmers who produce other products than the five included in the Agricultural Adjustment Act are entitled to something at the hands of the American Congress, just as those who produce those five products are. These five are five of the principal products, of course.

The senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], in his able speech just a few minutes ago, referred to the importation of casein made from skimmed milk, when there is a surplus of skimmed milk in our own country. We imported millions of dollars' worth of that product, and it seems strange that things of that kind should happen. But many other farm products are imported into the United States which come in competition with what we produce here and keep farm prices below parity, and we have not been able to get nearer than 75 percent of parity at any time since the Agricultural Adjustment Act was passed. The amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma would bring us up to what we believe is parity so far as the five products are concerned, and I hope the amendment may be agreed to.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I have taken only a few minutes of the Senate's time this session. I was hoping I would be in physical condition to speak at length on the agricultural appropriation bill, but I have been suffering with a severe cold and cannot do so. However, I shall attempt to make one or two observations before a vote is taken on the substitute amendment.

Let me express the hope that other Senators will join with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] and me in the request for a yea-and-nay vote on the substitute.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. In order that the Senate may understand the amendment, is it fair to state that the real effect of the amendment is simply to increase the appropriation? The amendment itself strikes out considerable of the language of the bill and inserts other language. Is there any other material in it than the increase of the appropriation?

Mr. BILBO. It strikes out all reference to parity payments placed in the bill by the Senate Appropriations Committee and substitutes the provision of $607,000,000, which is an increase of $395,000,000 over the committee's judgment.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand, then, practically the same result could be reached, could it not, by simply moving to strike out the amount and to insert a larger one?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, if the Senator from Mississippi will pardon me, I think I can explain that matter to the Senator from Nebraska. The language that is stricken from the committee amendment is the language which imposed a limitation of 75 percent of parity. The appropriation of $607,000,000 is the amount that has been estimated as sufficient to pay full parity payments.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, first I wish to compliment the Senate Appropriations Committee for the excellent work they have done in considering and acting upon the appropriation bill for agriculture. They have made some very desirable additions and improvements over what the House did. I am especially gratified at the addition of $85,000,000 for the Surplus Commodities Corporation. I think that is one of the best things in the bill.

The committee is also to be congratulated for its courage in inserting $212,000,000 for parity payments when the House had outlawed every cent of parity payments.

The only trouble is that the committee did not go quite far enough in the amount allowed for the two items. Personally I favor $100,000,000 for the Surplus Commodities Corporation. I think we could well spend that in the great work that this agency is doing for the benefit of the farmers of the country. And it is an appropriation that the business people of the country would appreciate and endorse wholeheartedly.

The reason I offer this amendment, together with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], is because in the act of 1938 we have what I believe to be the best farm program that has ever been established by the American Congress. It has met with almost universal approval throughout the Nation. With all the criticisms and analyses and objections that have been made by politicians and office seekers, and some real enemies of the agricultural life of the Nation, no one has been able to suggest anything comparable with the law of 1938 in an effort honestly to solve the farm problem.

Mr. President, I see my distinguished friend, the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], on the other side of the Chamber loaded, as I understand, to make a speech against parity payments. In other words he is against the philosophy enunciated in the year 1938 that the way to solve this problem is through the parity payments to the farmers.

The farmers of the United States have endorsed the parity-payment solution. In the act of 1938—and it is not necessary to read section 303—there is an implied promise to the farmers of this country that if they will cooperate with the control programs established by the act of Congress of 1938, Congress will keep faith with them and make the appropriation necessary to give them the parity payment to which they are entitled.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I recall that when this particular provision was before the committee the question arose as to whether or not the language carried a pledge. It is my recollection in that connection that the language itself is not a specific pledge, and the whole matter depends on appropriation.

Mr. BILBO. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BONE. That leaves it in a somewhat uncertain state. If there is any promise there I take it from what I recall of the act that it is purely implied.

Mr. BILBO. It is an implied promise, and I meant to say so.

Mr. BONE. It is simply that Congress did it at one time, and therefore we should consider that a promise. I have no objection to it, but I had rather forgotten the language in the interim.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, the American farmer had been led to believe that, since the Congress provided for parity payment as a solution to his trouble, when failure came about because of reduced prices the Congress would keep faith with the farmer, and that is what the farmer believes the Congress will do. That is what I am attempting to do with this substitute for the provision dealing with parity payments, by raising the amount to $607,000,000, the sum which has been estimated by the experts of the Department as necessary to give to the farmers at least a parity payment.

Mr. President, I wish to ask my distinguished friend, the Senator from Ohio, how he expects the farmers, especially in the great cotton section of this Nation, to buy the manufactured articles from his business people? How can we buy automobile tires unless we are given a chance to have the purchasing power? And the only way to get it is through the parity payments.

During the period 1931 to 1935 the annual income of the 13,000,000 farmers of the 10 cotton States of the Nation was only $95 each. How in the name of high heaven can people have any purchasing power when they receive an annual income of only $95 each? And the situation in that respect is not much better now than it was during that period.

The question was raised a while ago in a colloquy between the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] about where we are going to get the money to pay this $607,000,000. It is passing strange that the question of where we are going to get the money is raised when we get to the one point of all points, to help the most needy class in the Republic, the farmer, when the Senate has already voted—and the Senator from Kentucky has already voted for six appropriations—I took trouble to add them together and found that the Senate has already voted $2,676,322,720, and there has not been a word said about where we are going to get the money. The Senate has already spent two and a half billion dollars, and this amendment carries only $607,000,000—not three-quarters of a billion dollars. The House has made appropriations of $2,377,000,000. In other words, we have already passed the $5,000,000,000 mark, and no question has been raised about where we are going to get the money. It is not necessary for me to enumerate the ways and methods of getting money. That has been fully covered by my distinguished colleague, the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky is fully capable of taking care of himself, but the Senator from Kentucky might have had in mind the suggestion of the President of the United States, which has been made every time these parity amendments have been before the Congress, that the Congress should raise funds by taxation to finance these appropriations.

Mr. BILBO. With all deference to the President, why should the Congress be called upon to impose additional taxes to take care of the farmer when he does not say anything about additional taxes to take care of an enlarged Army increase and an increase in the Navy and other means of defense.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator, of course, is repeating the argument I have heretofore made every time these parity payments have been before the Senate—that the farm items should not be singled out for new taxes. But the Senator is not exactly fair to the President of the United States. If the Senator had read the President's Budget message he would have seen that this year not only did the President ask but insisted that the Congress levy taxes of $460,000,000 to finance the rearmament program. I am willing to vote for those taxes.

Mr. BILBO. Very well. But every day we read announcements to the effect that we shall go through this session of Congress, in an election year, without levying any additional taxes.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment to me?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am very much interested in what the Senator from Mississippi had to say about how easy it was to raise money, and the way the Senator from Oklahoma suggested that money could be raised. I think it comes with rather bad grace at this time from the Senator from Mississippi and from the Senator from Oklahoma to suggest that taxes should be levied on tax-exempt bonds. Tax exemption on certain bonds has been in existence during the 7 years of this administration, but that exemption has not been done away with in order to raise more money.

I also think that a matter which was suggested a while ago might have been taken care of a long time ago—that is the proposal to take part of the gold at Fort Knox and make it into money, a part of which could be spent. When and if that is done I am willing to join with other Senators to vote for parity payments of 100 percent to the farmers of the Country. The other proposals we voted for were made by the President of the United States and anticipated by the Budget, but it did not anticipate this item, and it was not passed in the House. The bill came over to the Senate without any money for parity payments. The Senate subcommittee, of which the Senator from Georgia is chairman, recommended the placing of $212,000,000 in the bill. The committee placed that amount in the bill. And there is no definite assurance that we are going to get it. But the Senate has a better chance to get the $212,000,000 than to get the $607,000,000 proposed. It might be all right, however, for the farmers of Mississippi to hear their distinguished Senator talk about $607,000,000. [Laughter.]

Mr. BILBO. Before I continue I wish to extend the right hand of fellowship to the junior Senator from Kentucky. He is one of us. But I wish to say to him that he will find out after he has been in the Senate as long as I have that he is only one of 96 Senators [laughter], and that he will not get everything he asks for.

Mr. CHANDLER. I found that out long ago. I made this point a while ago to the Senator from Oklahoma. The president of the United States suggested additional taxes for armament, and indicated that the people of the United States were willing at this time to pay additional taxes for the national defense.

Mr. LEE. And the President asked us to tax tax-exempt bonds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will observe the rules with respect to addressing the Chair before interrupting the Senator having the floor.

Mr. CHANDLER. No other suggestions were made about additional taxes. Now a request is made for this extra money, when the Senator knows that we are approaching the debt limit, and we will be faced with the alternative of either raising the debt limit of the Government of the United States beyond $45,000,000 or voting new taxes. The question the junior Senator from Kentucky wanted to ask is, Are Senators ready to raise the debt limit in order to make these payments? Are Senators ready to vote for new taxes? If they are, they are justified in casting a vote to pay the farmer full parity; but if they are not ready to provide either alternative, they are not justified in casting a vote to pay the farmers of the United States full parity.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I am ready to provide money for the farmers either by raising the debt limit or by voting for new taxes. Personally, I think, if it is necessary, we can vote new taxes. There are many ways to get this money. We have already spent $5,000,000,000.

Mr. CHANDLER. There are many ways of talking about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi did not yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. I will yield; yes.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the Senator says he does yield. [Laughter.]

Mr. BILBO. Yes; I am delighted to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule is that Senators must address the Chair before interrupting the Senator who is speaking.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Kentucky knows the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator did not seem to understand the rule when he failed to address the Chair.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Kentucky apologizes to the Chair for a failure which has become so common that I, myself, have become used to it. I am very sorry.

We talk about being willing to take gold and make other money out of it, and being willing to impose new taxes. That does not pay the bill. We must be willing to do the job, provide the money, and then pay the bill.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. LEE. I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that one of the reasons why we have not been able to do that is because so many have taken the attitude of hiding behind every possible excuse to keep from doing that very thing. President Roosevelt, in his message to us last year, or year before last, asked us to impose a tax on tax-exempt bonds to obtain more money. He has asked us time and again to pass tax legislation if we expect to make certain appropriations. I for one have done my part on the floor in speech and vote; but there are not enough of us. There are those who take hold of every opportunity to keep from doing that very thing.

There are those who say, "There is no tax to pay for it; therefore I shall not vote for it." Such an attitude keeps us from doing the things which the Senator is asking why we have not done.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Kentucky is delighted to hear that the Senator from Oklahoma is and has been willing to do what has been suggested; but the Senator from Kentucky is entitled to remind the Senator that since the Senator from Kentucky has been in the Senate, the Senator from Oklahoma has voted for billions of dollars' worth of appropriations for which no money was provided to pay the bill; and the Senator from Kentucky has not yet done so.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me?

Mr. BILBO. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. LEE. I do not remember that we have ever passed a tax bill to raise money in advance of some need we have already recognized by authorizing the expenditure. In some cases—in fact, in most cases—we have made the appropriation before we passed the tax law. The Senator wants us to pass a tax law before we make the appropriation.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. BILBO. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Kentucky does not want to adopt any new rule; but down in my State it is an old country custom to anticipate revenues. In that way we have been able to anticipate expenses and to keep the outgo from exceeding the intake. One of my first impressions of the Budget was, not that I wanted to tear it up, as did one of my distinguished colleagues, but that it looked more like the New York Telephone Directory than anything I had ever seen before. [Laughter.] I believe that the Budget Bureau estimated $5,500,000,000 of income and $8,500,000,000 of outgo. Such a plan will not work if long continued.

Will Rogers came from the Senator's State. That fact leads me to observe that during the Senator's time the Senator did not possess all the sense possessed in Oklahoma. Will Rogers had some of it. Will Rogers said that some day, when the Congress of the United States makes up its mind to run the affairs of the country in an orderly fashion, every time a Member of Congress proposes to spend public money he will at the same time introduce a bill providing the money. That plan might not be a bad idea today.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. LEE. The Senator from Kentucky is a Member of this body. He is privileged to introduce such a bill. What will he say to the tobacco farmers of Kentucky? If he says, "Yes; I could have voted for it, but I did not vote for it because there was no bill to raise the money," the farmers will say to him, "Senator, you are a Member of the Senate. Do you not have as much right as any other Senator to introduce such a bill?" Then what will the Senator say to the tobacco farmers?

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. In due time the Senator from Kentucky will have to make his answer to the people of his State, as will the Senator from Oklahoma. Each Senator, in his turn, must make his own answer.

Mr. President, I join with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL]. After long and careful hearings and hard work, the committee has brought in a bill to appropriate $212,000,000, which will provide approximately 75 percent of parity. When I look at the parity price of tobacco in my State and see that on December 15, 1939, the parity price for burley tobacco—which I say is the best in the world—was 16.9 cents, and when I see that we sold 295,000,000 pounds of it for 17.5 cents, I shall have to make no other answer. That is my answer to the Senator from Oklahoma and the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. Speaking as a Senator from a State the principal agricultural commodities of which have not reached even 75 percent of parity, I appreciate the support of the Senator from Kentucky, a State whose principal agricultural commodity is above parity, in coming to the rescue of less fortunate States.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. BILBO. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. BONE. As I have listened to this debate I have been uncertain about one thing. I gathered from the argument that the $212,000,000 proposed in the committee amendment is sufficient to provide about 75 percent of parity payments. If that be true, why is it necessary to increase the appropriation to more than $600,000,000 in order to achieve 100 percent of parity? The figures do not seem to make sense, and I am rather curious.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, my information is that $212,000,000 will provide about 68 percent of parity.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. Answering the question of the Senator from Washington, if the Senator will give pause for a moment I am sure he will see why it is necessary. Farm prices vary from 65 percent of parity to 70 percent of parity. The $212,000,000 will approximately fill in the space between 65 and 70 percent, or 75 percent; but a much larger amount is required to fill in the space from 75 percent to 100 percent of parity.

Mr. BONE. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that that explanation is apparently quite sufficient to satisfy the average man; but I have heard so much discussion about abnormally low prices that it seems to me that the gap between the present prices and parity prices is not sufficiently great to require the additional $400,000,000 to make up the difference, or the remaining 30 percent. I have not had the advantage of the committee's studies, and I did not hear the discussion. I wish merely to obtain a clear understanding of it.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I have no desire to place the committee in the wrong attitude before the farmers of the Nation, inasmuch as the committee has been gracious and liberal enough to provide $212,000,000, while the House refused to provide anything in the way of parity payments. However, I think I speak the sentiments of the members of the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, with possibly one or two exceptions. If they thought there was any way on earth to obtain the money, they would be glad to support the substitute of $607,000,000. I really think they want to do so. The fact of the matter is that I have talked to many of them, and they are for it; but, like my friend from Kentucky, they are disturbed about where we are to get the money, and whether it is possible for that amount to be passed by the House. Personally I am not concerned about what the House thinks about the matter or what the House will do about it. What I am interested in is to do my duty to my people and to the farmers, who have been led on in the hope and belief that they would be taken care of by parity payments.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator said several times that the question of where we are to get the money has been raised only in connection with the discussion of the farm bill. I am not willing to have the statement go out to the farmers of America that the junior Senator from Kentucky raised the question of where we are to get the money only in connection with the farm bill. If this is the first time the question has been raised, it is unfortunate that it was not raised long ago, because in the future it will be increasingly important to raise the question of where we are to obtain the money.

Mr. BILBO. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER. I want it understood that I am not raising the question entirely in connection with the farm bill.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I wish to exonerate the Senator from Kentucky. I think his sympathies are right. The interests of his constituents are not hurt by the bill, because the tobacco farmers are receiving very good prices for their products. However, if the Senator represented the second greatest cotton-producing State in the American Union, where the average price today is about 9½ cents a pound for cotton, and the parity price is close to 16 cents a pound, when it is a known fact that we are not receiving even the cost of production, he would be more concerned about the passage of the substitute amendment to raise the amount to $607,000,000 so that the farmers may be taken care of.

Mr. President, the whole world knows that it costs from 12 to 15 cents to produce a pound of cotton; and today cotton is selling below the actual cost of production. That is why we have an impoverished people in the South. That is why I am trying to persuade the Senate to come to the rescue of the 13,000,000 people engaged in the production of cotton in the 10 cotton-producing States of the American Union.

The condition is just about as bad with some of our friends in the Midwest, where the parity price of corn is 82 cents, and where the prices of other crops are below parity.

Take the case of hogs and lard. It is a national disgrace to think of the price of lard today. Hogs are selling at 54 percent of parity, hardly more than half of parity. I am hopeful that the $85,000,000 which has been voted for the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation can be used by Mr. Perkins in a way to increase the price of hogs to the hog farmers of the Midwest.

We have on hand today a surplus of about 200,000,000 pounds of lard, which can be bought for 5 or 6 cents a pound. Something ought to be done about it. This is our chance to do it. Let the Surplus Commodities Corporation appropriation take care of the other agricultural commodities, and with the $607,000,000 we can take care of the staple crops enumerated in the act of 1938. In that way we can bring a slight degree of justice to the great agricultural population of the United States.

To repeat, I trust that the Senate will be kind enough to give us a yea and nay vote, so that we may report back to the people at home whether or not we want them to have the $607,000,000. Then if any Senator has any explanation to make, he may make it, as my friend from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER] has done.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate for only a moment in the discussion of the proposed amendment. I am unwilling to let pass unchallenged the implication that only those who are really friends of 100 percent parity are supporting the amendment which has been presented by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO].

Mr. President, I yield to no Member of this body or to any person in the United States in the earnestness and the sincerity of my desire for full and complete parity to the American farmer. I realize that until that day comes when the farmer shall be placed on a parity with every other group in this Nation, it will be impossible for us to have any balanced economy, or to have a country which can really move forward and not be subject to recurring depressions.

I have the honor—and I think I may say it with becoming modesty—of having offered the first amendment in the Congress of the United States to appropriate funds for parity payments. I am no new convert to parity payments. I offered that amendment without any suggestions from any farm organization. No single farmer had asked me to sponsor it. I did not confer with anyone on the subject. I offered it, and with the help of others interested, fought until it was enacted into law—through the committee, the Senate and the conference, until it became law. I met with many obstacles and as it was unbudgeted and a new appropriation, the Department of Agriculture was prevented by imposed silence from giving me the slightest assistance. It was inspired solely by my knowledge of conditions on the farm and in American farm homes, and by my determination to do everything within my power to give the farmer a chance and a start toward equality. I shall never waver in the fight until we have reached that goal.

That amendment was offered in the year 1938. It did not come before the Senate in the regular agricultural appropriation bill. I offered it as an amendment to a relief measure, after the agricultural bill had passed, when it became apparent to me that many of those living on American farms had incomes which were far below the incomes of those who were engaged in work on W. P. A. projects. I was a coauthor of the amendment adopted last year appropriating $225,000,000 for parity payments to American farmers. I carefully nursed that amendment through the committee of the Senate, on the floor of the Senate, and through a conference which extended over several weeks with the Representatives of another body.

I have been the whipping boy for those favoring parity payments, and have been singled out in the metropolitan press opposed to all farm appropriations as a "Treasury raider," one who was seeking to loot the Treasury of the United States in an effort to curry favor with the farm vote in this country. I favor, as I say, as much as do the authors of this amendment or anyone else, full parity; but, Mr. President, I try to be a realist. I do not close my eyes to the fact that the Senate of the United States is not the only body which will be compelled to pass upon this amendment if it shall become law.

Last year the amendment carrying $225,000,000 for parity payments went to the body at the other end of the Capitol. Those who were opposed to that amendment opposed the idea of even permitting the conferees of the House to pass upon it in conference with the Senate, and insisted that it be kept in the custody of the House, and voted down forthwith on the House floor. The motion to send the bill to conference in order that the parity amendment should not be done to death then and there without any chance was adopted by a majority of one on the floor of the House of Representatives. A change of one vote on $225,000,000 parity money and there would have been no payments this year. After long and extended conferences, when the parity amendment was finally voted upon as a separate proposition in the House of Representatives, it was adopted by either 4 or 5 votes upon a roll call in that body.

As a friend of parity payments, I know that the one dead-sure and certain method of killing any appropriation whatever for parity this year is to send a $607,000,000 amendment to the House of Representatives and have it voted down on the floor of the House before it will ever be permitted to see its way into a conference room for discussion between conferees of this body and conferees on the part of the House. That is a definite way to fix it so the farmer will get nothing at all.

Mr. President, I do not question the motives of any Member of this body. I believe that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], and other Senators supporting this amendment are sincere. I have supported the legislation offered by the Senator from Oklahoma to fix artificially the price of farm commodities in order to give the farmers parity. I stand ready and willing to support artificial price-fixing legislation here and now. I will support taxes to raise money for full parity appropriations. But until that can be done I do not want to deny the American farmer the small measure of justice which is contained in the pending amendment by so loading down the proposal that it shall not have the slightest chance of ever being enacted into law or approved by the President of the United States.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BILBO. I have a sort of horse-trading instinct. Does not the Senator think that if the Senate should send to the House an amendment appropriating $607,000,000 we should come nearer getting a decent compromise than if we should start out with $212,000,000?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, if the Senate adopts an amendment carrying $607,000,000 for parity payments, there will be one vote taken on the floor of the House, and that one vote will be on the question of agreeing or disagreeing to the Senate amendment, and we shall come out of that vote without a single dime of appropriation for parity payments. The $212,000,000 amendment stands a far better chance. The House had the bill before it and did not allow a cent for parity. The vote will be close in the House on the committee amendment, and a larger amount will help the opposition. Half a loaf is better than no bread, and the surest way to undo all that has been done to obtain appropriations for parity is to overload this provision. Everyone familiar with the history of these parity amendments knows that neither the other body nor the President will approve any such amount and all parity payments will thereby be defeated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. BILBO. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Russell
Ashurst	Donahey	La Follette	Schwartz
Austin	Downey	Lee	Schwellenbach
Bailey	Ellender	Lodge	Sheppard
Bankhead	Frazier	Lucas	Shipstead
Barbour	George	Lundeen	Smathers
Barkley	Gerry	McCarran	Stewart
Bilbo	Gibson	McKellar	Taft
Bone	Gillette	McNary	Thomas, Idaho
Brown	Glass	Maloney	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Green	Mead	Thomas, Utah
Byrd	Gurney	Miller	Tobey
Byrnes	Hale	Minton	Townsend
Capper	Harrison	Murray	Tydings
Caraway	Hatch	Neely	Vandenberg
Chandler	Herring	Norris	Van Nuys
Chavez	Hill	Nye	Wagner
Clark, Idaho	Holman	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Clark, Mo.	Holt	Pepper	Wheeler
Connally	Hughes	Pittman	White
Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Reed	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I am not willing to be frightened into voting differently from what I believe in for fear the House is going to vote a certain other way. Every Member of the House goes before the country this year. The Members of that body are closer to that election now than they were when they voted on a previous occasion. Besides, the chairman of the Agricultural Committee of the House told me that the night they lost the Bankhead-Jones amendment 135 Democrats were absent, and that if he could have had a vote with a full House present he would have won.

I do not believe the House will vote down the amendment if it is adopted by the Senate. I do not think the statement that it is likely to do so gives us any reason whatever for voting differently than the way we believe is right.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma

[Mr. LEE] to the amendment reported by the committee. On that question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I understand, however, that if he were present and voting he would vote as I am about to vote. Therefore I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] is detained in one of the Government departments on matters pertaining to his State.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] are detained on business in Government departments.

I am advised that, if present and voting, the Senator from Pennsylvania, the Senator from North Carolina, and the Senator from South Carolina would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 56, as follows:

So Mr. LEE's amendment to the amendment reported by the committee was rejected.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the Senate Committee on Appropriations has added two amendments to the agricultural appropriation bill: One providing $212,000,000 for parity payments to producers of wheat, cotton, corn, rice, and tobacco; and the other adding $85,000,000 for the disposal of surplus commodities. The parity-payment appropriation is not recommended by the President in his Budget. The appropriation for the disposal of surplus commodities is recommended by the President in the sum of $72,000,000, and has been raised to $85,000,000.

It happens that the increase which is proposed today relates to agriculture, but its significance lies in the fact that it is the first substantial increase proposed to the Budget submitted by the President. If this is adopted there are many others which will follow, including the increase in flood-control appropriations, increases in relief appropriations, and others which are awaiting the disposition of this particular bill.

The able Senator from Georgia has stated that the Budget is by no means sacred, and that we are under no obligation to follow the direction of the Budget Bureau. He seems to disregard the fact that the Budget estimates are not those of the Budget Bureau, but are those of the President of the United States, who not only has approved the conclusions of the Budget Bureau, but no doubt had a hand in working them out. His message on the Budget shows a careful plan to avoid any increase in the debt limit during this session of Congress. When we exceed the Budget estimates, therefore, we disregard the recommendations of the President of the United States, and upset the fiscal plan which he has formulated.

Of course, we recognize the right and duty of Congress to consider appropriations and formulate its own conclusions. The significance of exceeding the President's Budget this year, however, is much greater than in ordinary times, because even if we follow the President's recommendations we will have a deficit for the current year, ending July 1, 1940, of approximately $4,000,000,000, and for the year ending July 1, 1941, approximately $3,000,000,000. The adoption of these amendments will increase the amount of the deficit by $225,000,000, and will make it even more difficult to return to any sound basis of financing the Federal Government.

The United States Government today is pursuing the deliberate policy of spending money vastly in excess of its income, and we must get away from that policy as quickly as possible. There is no more dangerous policy for any government to pursue. At the present time the United States is spending every 24 hours over $10,000,000 more than all the money it takes in in taxes. We have grown used to astronomical figures, but $10,000,000 is still a lot of money in anybody's language. It is as much as the total assessed value of many a small American city. I think, for example, of Athens, Ohio, or any other American city with a population of about 10,000 people. Three days of this spending consumes as much wealth as the value of all the farms and farm buildings in any typically rich agricultural county, such as those we have in Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois. Yet every day we are adding to the debt of the Government, and that means the debt of all the people, $10,000,000, on which we have to pay interest until we finally have to pay it back.

The President's Budget, submitted at the beginning of this session for the year ending July 1, 1941, sounded for a moment like economy, but an analysis of that Budget shows that its expenditures are actually greater by $30,000,000 than those recommended in the Budget a year ago. Decreases in relief, public works, and agricultural expenditures have been more than made up by increases, especially those for national defense. The new Budget proposes smaller expenditures, it is true, than the actual Government bill for 1940, but that is because Congress increased its appropriations over and above the 1940 Budget, as we are now proposing to do again. In 1939 the President estimated a deficit of $3,326,343,200. This year's estimate is $2,876,231,570. This reduction, however, is caused by an estimate of increased tax receipts. The able Senator from Tennessee pointed out on Monday that the receipts for March 15 may be as much as $100,000,000 more than was paid last year, but the Budget has already taken into account this increase by estimating total tax receipts approximately $500,000,000 more than last year.

The Budget message estimated the deficit at only $2,176,000,000, because the President proposes to transfer back from Government agencies $700,000,000 of capital which was advanced to them in recent years, and which it is said they do not need. There has been much discussion as to where this is to come from, and the able Senator from Virginia has been unable to get any details. On January 17, 1940, Mr. Jesse Jones, testifying before the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate, suggested that tentatively this money was supposed to come from the following sources:

Reconstruction Finance Corporation	$200,000,000
Home Owners' Loan Corporation	90,000,000
Agricultural agencies	385,000,000
The Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corporation	40,000,000
Total	715,000,000

In my opinion, an analysis of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation will show that its capital has been entirely lost, and certainly that no repayments should be made. I question very much whether the farm program can be properly carried out if the agricultural credit agencies are required to pay back $385,000,000. In any event, anything that is paid back is certainly not real income, will not recur in future years, and does not reduce the real deficit of approximately $3,000,000,000.

The President has recommended additional taxes in the sum of $460,000,000 without specifying the kind of tax. So far as I can see, there is not the slightest intention on the part of any Senator to increase taxes, so I think we can eliminate the possibility of any such increase taking place. The Finance Committee has not considered any such proposal, and I know of no definite proposal on the part of anyone to make such an increase. It was represented that these taxes were to pay increased national defense expenditures, but it appears that if this exact amount is levied it will hold the national debt on July 1, 1941, to $44,932,000,000, or just under the debt limit.

In short, the whole Budget is designed apparently for the purpose of avoiding an increase of the debt limit before the next election. The administration is terrifically concerned that a debate on raising the debt limit would center the attention of the people on the situation into which we have come, and the question whither we are going. The administration is afraid that if this question is made prominent in the campaign the people will realize the fatal end to its extravagant policies.

Congressional leaders have declared their opposition to levying additional taxes, which is not so easy to do, particularly in an election year. There is only one other way to avoid an increase in the debt limit and that is to reduce expenditures by $460,000,000. In my judgment, it can be done, and we thought it was being done until we ran up against this proposal to increase materially a number of the appropriations. I think it could be done if the Democratic leaders in Congress had the real cooperation of the President. But they do not have that cooperation, and his public statements since the Budget message show that he is again openly espousing the spending theory. He is determined that the Budget figures shall not be cut. He vigorously protested the elimination by Congress of two bureaus which the Government could well do without. He protested cuts in the agricultural appropriation bill. He has not made any protest whatever against budgetary increases initiated in Congress. We have, on the contrary, evidence that he would like to see the farm and public-works appropriations increased. There is not the slightest fear in Congress that he would veto such increases. In short, the President's Budget apparently must be taken not as his maximum but as a minimum below which he is vigilant to see that Government expenditures must not go.

The advocates of economy in Congress are hopelessly handicapped by the President's attitude. I fear that we have little chance of avoiding by legitimate means an increase in a debt limit already stupendous. We hear talk in Washington of alternative measures. Certain New Deal economists, it is said, hope to avoid that increase by issuing silver certificates. That would be currency inflation pure and simple. After all, the increase in the debt limit is a necessary result of the deficit policy. Until that is cured, the debt is bound to increase, limit or no limit. The responsibility for that increase, whenever it occurs, rests squarely on the spending policy of the present administration.

There is no evidence that a policy of Government spending has more than the most temporary effect on the economy of the country. Four billion dollars is a lot of money, but it is nothing compared to the increase in national income which could be produced by the encouragement of private industry, the investment of money in new enterprises, and the restoration of a free economy.

The difference between a $60,000,000,000 income and an $80,000,000,000 income, which is entirely conceivable, is five times the total of Government expenditures, and the exaggeration of the importance of Government expenditures was shown very clearly last year by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], who had been receiving testimony in the Temporary National Economic Committee.

We must restore a condition in which every man of energy and ambition in this country can see some chance of success if he starts out for himself and puts his time and money into building up his own business. Only in that way has this country increased its income and living standards for 150 years. Government spending is no substitute for that policy.

Sooner or later the policy must be abandoned; the Budget must be balanced. A continuous policy of unbalanced budgets has always resulted ultimately in inflation of the currency. The longer the Budget remains unbalanced the harder it is to balance, because the country adjusts itself to deficit spending as a drug addict adjusts himself to morphine. Vast groups come to rely on Government subsidy. Additional taxation becomes harder and harder to impose.

No one can say how much debt this country can safely stand, but there is a danger point somewhere, and it is determined as much by psychological causes as by figures. The burden of paying the interest and principal becomes greater and greater until finally the people ask why they should burden themselves with tremendous taxes to pay for the sins of past governments. Already many people are asking why we cannot pay our bills in greenbacks, which bear no interest, instead of with Government bonds.

When that point is reached—and it has been reached in every country which has failed to hold its expenses within its income—inflation of the currency has begun. That inevitably produces rapidly rising prices, which hit the poor man harder than the well-to-do.

It is all very well to say that we must expend money to help the poor, but the very expenditure of that money is likely to bring about a condition which will make them infinitely poorer. This makes the Government Budget still harder to balance, and more currency is printed. Prices continue to rise until, as in Germany, it costs $1,000 to buy a pair of shoes.

Of course, this means the wiping out of all savings. It reduces the men on fixed salaries to penury. A man still has dollars in the savings bank, but they are not worth anything. After life insurance has been paid for a lifetime, the widow will find that she gets a check for dollars, but the dollars will not pay the light bill. Of course, every endowed institution will be ruined, and universities can only be continued with aid and direction from the Federal Government. The only man who makes any profit out of this condition is the speculator. It means a complete break-down of the whole business system, a reduction in real income, and a depression which will make the depression of 1932 look like Coolidge prosperity.

The law of inflation simply means that we cannot have something for nothing. If we do not pay our bills as we go along in the normal manner, we pay them by the destruction of savings. Inflation would not only destroy the business system but it would almost certainly destroy our political system. There would be no alternative except a Government-regulated totalitarianism. It is no accident that dictators flourish in Russia and Germany. A dictator is simply a receiver, called in when people believe that their economic and political system is bankrupt. We cannot call in a receiver and retain the freedom and liberty of the individual, which are guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States.

The policy must be abandoned; the Budget must be balanced; the longer it remains unbalanced the harder it is to balance it. Under the conditions which exist today, therefore, it is peculiarly necessary that we do pay some attention, at least, to the matter of not exceeding the Budget estimates.

The Budget estimate of a $3,000,000,000 deficit is certainly bad enough, and we shoud hesitate a long time before we spend beyond it in any material amount. The only way to get back to a reasonable Budget is gradually to cut down expenditures in every field; to cut them down in the agricultural field as well as in every other field.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] says that the cuts are unevenly distributed, and that agriculture would be discriminated against unless the Budget estimates were followed. He produced certain figures that to me at least gave the impression that the agricultural appropriation was being reduced some 25 or 30 percent, whereas no one's else was being reduced at all.

I have before me the table on which the Senator's figures are based. I ask unanimous consent that it be inserted in the RECORD in connection with my remarks at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

[1] As of Jan. 4, 1940 (date of submission of 1941 Budget estimates to Congress).
[2] Exclusive of $60,000,000 to offset similar amount now in first deficiency appropriation bill, 1940.
[3] $50,000,000 for tenant purchase loans to be transferred from Reconstruction Finance Corporation.
[4] To be considered in connection with the emergency relief appropriation for 1941.
[5] $40,000,000 for rural electrification loans to be transferred from Reconstruction Finance Corporation.
[6] Includes the following 1940 appropriations: "Cooperative farm forestry"; "Cooperative distribution of forest planting stock"; and "Cooperative farm forestry extension work," combined in House bill.
[7] Authorization of $2,000,000, payable from Corporation funds. Appropriation of $119,599,918 made to Treasury Department for restoration of capital impairment of Commodity Credit Corporation as of Mar. 31, 1939, by Third Deficiency Appropriation Act, 1939.
[8] Excludes fiscal year 1940 appropriations to Secretary of the Treasury available for payment to Federal land banks on account of interest reduction, $29,700,000, and for payment to Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation on account of interest reduction, $7,425,000. No estimate for either purpose in 1941.
[9] Exclusive of flood control (transfer from War Department), $3,000,000 in 1940 and $1,500,000 in Budget estimate, 1941.
[10] Includes "Printing and binding, Rural Electrification Administration," $90,000 in 1940 and $100,000 in Budget estimate, 1941, combined in House bill.
[11] Excludes "Cooperative farm forestry extension work," $77,898 in 1940 and $78,098 in Budget estimate, 1941. (See note 6.)
[12] Excludes "Cooperative distribution of forest planting stock," $100,000 in 1940 and in Budget estimate, 1941. (See note 6.)
[13] Includes $143,000,000 for "Loans, relief, and rural rehabilitation" provided by Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1939.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator points out that the total spent last year for agriculture in the United States was $1,428,000,000. That was the total appropriation, including reappropriations and including all items. As far as I can discover, the only real reduction that is proposed as compared with last year's appropriation is the elimination of the $225,000,000 of parity payments. There are various other items of reduction, but all of them are only temporary, and all of them are coming back and are going to be appropriated again. There is $60,000,000, of course, in the deficiency bill, which we made available this year before the 1st of July, but which is there just the same. There is no reduction in that matter.

There is the provision for $40,000,000 for farm tenants made last year which we are transferring to the R. F. C., and we ask them to make the loans. There is $40,000,000 for the Rural Electrification Administration which is going to be spent in another way. Certainly those items are not being eliminated in any way.

Last year we appropriated $161,000,000 for loans for relief and rural rehabilitation, and the very statement which the Senator has furnished shows that it is proposed that that item be considered in connection with the relief bill when the relief bill comes before us. That item is not in any sense eliminated from the agricultural appropriations.

The only real reductions in this bill, totalling over $1,428,000,000 last year, is the $225,000,000 for parity payments, which is approximately 15 percent reduction on the agricultural bill.

I think everyone should be willing to participate in a reduction of expenditures. It is said that the cities are not participating, but they are. Two years ago, the year ending the 1st of last July, we spent $2,250,000,000 for W. P. A. appropriations. The Bureau of the Budget this year proposed for W. P. A. appropriations $1,125,000,000, exactly 50 percent reduction in 2 years as far as the appropriations for relief are concerned.

I do not think it is unreasonable, and I do not think the farmers whom I know object to some decrease in the agricultural appropriations.

The whole theory of government payments of subsidies is a dangerous theory. There was no possibility of escaping the necessity for relief payments or for farm subsidies. Nevertheless, under the policy of the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma, it may go to absurd limits. If we are going to try to subsidize all our citizens to bring them back to the condition we think they ought to be in, there is absolutely no limit to governmental expenditures. I believe that we can make a reduction in subsidy payments to different groups of the population, and I believe that all the farmers I know are as willing to have reductions made in respect to them as to anyone else.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio if he does not think the farmer is entitled to a price for his product which will give him a parity with industry?

Mr. TAFT. I certainly think we ought to work on a policy that will restore the farmer to a parity with industry. I question whether the method of doing so by direct payment of cash from the Federal Treasury will ever work for the farmer, or for any other group of the population which happens to be underprivileged. The amount involved in really reaching parity through that method is so tremendous that we simply cannot hope to go the full way. We simply have to recognize the fact that certain groups are in an unfortunate relation with other people, and to some extent help them out with subsidy payments. I am prepared to say that there should be a farm-subsidy payment, but, of course, we are making a $500,000,000 appropriation for soil conservation, which is a subsidy payment.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator must know that the $500,000,000 for soil-conservation payments is only paid out to the farmer for work that is done by the farmer in preserving the one priceless resource of this country, which is the fertility of the soil.

Mr. TAFT. Regardless of what the Senator may say, the soil-conservation payments are a subsidy to the farmer from the Federal Government. I think it is a very good form of subsidy, and as long as a subsidy should be paid, I am thoroughly in favor of soil-conservation payments. But to say that that is not a subsidy to the farmer, to say that when he gets his soil-conservation check he does not know he is getting a subsidy from the Federal Government, I say is contrary to the facts.

Mr. RUSSELL. It all depends on the Senator's definition of the word "subsidy." As a matter of fact, it is paid to the farmer for doing specific work to preserve the fertility of the soil; and if the farmer does not do the work and does not comply with all the requirements of the Department of Agriculture with respect to taking care of his land, preventing erosion, building terraces, plowing under green legumes, planting fine seed and soil-building legumes, he does not receive any conservation payments whatever. And the farmer, I imagine, feels after he has planted these legumes, after he has plowed them under, and after he has built up terraces under the broiling sun in accordance with the requirements of the Government, that he has earned some of these payments that are made to him.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the point I want to make is that I think a reduction from a billion four hundred million dollars to a billion two hundred million dollars is not an unreasonable reduction when compared with what we are asking other groups to take in the way of reduction.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator has the figures before him which were furnished by me which give the amounts with respect to the appropriations carried in the bill which came from the House for the current year as compared with those of previous years. The Senator said the only reduction was $225,000,000 for parity payments to farmers.

Mr. TAFT. No; plus the reduction in the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation payments, amounting to some $30,000,000. If I did not state that I should have said it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Some of us who are interested in the program of making home owners out of tenant farmers and sharecroppers think a reduction for that purpose in the Budget amounting to about 35 percent, in this agricultural appropriation, a considerable one.

Mr. TAFT. As I remember, the Senator from Georgia referred to a request to the R. F. C. to loan $50,000,000. Is that correct?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is correct as to the committee amendment. And the Senator from Georgia would vote for $100,000,000. I do not think there is a more important question before the people of the United States today. But the Senator's charge related to the Budget not having made any reduction in this bill, when the figures that he holds in his hands show that the Budget has reduced this specific item by 35 percent in the sum of $15,000,000 below the current year.

Mr. TAFT. That seems to have been cured by the committee of which the Senator from Georgia is a member. Nevertheless, if this particular amendment is adopted, and if the rest of the program goes through, the only decrease made is $225,000,000, and that is approximately 15 percent.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Did I understand the Senator from Ohio to say that he was in favor of parity payments to farmers?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I said that I was in favor of a subsidy to the farmer so long as his economic condition is as poor in relation to other groups in the population as it now is. As to the form of that subsidy, I would think that the best method of doing it is through soil-conservation payments rather than parity payments.

In the first place, the parity-payment law extends only to five commodities. It extends only to corn, wheat, cotton, rice, and tobacco. I think if you take the total production of those products you will find that it is very much less than one-half—not over a third of the total farm production of the United States. Parity payments on some of the other commodities were perhaps not possible. In any event it reaches only a very small proportion of the farmers. Furthermore, it has a rather extraordinary distribution as far as States are concerned. Last year, 1939, the State of Ohio, my own State, for instance, which is one of the four largest farm-producing States in the United States—I think it is either fourth or fifth in the list—received from parity payments $5,573,000.

Mr. ELLENDER. That must have been on wheat.

Mr. TAFT. I do not know what it is on. It is on corn and wheat. The amount is $5,573,000. On the other hand, the State of Iowa, which produces approximately the same amount, received $18,000,000, some three and one-half times what the State of Ohio received.

The State of Illinois received $13,000,000, as compared to $5,000,000 for Ohio.

The State of Wisconsin, which is a great agricultural State, but which happens to be apparently dependent on the dairy industry, received only a total of $1,412,000, compared to $18,000,000 for the State of Iowa.

A method of distributing subsidies to States which results in so gross an inequity between different States and different kinds of farmers does not strike me as a very desirable form of subsidy.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, the question I wanted to make clear and have answered, if possible, was this: Since the Senator thinks that the farmer ought to be paid parity payments, or subsidy payments, however we call them, so as to elevate his income in proportion to other groups, has the Senator any plan to offer by which that could be accomplished so as not only to provide for the five commodities which he has mentioned, but all farm commodities? Has the Senator any program by which that could be done?

Mr. TAFT. If we are going to add $225,000,000 I would prefer to add it to soil-conservation payments, and distribute it that way rather than through parity payments. It is not as if we were really paying parity. As pointed out by the Senator from Louisiana, and the Senator from Mississippi, we are very far, indeed, from getting anywhere near actual parity payments, even on these five crops, and if we undertook to do so with respect to all the crops our bill would be about $2,000,000,000.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, according to the figures presented by the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] a while ago, in addition to the $500,000,000 for conservation payments it would require a little over $600,000,000 to pay parity on those five commodities; that is, wheat, cotton, corn, rice, and tobacco. Now I imagine that to pay parity or a subsidy on all farm commodities, as the Senator has suggested, would probably require one and a half billion dollars, or perhaps $2,000,000,000. Since the Senator is in favor of paying parity or a subsidy to the farmers, would he be willing to add to the bill enough to pay parity by way of conservation payments, as suggested by him, or I may say, under the formula provided for by law?

Mr. TAFT. I think I have already said that my effort in speaking is to reduce the total amount of subsidies from approximately $800,000,000 to something like $600,000,000, if you include the Surplus Commodities Corporation purchases, and the soil conservation.

I should like to point out further the inequity between States that results from this parity payment. The State of Texas, which has approximately the same agricultural production as that of Ohio, received $28,000,000, whereas Ohio received $5,500,000. The State of Kentucky, which was recently referred to, receives a total of only $700,000 in all its parity payments. I have not analyzed the figures, but there must be something wrong with a system which brings about such gross inequity between different States in the United States. Texas is a fairly prosperous State. It so regards itself. Why should it receive five times what Ohio receives for approximately the same agricultural production?

The farm industry is generally depressed. We cannot say that one particular kind of farmer is badly off. All the farmers are badly off, particularly the dairy farmers and poultry farmers, who produce a very large proportion of the total amount of products They are just as badly off as the wheat farmer and the corn farmer. So I say that so far as methods of helping the farmer are concerned, they seem to me to have worked out in a rather inequitable way; and if the farmer is to be helped I should certainly prefer that he be helped through soil-conservation payments.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. Surely.

Mr. ELLENDER. Whether or not the method of the Senator from Ohio is followed, more money would necessarily be required so as to elevate the farmers' income in proportion to other groups. Whether the Senator's method is followed, or the method provided in the law is adhered to, additional funds would be required, would they not?

Mr. TAFT. No. I think that the $1,200,000,000 which the Budget Bureau in effect recommends, and which the carrying out of the present plan would effect if we eliminated this payment, is all we can safely afford for agricultural appropriations.

Mr. ELLENDER. How can the Senator reach the conclusion that more funds are not necessary when he admits that probably as much as $2,000,000,000 would be required to pay the farmers parity?

Mr. TAFT. Because I say the idea that we can put any group on a proper balance by direct payments from the Treasury is one which does not work. It has not worked in connection with relief. We undertook the theory of employing all the employables in the United States. We never have come anywhere near employing all the employables in the United States, and we never shall, because the bill, when we finally face it, is so great, and the obvious danger of piling up great Government expenditures when we have no method of raising the taxes to pay them is so great, that even this extravagant Congress and this extravagant administration shrink from the logic of that particular view.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TAFT. Surely.

Mr. ELLENDER. I have in my hand a copy of the recent hearings on the extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. On page 1717 of volume 2 I note an exhibit with the following heading: Some Examples of Tariff Rates on Articles Bought by Farm Families. (Rates in Tariff Act of 1930.) I notice the item, "felt hats, men's, $1.25 per dozen, and 25 percent ad valorem," and many others.

What distinction does the Senator draw between a tax of that kind, which is collected directly by the manufacturer, and one which is collected by the Government and then paid over to the farmers by the Government?

Mr. TAFT. The Senator is trying to raise the question as to whether or not the tariff is a Government subsidy, is he not?

Mr. ELLENDER. Of course it is. I admit that it is a Government subsidy. The only difference between a tariff and a tax which the Government imposes and collects and then pays to the farmer is that in the case of the tariff the manufacturer collects it directly, and in the other case the Government collects it and pays it to the farmer upon complying with certain regulations. In either case the ultimate consumer pays the bill.

Mr. TAFT. That is a very essential difference. It is infinitely more dangerous to have to pay money out of the Federal Treasury—particularly if we cannot raise it—than it is to develop a device which will raise prices in such a way as to help the industry. Incidentally, the tariff does not help the manufacturer alone. It helps the whole neighborhood in which the particular business is carried on. I say that such a device can be developed. I think it could be developed along the line of the McNary-Haugen Act, for example, or other such devices. It seems to me that perhaps some of the devices proposed by the administration could carry out that theory. However, in my opinion we must get away from the idea that we can carry it out by direct Government appropriations from the Treasury.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further.

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Does the Senator think that the adjustment of the farmers' income with other groups can be accomplished by placing a processing tax on farm commodities?

Mr. TAFT. I do not think a processing tax is the best way to do it.

Mr. ELLENDER. What I am trying to find out from the Senator is some method by which it can be done. Has he any suggestions to make?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I shall not make a speech on the whole subject of agriculture this afternoon. I am trying to point out that this particular method does not seem to me to be very effective. We must continue it; but, as in the case of relief appropriations, I think we should gradually work toward a reduction of direct Federal doles for any group of the population, because, particularly if we do not raise the money, we shall ultimately make these people pay themselves. We cannot escape the fact that this country and all its citizens will have to pay the debt incurred to make these payments.

Mr. ELLENDER. Will the Senator permit me to insert in the RECORD at this point, following my remarks, the table to which I have just referred? It is very brief.

Mr. TAFT. Certainly.

Mr. ELLENDER. I thank the Senator. This table demonstrates, to some extent, the tariffs imposed and collected by manufacturers on products made from raw materials grown on the farm. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point the table to which I have just referred.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Some examples of tariff rates on articles bought by farm families (rates in Tariff Act of 1930)

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I have almost concluded everything I intended to say. The main point I wish to make is that it seems to me that the elimination of parity payments by the Budget Bureau and by the House of Representatives is justified. The elimination of parity payments represents a reduction in agricultural appropriations of approximately 15 percent. That is considerably less than the reduction in relief appropriations. It is a step in the right direction, one which we can take with sympathy to the farmer as well as with sympathy to the entire population.

As to the surplus-commodity appropriations, I think we have a great problem in the development of surpluses which we had not counted on, particularly in view of the war. So far as I am concerned, I regard the situation as an emergency; and I intend to vote for the surplus-commodity appropriation. Incidentally, the stamp plan is a tremendous improvement over the former method of distributing agricultural surpluses. I think we should recognize that, no matter what method we follow, we shall still be giving away Government money. The surplus-commodity program is a direct payment of Government money of $85,000,000; but I think that we have an emergency in the development of surpluses, and I believe we should appropriate at least $72,000,000, if not the entire $85,000,000, for the development of the surplus-commodity program.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, after the speech of the Senator from Ohio, in general I am somewhat chagrined by the fact that he approves the item on which I am about to speak. I refer to the surplus-commodities appropriation in the bill. I wish to refer for just a moment to some of the things which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] has said.

I could not tell from the Senator's speech whether or not he is in favor of a tax bill at this session. I should be very glad to have that information from the Senator.

Mr. TAFT. I did not hear the question.

Mr. CONNALLY. I could not tell from the Senator's speech whether or not he favors a tax bill at this session of Congress. I believe he said he did not know of any other Senator who favored a tax bill, and I am curious to know whether or not the Senator from Ohio favors a tax bill.

Mr. TAFT. I think there might profitably be some revision of the tax system which would produce increased taxes.

Mr. CONNALLY. What would the Senator tax?

Mr. TAFT. I do not think I have to develop a tax program for the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. Not at all. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator made that answer. It illustrates how objectors, obstructionists, and those who are not in favor of something, when called upon to offer some solution themselves, inadvertently leave the solution at home.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I think we must finally impose a tax bill to balance the Budget. I think we must ultimately have some increase in taxes. However, we should first reduce expenses. I say that until a thorough exploration of that question has been made, so long as we continue to increase expenses I think it is almost hopeless to undertake an additional tax bill at this session.

Mr. CONNALLY. I suspected that the Senator would postpone his tax bill until some future date, in view of concomitant transactions in the outside world. However, Mr. President, of course we shall have to raise some more taxes.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. I will say to the Senator that last year I voted for the La Follette bill, and I should be very glad to vote for it again this year. In fact, I shall be glad to support any bill which is proposed by the Finance Committee, of which I am not a member. I have not studied the question.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Finance Committee did not present the La Follette bill last year, so the Senator is not doing anything for the Finance Committee when he says that he supported that bill.

However, I am not surprised at the Senator from Ohio favoring the La Follette bill because the La Follette bill spreads out the base and brings into the tax system many people whose incomes are small, and who probably cannot very well pay any additional Federal taxes, because they are already bearing the burden of State and county taxes. The tax collector always finds the little fellow with a home or personal property, and he has to pay a tax in the State and county. The people of small and average incomes already bear the burden of State, municipal, and local taxation.

Of course, we shall have to levy more taxes at some time or other. We must pay these obligations. I shall say to the Senator from Ohio that he need not be greatly disturbed about that question.

Take the other great nations of the world. Even before the war came along, in Great Britain and France the tax systems were extricating from the taxpayers of those nations incomparably higher taxes than the people in America were bearing, and at some time in the future we shall have to raise taxes and pay off some of the obligations we have incurred.

We have heard much talk about the Budget. I presume all Senators have heard the old song, one line of which goes:

Everybody talkin' 'bout heaven ain't gwine there.

What kind of a Budget do we want? Do we want an annual Budget, figured up on the 1st day of January, to see how much money we are to spend, or already have spent, and how much taxes to levy to fit it?

We cannot do that. What do the businessmen in Ohio do? Do they not have to borrow money at the banks? Why do they borrow it? Why do they not balance their budgets and spend not to exceed what they take in? Then they would not need to borrow any money at the bank. The great banking institutions of Cleveland, Cincinnati, Dayton, and all the great cities of Ohio flourish because businessmen and industrialists cannot balance their budgets, and do not want to balance their budgets. When they are making money they pay off their debts; and when times are hard and they are not making any profits they borrow some money on a bond issue to tide them over. Ultimately, of course, they balance their budgets; but they do not have any 60-minute budget system.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Does the Senator know of any business enterprise which has failed to balance its budget for 10 years which has not gone into bankruptcy?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not think I know of any business enterprise which has ever had an instantaneously, exactly balanced budget in its history. I venture to say that the Senator from Ohio has not balanced his budget in a long time. His income varies, as well as his obligations and outlays. That is true with all of us.

Talk about balancing the Budget. Many persons who are talking about balancing the Budget do not know anything about either budgets or balance. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Does the Senator realize that for the past 10 years the Federal Government has spent $3,000,000,000 a year more than it has taken in?

Mr. CONNALLY. I have not figured it up. I do not think that is true.

Mr. TAFT. Does the Senator realize the size of the continuing deficit?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator heard me say a while ago that we shall have to raise taxes. We shall have to raise them next year. That is as early as the Senator from Ohio wants them raised, because he has already said that he does not favor raising taxes now—at least, not until after November. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAFT. The Senator is referring this situation to the temporary deficit of some business. I do not think the Senator quite understands that for 10 years the Federal Government has failed to pay its expenses, and that the deficit has been gradually increasing.

Mr. CONNALLY. Why does the Senator want to limit it to 10 years? The Budget was not balanced during the last year of the Hoover administration. It went in the hole $5,000,000,000. Why does not the Senator mention that fact? Make it 11 years, and I will agree to it.

Mr. TAFT. Ten years will do for an illustration. The Senator's party has been in power for only 7 years.

Mr. CONNALLY. Well, all right. Of course, we have not balanced the Budget. Why have we not done so? Because the world has been going through an unprecedented economic situation. Everybody knows that, unless it is the Senator from Ohio. He may not have experienced any financial distress during the past 10 years but all the rest of us here have.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Ohio stated to the Senator from Texas that he did not have any program for raising revenue. He made a speech over the radio, however, in which he had a program to balance the Budget, and that program was to reduce every Bureau by 25 percent.

Up to this time we have passed the emergency supplemental appropriation bill, carrying $252,000,000; the independent offices appropriation bill, carrying $1,120,000,000; the urgent deficiency bill; the Treasury and Post Office bill; the State, Commerce, and Justice bill; and the first deficiency bill. Has the Senator from Texas heard the Senator from Ohio move to reduce a single appropriation in any one of the bills that have passed the Senate?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas does not recall any such action. In all candor, though, the Senator from Texas has not been here constantly.

Mr. BYRNES. I will say that the Senator from Ohio is a member of the Appropriations Committee. As a member of the Appropriations Committee I cannot recall his ever moving to reduce by one dollar any one of these bills, and certainly not upon the floor of the Senate; yet he quarrels about balancing the Budget and never raises his voice in this session against an appropriation until the agricultural appropriation bill is before the Senate.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Ohio to answer the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TAFT. I just want to call attention to the fact that in the case of the independent offices appropriation bill, I voted against the whole bill. I voted for numerous efforts to reduce the bill. I made a motion in the committee to refer the bill back to the subcommittee with instructions to reduce the whole bill by 10 percent or 20 percent; I forget the exact amount.

The Senator is simply inaccurate in his statement that I have not at any time proposed economies if I could see where they could be made.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Ohio says he made a motion in committee to refer a bill back to a subcommittee with instructions to reduce it by 10 percent or 20 percent; and, really, it does not make any difference to him which it was. To him, there is no difference between 10 and 20 percent; but in a speech he said that every bureau ought to be reduced by 25 percent. Then in committee he said he made a motion, and I think he did. The Senate and the country may know whether or not it was made in good faith when he does not even know whether he wanted to reduce the bill by 10 or 20 percent. But certainly on the floor of the Senate these bills have passed, and the Senator from Ohio has not made a motion to reduce a single bill by $1 so far as I can recall.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I think if the Senator——

Mr. CONNALLY. Just a minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let the Senator from South Carolina conclude his remarks first.

Mr. BYRNES. If the Senator says he voted against the independent offices bill, of course I accept his statement as absolutely correct. If he made any motion to reduce that bill, I have no recollection of it, and I should be glad to have him refresh my recollection on the subject; but his program is to reduce by 25 percent every bureau of the Government, and most of the bills have already been reported.

Mr. CONNALLY. I now yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I think I stated that I did move to reduce appropriations on the floor of the Senate in connection with that bill, and I voted against the bill when the Senate refused to do it.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I said that the Senator having made that statement, I agree to it; and therefore there was one bill—one bill—in which he did vote to make some reduction; but his program, announced to the country, of reducing by 25 percent the appropriations of every department of the Government, he has done nothing to accomplish at this session of the Congress.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator. The significant thing about it all is that the Senator from Ohio voted against the whole independent offices appropriation bill. We can balance the Budget in a short time if we just lop off these departments and appropriate nothing at all for them. The Senator from Ohio did not favor appropriating anything for the independent offices. That is the method of the Senator from Ohio to balance the Budget—not to give the independent offices any money at all. We can square up the debt pretty fast if we do that, including the veterans. I believe the independent offices bill includes the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I was about to suggest to the Senator from Texas that the largest single item in the independent offices appropriation bill is the appropriation for the Veterans' Administration, whereby the Government undertakes to take care of those who have been wounded or maimed while in the country's service; and, of course, if the Senator from Ohio had prevailed in that vote, all compensation to all disabled veterans throughout the entire United States would have been summarily stopped.

Mr. CONNALLY. To be sure. The Senator from Ohio is against the continuance of the independent offices appropriations for the next fiscal year. He does not want any money spent under the independent offices. I can envisage the Senator from Ohio now, on his way out to Illinois, glancing out of a car window and seeing some maimed and crippled veteran hobbling along the highway and saying, "There is the place to balance the Budget. We will cut off the independent offices appropriation entirely for 1941." [Laughter.]

Mr. RUSSELL. A man who probably had just been thrown out of some veterans' hospital that had been compelled to close, and who had to be carried out in the street on a cot and left to the mercy of disease and the elements.

Mr. CONNALLY. I can envisage the Senator from Ohio going along the highway in Illinois—I think they have some veterans' hospitals out there—and glancing out of the window and saying, "Now, there is an unnecessary expense—that veterans' hospital. Why should the taxpayers be made to go down into their pockets and pay out money to maintain a hospital to treat the maimed and the wounded of the World War? We ought not to have had any World War." [Laughter.]

Mr. President, what I rose to speak about was not the Senator from Ohio, however.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Did not the Senator from Ohio have a good bit to say here against the bill to appropriate money for the purchase of critical war materials?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not recall that. I like to keep up with the Senator from Ohio, but he makes so many speeches that I have not time to read all of them. [Laughter.] I am charmed by the Senator from Ohio here in the Chamber, and then I go down to my room at night and buy the afternoon newspaper, and read a thrilling speech in the afternoon newspaper; and then at night, when I am undertaking to get some musical or art or religious program, I am interrupted by hearing the Senator from Ohio on the radio. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I merely want to call attention to the fact that the Senator from Ohio stated to me a few moments ago that he had voted against the passage of the independent offices appropriation bill. I know he was sincere in making the statement; but the RECORD shows that there was no roll call on the passage of the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. That does not prove anything. The Senator from Ohio may have said, in a low tone, "No." [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The veterans and others who were concerned in the independent offices appropriation bill certainly ought to be thankful to the Senator from Ohio that he did not pursue his opposition to the independent offices bill to the extent of demanding a roll call, or even a division.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is true, of course. If the Senator had spoken, and then asked for a roll call, it probably would have defeated the independent offices appropriation bill, and then we should have had to have all these veterans' hospitals dismantled.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio did not ask for any roll call in the committee, either; and he had not the remotest idea that his motion was going to be adopted.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. If I correctly recall, last year we voted $550,000,000 for airplanes which probably will be obsolete by the end of this year. If my memory serves me, the Senator from Ohio raised no question about that measure, and voted for the airplanes.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from Idaho for that contribution. I am sure the Senator from Ohio did not vote against national defense. I am glad he is right now and then. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio devoted most of his address to denouncing subsidies. Let us admit that under the doctrines of Adam Smith subsidies are unsound; but we have not been paying any attention to Adam Smith in that respect for 150 years. The first Congress that met, as has been so vividly and eloquently pointed out now and then by the eminent Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], enacted a tariff bill, did it not?

Mr. ASHURST. That is true. It was the first bill it enacted.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator further advises me that it was the first bill passed, 150 years ago, in 1789. The Government that was installed in 1789 passed a tariff bill. Is not that a bounty? Why, what kind of a process is it? I hope the Senator from Ohio will continue to look at his newspaper, but still listen to me. What is the advantage of a tariff? The advantage of a tariff is to give the producer here at home, the manufacturer, a bounty as against the foreigner, to make it easier for the domestic manufacturer to sell his products in the domestic market. Now, what is an export bounty? That is what I want to talk about in a moment. An export bounty is simply the reverse of that proposition. The man who produces here at home something which cannot be protected by a tariff has just as much right to say to his Government, "You will have to equalize conditions for my market abroad. You will have to give me a little bounty so that I can compete with the foreigner in his country, just as you give this other man a tariff to keep the foreigner from competing with him over here."

Is there any difference in the justice of those propositions? Why, of course not. I dare say the Senator from Ohio is not going to advocate repealing all tariffs. He would not get anywhere if he did. All of us vote for some tariffs now and then, when we find it economically sound. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. HILL. The Senator means, economically sound at home. [Laughter.] Is not that true?

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator for expressing his own viewpoint. I was making a general statement that is applicable to all of us.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Texas neglected to say what he might well have said, that in Mr. Hamilton's famous paper on manufactures he pointed out that the antidote to the industrial tariff was a bounty to the producers of raw materials—that is to say, the farmers.

Mr. CONNALLY. Absolutely. I thank the Senator from Georgia for that suggestion. Mr. Hamilton, when he was Secretary of the Treasury, in his famous report as Secretary of the Treasury on manufactures and industry in the United States, advocated the payment by the Government of an export bounty on raw materials which could not be amply protected with a tariff; and Senators will recall that in 1929, when we had pending here in the Senate, under Mr. Hoover, the export-debenture amendment to the old farm bill, the late Senator from Idaho, Mr. Borah, made an elaborate speech in advocacy of it; and frequent reference was made in the debates to the doctrines of Mr. Hamilton in that regard. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] made an address along the same line; and, if I mistake not, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] voted, at least—I do not know whether or not he spoke; I am sure he did not, because, if he had, I would have remembered it—on that side of the question.

If we are going to have subsidies, and we have them all around us, why does the Senator from Ohio ignore all these other subsidies—subsidies to the shipping interests, and subsidies to the manufacturing interests, and subsidies to the other great industrial interests? The Senator from Ohio walks along and ignores all of them; and yet when he sees some farmer with the seat of his pants out and his hair sticking up through a hole in his hat, he says, "There is the fellow you are giving a bounty to, and I am going to take it away from him. We must balance the Budget. We must balance the Budget."

Some years ago we adopted, as an amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Act, what is known as section 32 of that act, which forms the basis of this item in the appropriation bill called Disposal of Surplus Commodities. I had the honor of offering that amendment on the floor of the Senate; and it was predicated upon the very theory of using a portion of the tariff revenues to turn the thing around and pay a bounty or subsidy on agricultural exports. So it was provided in section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act that 30 percent of all tariff revenues should be devoted to that purpose. We wanted more, but the Secretary of Agriculture would not agree to more. Those tariff revenues are wrung out of the consumer of manufactured products, extracted by measures just as forcible as the tax gatherer's. We took for that purpose 30 percent of all these tariff revenues, these bounties; and in the case of the tariff the bounties amount to many times what the revenues are, because they result in all domestic producers getting their revenue here before any foreign commodities come in.

We take 30 percent of that and turn it over to the Secretary of Agriculture, to do what with it? To stimulate the exportation of agricultural commodities and to dispose of the agricultural surpluses here at home. So that this bill, carrying out that doctrine, appropriates $85,000,000 from the Treasury, and the revenues from the tariffs amount to $100,000,000, so that this particular item carries $185,000,000 for the export subsidies, and then for the disposition of surplus commodities at home.

I wish to say that the State of Ohio, and the city of Cleveland, and other great cities, have been the beneficiaries of this Surplus Commodities Corporation, probably to an extent to which no other State in the Union has been the beneficiary, because the relief agencies in Cleveland, for instance, were broken down, and the Department of Agriculture, through the Surplus Commodities Corporation, has placed at their disposal, I am informed, a very substantial amount of agricultural food products, paid for out of the sum which is now damned and denounced as a subsidy. Yes; it is a subsidy, a very small subsidy.

What has happened in the case of cotton, in which the Senator from Texas is particularly interested? The export subsidy on cotton and cotton products was announced on July 23, 1939, to be effective on July 27. The rate of payment was set at 1.5 cents per pound of lint cotton, net weight, with comparable payments on the cotton content of cotton products exported. It was announced that payments would be made on cotton exported on or before June 30, 1940, with a provision made for payments on cotton exported through July 31, 1940, if the cotton is sold for export on or before June 30, 1940. A total of slightly over $41,000,000 was allocated for these payments.

By November 30, exporters had shipped or declared for shipment 4,332,000 bales of cotton. It was evident from this figure that the available funds were about three-fourths gone, and a further rush of export declarations followed. On December 5 the Secretary announced a reduction in the rate of payment effective December 6 to 0.75 cent per pound, to enable payments on a larger number of bales. Further heavy declarations in the next 2 days brought the total since inauguration of the program to 5,150,000 bales, or about 600,000 bales in 2 days. On December 7 it was again necessary to reduce the rate, and it was cut to 0.4 cent effective December 8. On December 11, the rate was again cut to 0.2 cent and on January 30 the rate was reduced to zero. Sales and deliveries as of January 29 were 6,214,000 bales, which included the equivalent of 333,000 bales of cotton products. The rate on cotton products was continued, and it was announced that funds remaining were sufficient to make payments on cotton products equivalent to approximately 70,000 bales.

After the subsidy was announced American cotton declined in foreign markets and the price relationship was favorable for increased sales for export. In August 1939 Indian Oomra No. 1 fine was 72.6 percent of American Middling at Liverpool. By January 1940 this percentage had increased to 83.1. Since January there has been some decline in the price of Indian compared with American cotton. These price relationships for past seasons and recent months are shown in some statistics supplied me by the Department of Agriculture which, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Prices at Liverpool as percentage of American Middling, 7/8 inch

Item	Indian Oomra No. 1 Fine	Egyptian F. G. F. Uppers	Brazilian Fair Sao Paulo
10-year average, 1927-36	78.0	117.9	97.7
1936-37	74.4	119.0	96.6
1937-38	77.1	126.7	98.7
1938-39	70.4	116.5	94.9
1939-40:
August	72.6	111.7	92.2
September	76.3	111.4	95.5
October	78.9	112.9	98.1
November	81.2	108.9	99.4
December	82.7	111.7	100.0
January	83.1	118.2	100.5
February	80.8	124.9	101.5
Mar. 1	81.4	126.2	102.5
Mar. 8	80.9	126.1	100.6
Mar. 15	82.4	133.7	101.3

Exports for the first 7 months of this season are twice as large as a year ago. The following table shows exports for 7 months, and for the season for the past 10 years:

Exports of American cotton

Year	7 months, August-February	Season, August-July
	Bales	Bales
1930-31	4,912,000	6,760,000
1931-32	5,925,000	8,708,000
1932-33	5,597,000	8,119,000
1933-34	5,548,000	7,534,000
1934-35	3,255,000	4,798,000
1935-36	4,410,000	5,973,000
1936-37	3,921,000	5,440,000
1937-38	4,231,000	5,598,000
1938-39	2,456,000	3,327,000
1939-40	4,916,000

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, indications at this time point to total exports for this season of approximately six and one-half million bales, exclusive of cotton shipped under the rubber-cotton barter agreement. About 240,000 bales have been shipped to date under the barter deal, but shipments are not being made at the present time, due to lack of freight space.

Exports of American cotton during the first 6 months of the present war and the 6 months preceding the war, as compared to the same figures in 1914–15 season, are shown in the following table:

Date	Exports	Percentage increase
	Bales
Before and after start of World War:
February 1914 to July 1914	2,652,400
August 1914 to January 1915	3,910,800	+47.4
Before and after start of present war:
March 1939 to August 1939	1,090,100
September 1939 to February 1940	4,698,800	+331.0

Mr. President, these statistics reveal that by means of the subsidy the price of American cotton in the foreign countries, in the currencies of those countries, was reduced as compared to foreign cotton, and as a result we were able to sell American cotton successfully in competition with Indian cotton and Brazilian cotton and other foreign growths which we have been fearing would destroy the market for American cotton. These tabulations show the variations and the fluctuations in the percentages of foreign cotton compared with American cotton, and also reveal the volume of exports brought about by reason of the subsidy.

Therefore, Mr. President, this particular surplus-commodities appropriation on page 83 is a wise one. We have not reached it in consideration of the bill for a vote, but the Senator from Ohio, always looking ahead, brought the matter up before we really reached it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not like to interrupt the Senator from Texas in his very able remarks, but I would not want to have the impression left that these export subsidy payments were applied only with respect to cotton.

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, no.

Mr. RUSSELL. I might point out to the Senator from Texas that $35,500,000 was used for the encouragement of wheat and flour exports, and also the exports of tobacco, fruits, nuts, and butter, which received the benefit of the export-bounty program. Therefore it was calculated to be beneficial to a number of commodities, one of which, at least, is produced in every agricultural section of the country.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator. In the beginning of my remarks I stated that I was mentioning cotton because I was particularly concerned with cotton. But I do thank the Senator from Georgia because he discloses that these export subsidies are applied to a large number of other agricultural commodities. I think the subsidy was applied to wheat before it was applied to cotton. Wheat was the first commodity, I believe, to which it was applied.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In addition to the raw cotton figures which the Senator has pointed out, let me bring to his attention the fact that almost double the amount of cotton goods was exported, on which an export bounty was paid.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; when the export bounty was applied to cotton, of course a similar bounty, graduated according to valuations, was placed on cotton textiles and manufactured cotton goods, so that we have also exported cotton goods and textiles to quite an extent. Mr. President, I hope this demonstration from the record of the advantage of the export subsidy in connection with the disposal of agricultural surpluses will have some effect upon the mind of the Senator from Ohio, and cause him not to be too hard on the American farmer when it comes to these so-called subsidies.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I think the Senator from Texas misunderstood my position. I did not oppose export subsidies, I did not even oppose subsidies in general. So far as the export subsidies are concerned, I thoroughly agree with the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator. I have never had as rapid and as quick a convert in my life as I have had in the case of the Senator from Ohio, and I thank him very much.

Mr. TAFT. I was trying to point out to the Senator that I am not a convert, that the Senator from Texas was advocating exactly what I had advocated in my speech, so far as subsidies are concerned. I merely pointed out the danger of that policy, and the wisdom of holding down the subsidies, so far as cash payments are concerned, to as reasonable a sum as possible.

Mr. CONNALLY. I agree with those glittering generalities of the Senator from Ohio, of course. I should be glad if we did not have to have subsidies. I should be glad myself if some people could do as old Adam did. He would walk out in the orchard and pluck off some fruit, and go back and lie down in the shade until late in the evening, and then go out and patter around in the limpid brook. That would be wonderful. But the devil of it is that we do not live in that kind of a world. Adam made a mistake, and we have been suffering ever since because of his indiscretion. [Laughter.] I wish we did not have any subsidies; but, so long as we are subsidizing some industries, justice requires that we give the other industries, which are supplying those subsidies, at least a little refund in the form of a subsidy.

Everyone admits that agriculture has always borne the burden of the tariff. It was intended in the beginning that it should, because this is an agricultural nation, and the early statesmen wanted to build up industry. So they said, "Now, if we are to have any industry, we will have to make the farmers pay some duties in order to encourage and stimulate industry and manufacturing," and the farmers have been bearing that burden for 150 years.

It has only been since the present administration came into power that we have had any agricultural subsidies. The senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] introduced, during the old administration, the famous McNary-Haugen bill, which contained at least some basis of the subsidy idea; but it never got by. None of his Presidents would approve it. So it has only been under this administration that agriculture has been getting back a little of the accumulations and the tontine arrangements and the endowment policies on which they have been paying for 150 years. They are just getting back a little dividend on what their grandfathers and their great-grandfathers and their great-great-grandfathers have paid in the form of tariff taxes; and because, with agriculture prostrate, some of the folks during the depression have been getting back a little dividend, a small fraction of the dividends on what the generations before them had paid in the form of tariff bounties, people get excited and want to balance the Budget all of a sudden.

Mr. President, my great-great-grandfather lived in Virginia and North Carolina. He was a farmer and he paid tariff taxes. My great-grandfather was another farmer. He moved from North Carolina to Georgia, and he paid tariff taxes. Three or four years ago I went to Georgia and found my grandfather's place, and he had been a farmer, and he had paid tariff taxes. My father went to Texas in 1859, where he was a farmer, and he did not have any slaves, having left those back in Georgia, and he had to dig the taxes out of the ground with his own sweat and his own blood, and he paid tariff taxes.

Mr. President, we demand that farmers get back a little nibble, just a nibble, just a little dribble, just a little piece of these tariff bounties we have been paying, because if we ever needed them, we need them now.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. I am in thorough sympathy with what the Senator is saying, and I feel that funds should be provided so as to give to the farmer his just share of the national income. He should be placed on a parity with other groups that receive subsidies via the tariff.

I was very much interested in the figures presented by the Senator with respect to export subsidies. As I recall, $41,000,000 were allocated for export subsidy payments and the expenditure of that sum helped to increase our exports of cotton in excess of 6,000,000 bales.

In connection with the expenditure of that sum let me call the Senate's attention to the amount paid by the consumers of cotton goods imported in this country in 1928. I quote from a compilation made by the United States Tariff Commission in 1930 entitled, "Comparison of Rates of Duty in the Tariff Act of 1930 and in the Tariff Act of 1922." Bear in mind that the sum I am going to quote represents tariff subsidies paid on imported manufactured cotton goods for the protection of manufacturers of cotton goods in this country. The value of dutiable imports for consumption in 1928 of manufactured cotton goods was $48,300,609 and the duties thereon aggregated $19,451,364, or the equivalent ad valorem rate of 40.27 percent. Think of it, Senators. I am not advocating that manufacturers be not protected, but I merely cite this instance to show the disadvantage in which the farmer, the producer of the raw product, is placed. He is compelled to pay a subsidy to the manufacturer of his own raw product. I could cite numerous instances, all of which go to show that the farmer receives little protection and he is severely handicapped by having to pay subsidies on what he consumes. Some method must be devised to afford farmers like protection, otherwise he is bound to remain in distress.

I thank the Senator for his kind indulgence.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator for his contribution.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I hope we can get a vote on the parity payment at this time.

GRAND RIVER DAM, OKLA.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, under the threadbare excuse of fighting for States' rights the Governor of Oklahoma has been fighting and is now fighting the battles of the utilities. Some of us have been fighting to get public power at cheap rates for the benefit of the people. But Governor Phillips has opposed the two hydroelectric power projects in Oklahoma from the day of his inauguration as Governor. However, he has been pretending to oppose these two dams on the flimsy excuse of upholding States' rights. But at last he has come out from behind that smoke screen and declared openly that he is fighting on the side of the private utilities.

I wish to read a quotation from him appearing in the Oklahoma City Times, published in Oklahoma City, the issue of March 13, 1940, the orange-colored edition. The Governor is quoted as saying:

> I am not going to spend a huge pile of Oklahoma money rebuilding roads for a dam that will compete with a private power corporation.

The next sentence in the article reads as follows:

> The Public Service Co. at Tulsa serves the area in which the dam is located.

Mr. President, we in Oklahoma appreciate what the Federal Government has done and is doing there. The action of the Governor does not represent the attitude of the people of Oklahoma. They appreciate what the Federal Government has done. They are looking forward eagerly to the construction and completion of this dam, and are not in sympathy with the Governor in his effort to prevent it from being completed. He has but one purpose, as he has had all the time, in stopping the construction of these two dams. He is fighting the battles of the private utilities. Regardless of what the Governor says about paying for highways, or rights of the State, these charges are intended to cloud the real issue, which is power.

There is but one question at issue in this controversy, and that is whether or not the people of Oklahoma shall have cheap electricity.

I want them to have it, but Governor Phillips is opposed to a "dam that will compete with a private power corporation."

PROPOSED MERGER OF WESTERN UNION AND POSTAL TELEGRAPH & CABLE CO.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I do not want to delay a vote on the important pending amendment. It will take me only a minute to direct the attention of the Senate to another matter.

Some time ago a special committee of the Senate was appointed to investigate the affairs of the Postal Telegraph Co. The Federal Communications Commission has reported to Congress that it is necessary for defense and for other public reasons that there be a merger of Western Union and Postal Telegraph & Cable Co.

If there is to be such a merger, it is important that it be in the interest of the rate-paying public, the employees of the company, and the legitimate investors who received the stock of the reorganized telegraph company for their bonds and, conversely, that it not be for the benefit of bankers, financial lawyers, and stock manipulators.

Obviously there is no point in trying to protect the public interest, the interests of labor, and the interests of legitimate investors, after professional reorganizers and stock speculators, with the aid of lawyers, have so manhandled the situation as to leave those interests at their mercy. That is the difficulty with most investigations. They are in the nature of locking the barn after the horse has been stolen.

In this prospective telegraph merger, we have an opportunity to protect the public interest now.

That opportunity is present now because the reorganization proceeding is still open in the Federal Court for the Southern District of New York and the Securities and Exchange Commission has been invited in to make an investigation so it may advise the court concerning the distribution of funds of the Postal Telegraph & Cable Co. amounting to $625,000, which the reorganizers now claim for their fees.

If the investigation of the Securities and Exchange Commission is to be confined to mere arithmetical computations, a valuable opportunity will be lost.

On the other hand, if the Securities and Exchange Commission develops this situation to the full, it should disclose facts which will become important in protecting the public interest in connection with the proposed merger while the plan of reorganization is still before the court, for under the Chandler Act Congress has provided that a plan may be amended in the interests of security holders, without formalities of any kind, even after it has been confirmed.

If the Security and Exchange Commission makes a complete investigation, it will ascertain how a banking firm which owned only $243,000 of a $50,000,000 publicly held bond issue, how committees whose members owned as of January 31, 1939, in all only $133,200 of additional bonds of that issue, have been able to seize practical control of the reorganized Postal Telegraph & Cable Corporation. The stockholders are wiped out. The Securities and Exchange Commission will ascertain who arranged for the organization of the major bondholders' committee which controlled the reorganization and why that major committee soliciting the support of publicly held bonds is reported by a financial service to have represented at the very outset $2,000,000 of the bondholdings of the late Clarence Mackay, the most prominent of the Postal and International Telephone & Telegraph insiders. The Securities and Exchange Commission will inquire into the representation of the debtor, the old Postal Telegraph Co., by a prominent firm of Wall Street lawyers who resigned 6 months later in order to represent the trustees appointed by the court.

That is to say, this large firm was first attorneys for the debtor, the Postal Telegraph Co., and then 6 months later resigned to become attorneys for the trustee.

It will likewise inquire into the dealings had by committee members and their firms and their customers in the bonds of Postal Telegraph & Cable Corporation.

When we have the facts concerning these matters, we will understand why this reorganization took 5 years to complete, at a cost of a million dollars or more, and we will have some of the reasons why the value of the holdings of its investors fell to 10 cents on the dollar and why the investors had to take what the controlling financial interests were willing to give them.

If the Securities and Exchange Commission is diligent and exhaustive in its inquiry, it will avoid a situaton analogous to that whch now confronts bondholders of the Munson Steamship Co. In that case, as a result of a reorganization in the same court by some of those who have been active in the Postal reorganization, certain reorganizers of Munson sold out their interests and turned control of this steamship company and its million and a half dollars in cash over to speculators who have taken the company out of the steamship business and now propose to use the former bondholders' million and a half dollars for other speculative ventures of their own which bear no relationship to the steamship business.

More important, we will avoid the control of this publicly owned company by banking and speculative professional interests who will control it for purposes of merger in derogation of the public and national interests.

In the Munson case the court may be able to do nothing because it has lost jurisdiction. In the Postal case the judge, if he cooperates with the Securities and Exchange Commission, can still protect the public interest.

However if the Securities and Exchange Commission does not or cannot make an adequate investigation into the reorganization proceedings so as to disclose what has occurred in the past and thus guard the public in the merger proceedings still to be had, I hope that the special investigating committee appointed by the Senate will proceed, and I am sure that under the leadership of the distinguished chairman of that committee, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], the committee will proceed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8202) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 82, line 15.

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri (when Mr. TRUMAN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. TRUMAN] is unavoidably detained from the Senate on official business. If present he would vote "aye."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. RUSSELL. The junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], who is a member of the subcommittee handling this bill, if present would vote "aye" on this question. I regret that the Senator from Missouri is unavoidably detained, for no member of the subcommittee was more loyal in his attendance on the hearings, or more interested in an endeavor to have the bill drafted for the best interest of the farmers of the country than the junior Senator from Missouri.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is unavoidably detained.

I am advised that if present and voting these Senators would vote "aye."

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], who is detained on official business. I am advised that if present and voting, the Senator from Utah would vote "yea," and the Senator from Maryland would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 63, nays 19, as follows:

So the committee amendment, on page 82, line 15, was agreed to, as follows:

PARITY PAYMENTS

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make parity payments to producers of wheat, cotton, corn (in the commercial corn-producing area), rice, and tobacco pursuant to the provisions of section 303 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, $212,000,000: Provided, however, That in expending the appropriation in this paragraph the rate of payment with respect to any commodity shall not exceed the amount by which the average farm price of the commodity is less than 75 percent of the parity price: Provided further, That such payments with respect to any such commodity shall be made with respect to a farm only in the event that the acreage planted to the commodity for harvest on the farm in 1940 is not in excess of the farm acreage allotment established for the commodity under the agricultural conservation program.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 83, after line 5, to insert:

DISPOSAL OF SURPLUS COMMODITIES

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to further carry out the provisions of section 32, as amended, of the act entitled "An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1935, and subject to all provisions of law relating to the expenditure of funds appropriated by such section, $85,000,000. Such sum shall be immediately available and shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, other appropriations made by such section or for the purpose of such section: Provided, That not in excess of 25 percent of the funds herein made available may be devoted to any one agricultural commodity: Provided further, That said 25-percent provision and the like provision in said section 32, as amended, shall not apply to amounts devoted to a stamp plan for the removal of surplus agricultural commodities from funds made available hereby and by said section 32, and, notwithstanding expenditures under such stamp plan, the 25-percent provision shall continue to be calculated on the aggregate amount available hereunder and under said section 32.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, in line 12, on page 83 in the committee amendment, I move to strike out "$85,000,000" and insert "$113,000,000."

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I have no desire to interfere with any remarks the Senator from Wisconsin may wish to make. However, I have a point of order to submit against the amendment suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will yield to the Senator for the purpose of making his point of order if he desires to make one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia will state the point of order.

Mr. RUSSELL. I make a point of order against this amendment under rule XVI, which states that—

All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate or proposed in pursuance of an estimate submitted in accordance with law.

Mr. President, the provisions of section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of August 24, 1935, are limited to the appropriations which result from a permanent allocation of 30 percent of the amount of the customs receipts in any one year. In accordance with my interpretation of rule XVI, the committee has recommended an increase in that amount; but if I understand and have the proper construction of rule XVI, any amendment offered from the floor still further to increase the amount recommended by the Committee on Appropriations would be subject to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will be glad to hear from the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I recognize that the statement which has just been made by the Senator from Georgia is not made because he is not sympathetic with the purposes of the Surplus Commodities Corporation or the activities which have been carried on under section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, but because he feels constrained to do so as chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the bill.

I should like to say that I believe this particular proposal presents a novel question insofar as the rules of the Senate and their interpretation are concerned. Ordinarily authorizations for appropriations provide either a specific sum of money, or they provide that Congress is authorized to appropriate so much thereof as it may deem necessary to effectuate the purposes of the statute. But, as Senators will note, section 32 of the act of 1935 provides an appropriation of 30 percent of the customs receipts. Obviously, Mr. President, that is a variable amount. It is an amount dependent upon the goods imported in any particular calendar year and the duties imposed upon those goods by the Congress. It is my contention that Congress having in this instance provided an indefinite sum of money insofar as actual dollars are concerned it lies within the power of Congress to augment those funds to carry out the purpose of the existing law.

I shall be very glad to hear the ruling of the Chair in regard to the matter.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator's amendment relate to the figure "$85,000,000"?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It does.

Mr. CONNALLY. It seems to me the Senator's amendment is in order, because it is an amendment to a committee amendment, and not an amendment to the bill itself.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The point made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] is that under rule XVI a standing committee of the Senate is given specific authority to propose amendments which are in excess of Budget estimates, or to carry out existing law, or in accordance with the other exception mentioned in the rule. However, I base my contention on the argument that the situation is a novel one, in view of the fact that Congress did not authorize as it customarily does, a specific sum of money, or a sum sufficient therefor, but authorized 30 percent of the customs receipts, which is a variable sum; and that therefore the amendment does not come within the prohibition of the rule.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not think that is the point at all. An amendment has been offered to the committee amendment. Is it contended that the committee amendment may not be amended, may not be increased, or may not be decreased? The committee amendment is an amendment to the bill. The committee amendment says, "We recommend $85,000,000." That amendment is subject to amendment, as is any other amendment. I do not see why we may not increase or decrease the amount.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Texas has correctly stated the rule of the Senate. The rule may be erroneous, but it is the rule. When a recommendation in excess of the authorization of law is made by the committee, very clearly under the provisions of rule XVI, the point of order against the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] should be sustained.

Mr. President, as the Senator from Wisconsin has stated—and I appreciate his statement—I have always favored appropriations to carry out the provisions of section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. However, I do think the Senator's amendment increases this item disproportionately and I am opposed to increasing the amount provided in the committee amendment. I am specifically charged by the rule with making a point of order against any amendment in violation of rule XVI; and the point of order is made pursuant to that rule.

The Senator from Wisconsin pins his hope of avoiding the point of order on the peculiar nature of the appropriation which is made pursuant to section 32. The Senator says that this is an indefinite appropriation. Mr. President, the appropriation is not indefinite. It is definite, and fixed at 30 percent of whatever amount is taken in the calendar year as customs receipts. The appropriation does not apply to the fiscal year. Congress knows, when it convenes in January, how much is available, because section 32 applies to the calendar year.

It is true that the amount is variable, because the customs receipts vary from year to year, but the amount is not indefinite. It is definite and fixed by law.

As I see the matter, Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin falls within the category of the amendments prohibited by rule XVI.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin desire to be heard further?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; I am ready to take the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I am no parliamentary authority, but it seems to me that the Senate ought to be right on this question before it establishes a precedent.

What is the purpose of the rule? The purpose of the rule is that when an appropriation bill is brought in, objection may be made to any item in it unless it is authorized by law. That is one question. So rule XVI was devised to get around that difficulty. Let us see what the rule is:

All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations—

and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill—

There is nothing in the bill. The committee amendment is not in the bill. If we adopted the figure of $85,000,000, it would be merely an amendment. The committee amendment is in order because the Committee on Appropriations offers it. It is before the Senate for consideration. What does consideration mean? Do we have to swallow it just as it is? May it not be amended, just as any other provision may be amended?—

the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill—

There is nothing now in the bill, so the amendment is in order under a later provision—or to add a new item of appropriation—

That language does not apply—

unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session.

When the Senate has passed a bill, but the House has not passed it, we are authorized to offer an amendment to carry out the provisions of something we have already done.

Or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate submitted in accordance with law.

That situation does not apply in this instance. The item was not submitted by the Bureau of the Budget. The Bureau of the Budget had nothing to do with it. So the only clause which is applicable is the language—

Or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate.

The $85,000,000 is in order as an amendment because it is offered by the Committee on Appropriations; but I defy anyone to say to me that any committee or any Member of the Senate can present an amendment or a provision in the bill which the Senate may not amend, if it so desires. All the rule means is that the $85,000,000 amendment is in order; and, being in order, it is subject to the action of the Senate to increase it, decrease it, or eliminate it altogether, as we see fit. That position is absolutely fundamental, as I see it.

Mr. President, I am not talking about technicalities. I am talking about the philosophical, fundamental principles of legislative procedure. I have never yet seen an amendment which may not be amended. If $85,000,000 is in order, a nickel is in order. If $85,000,000 is in order, then $90,000,000 is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia desire to be heard further?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I do not desire to present any further argument. Of course, all of rule XVI is in derogation of general parliamentary law, as the Senator from Missouri suggests. There are any number of times when amendments are not in order. There are any number of rules applying to other parliamentary situations before the Senate which clearly make amendments out of order. No amendment may be accepted in the third degree. It is nothing unusual for the objection of one Senator to defeat an amendment in the third degree. That could happen under the rules even if every other Member of the Senate were in favor of the proposal. If the amendment were in the third degree, one objection would defeat it.

Mr. President, I am charged with the responsibility of making the point of order under rule XVI, and I submit the matter to the Chair for decision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). The Chair is ready to rule.

Upon an examination of section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of August 24, 1935, the Chair finds that that section reads as follows:

There is hereby appropriated for each fiscal year, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, an amount equal to 30 percent of the gross receipts from duties collected under the customs laws during the period January 1 to December 31, both inclusive, preceding the beginning of each such fiscal year.

The Chair does not feel that under that language there is any authority or any provision for making any appropriation other than the appropriation which section 32 of that act makes; to wit, 30 percent of the gross receipts.

The Chair must admit that the argument of the Senator from Texas is plausible; but if the Senate will examine rule XVI, it will find, as the Senator from Georgia has made clear, that it provides that—

No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation—

Unless there be authority in the law for such appropriation; and we do not find that authority in section 32 of the act of 1935, or anywhere else, for that matter—

or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate.

If under the rule a Member of the Senate has no right to move to increase an appropriation already in the bill, certainly a Member of the Senate has no right to move to increase what is suggested or proposed as an amendment; and certainly if a Member of the Senate has no right to offer an amendment as a new item, he has no right to offer an amendment such as is proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The Chair therefore feels——

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, before the Chair rules, will the Chair hear me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. CONNALLY. I realize that. I can tell. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair wishes to be as merciful as possible.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas has no personal interest in this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes that fact.

Mr. CONNALLY. But the Senator from Texas has an interest in the rules and procedure of the Senate.

I desire to suggest to the Chair this proposition: An amendment which is not in order, but to which no Senator raises a point of order, is, then, before the Senate. That sort of an amendment may always be amended. The only point of order that may be made here is against the $85,000,000. It is not in order at all; but no Senator has raised the point of order against it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will advise the Senator from Texas that the amendment of $85,000,000 is really in order, because it is offered under the exception, which is that a standing or select committee may offer such an amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. All right. Then the rule proceeds:

Or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate.

And, like the laws of the Medes and Persians, that cannot be changed by the Senate itself. This rule is directed at the offering of an amendment to a bill. Under the rule, it is said that the amendment is in order. If it is in order at all, it is in order to be considered by the Senate. Does anyone mean to tell me that a committee of the Senate, which is its servant, may bring in something here, even though it is out of order, but if no Senator raises the point of order it is in order under this rule, and it is holy, and no one can touch it? The Senate cannot touch it. The master is smaller than the servant.

When did the Committee on Appropriations become so big that it is bigger than the Senate of the United States?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, all the powers of the Committee on Appropriations under rule XVI were expressly and explicitly conferred upon that committee by all of the Senate of the United States. The committee did not make the rule.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is true.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senate said to its servant, its creature, the humble, much-abused Committee on Appropriations, "Here is a rule—rule XVI," and specifically charged the Senator in charge of a bill with making a point of order under that rule.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not reflecting on the Committee on Appropriations. I am not reflecting on any committee, but all in the world this rule means is that the committee may propose an amendment. They have proposed it in the sum of $85,000,000. That amendment is here to be considered. What does consideration mean? Does it mean that we have to swallow the amendment as the committee have fixed it, or does it mean that we may amend it? We may amend any amendment that is before the Senate to be considered. The Senate has no rule as to germaneness except the majority vote, which frequently permits the insertion of matter not germane at all.

I see where the Chair is headed for; but when the future historian comes to delve around among the ruins of the Capitol, I want him to find some little fragment of evidence that the Senator from Texas interposed his objection to this sort of a ruling.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is ready to rule.

It is very clear from rule XVI that the amendment suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] would not be in order even to a provision in the bill. It is not in order to a proposed amendment to the bill.

For the reasons the Chair has stated, the Chair feels compelled to sustain the point of order, and does sustain the point of order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire most respectfully to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] what his plans are, because I intend to avail myself of the opportunity to debate this question, and I desire to know whether or not he intends to go on further this evening.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I had hoped, of course, as we all had, that we might conclude the consideration of the bill today; but that is obviously impossible, because there are one or two other amendments which will take some time. So I had felt that we probably could very well recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow, in the hope that we may finish the bill tomorrow.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I hope I may be recognized when the Senate convenes.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I urge our leader not to move a recess at this time. There are other pressing matters.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not anxious to recess at this time. I stated that it is obvious that we cannot conclude the consideration of the bill tonight.

Mr. RUSSELL. No; I do not think we can conclude its consideration tonight.

Mr. BARKLEY. But if there are other matters which can be disposed of tonight, certainly I am willing to stay here.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, can we not dispose of this matter?

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that the Senator from Wisconsin wishes to discuss it at some length. I am perfectly willing to stay here and let the Senator do so this afternoon; but if we could dispose of other matters, and suspend that one for the rest of the afternoon, and not in any way cause the Senator to lose his rights, we might make some progress.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It would be agreeable so far as the Senator from Wisconsin is concerned if we could obtain unanimous consent to let the appeal and this item go over until tomorrow and have other matters disposed of, since the Senate wants to continue in session.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, my attention was diverted for a moment. Did the Senator from Kentucky make any statement as to his wishes in the matter?

Mr. BARKLEY. My wishes are subject to those of the Senator from Wisconsin. Would the Senator be willing to have us fix a time tomorrow at which to vote on his appeal?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I prefer not to have a time fixed, Mr. President.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator probably has as good an audience now as he will have in the morning if he wants to go ahead with his argument.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, unless the Senate wants to stay and dispose of this matter tonight, I ask that it may go over until tomorrow; but I am perfectly willing to have an agreement entered into that this matter shall be temporarily laid aside, if the Senator wants to proceed further with the bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, there are but a few other committee amendments to be acted on. If the Senate is willing to remain in session for a while this afternoon, I should be glad to have some of those amendments disposed of.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, there are a few amendments only left to be disposed of, and if the Senate will take a recess now until 11 o'clock tomorrow, certainly we can finish the consideration of the bill some time tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. RUSSELL. It will be agreeable to me in view of the fact that the able minority leader and the distinguished majority leader and the able Senator from Wisconsin agree to have the pending matter go over. I ask unanimous consent that this amendment may be passed over until tomorrow, and that the Senate proceed with some of the other committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment referred to will be passed over.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have no objection to that, but may we not take a recess now until tomorrow at 11 o'clock? There are many Senators who wish to attend to their office work, and we can finish the consideration of the bill tomorrow certainly.

Mr. RUSSELL. I withdraw the request for unanimous consent, then, because I think that if we are to carry the pending amendment over until tomorrow, we should proceed in order. If the Senator from Kentucky is willing, he might move a recess.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its deliberations today it take a recess until 11 a. m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I present an amendment to the pending bill, which I intend to offer for consideration at the proper time. I ask that the amendment be published in the RECORD, and that it be followed by a list of the payments which have been made to sugar producers, as furnished me by the Department of Agriculture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received, printed, and will lie on the table.

Without objection, the amendment and the statement referred to by the Senator from Virginia will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment and statement are as follows:

(Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. BYRD to the bill (H. R. 8202) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.)

On page 82, line 14, before the period, insert a colon and the following:

"Provided further, That no part of the amount herein appropriated shall be available for making total conditional payments in excess of $5,000 to any one person, firm, partnership, or corporation in connection with the 1940 sugar program."

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., March 20, 1940.

Hon. H. F. BYRD,
United States Senate.

DEAR MR. BYRD: As stated in my letter of this date, enclosed herewith are lists of payees receiving payments in excess of $10,000 under the 1937 sugar program. There is also enclosed a tabulation showing the estimated number of such payees and the estimated amount to be paid to them under the 1938 sugar program.

Very truly yours,

R. M. EVANS, Administrator.

DEATH OF CHARLES F. PACE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before we take a recess, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the very sad news of the death of one of the outstanding employees of the Senate of the United States. I refer to Mr. Charles F. Pace, the financial clerk of the Senate.

The Senate of the United States, and I daresay the Government of the United States, never had a more faithful and more zealous and more honorable employee than was Charles F. Pace. He came into the service of the Senate in 1913, first as an index clerk. Then he was appointed chief clerk in the Senate Post Office, and then assistant financial clerk, and in 1916 he became financial clerk of the Senate.

All of those who have served in the Senate for any length of time and who knew Mr. Pace will agree with me that a more efficient and more courteous, a more accurate and honest man never served within our knowledge. He was so meticulous in the discharge of his duties that he was sensitive of any criticism or any assertion which in any way reflected upon his efficiency or the character of the performance of his duties.

Mr. Pace was born in Florida, and came to Washington largely at the instance of the late distinguished Senator Fletcher of Florida. He was a graduate of Georgetown University and of Georgetown Law School, and practiced law in Florida for a time before coming into the Government service. As we have all known, he has been in ill health for a year, and has been away from his office and from the performance of his duties for the last 3 months. We received word today of his death.

I am sure that I speak for the entire Senate when I say that we regret Mr. Pace's untimely end, that we honor his memory, and we wish perpetual peace to his soul. I ask that when the Senate take a recess today it do so in further honor and respect to the memory of Mr. Pace.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I wish to express the very deep thanks of the people of the State of Florida to our able leader the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] for the considerate words he has uttered this afternoon relative to Charles F. Pace. There are heavy hearts in Florida today because of the passing of this noble and beloved man and devoted public servant.

CENSUS QUESTIONNAIRES

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, in connection with the Tobey resolution I wish to offer for printing in the RECORD a statement showing the warning issued to census employees by the Census Bureau to be identical with the warning issued by the Civil Service Commission to civil-service employees of the United States Government.

In addition to that, I should like to offer for the RECORD a letter to the New York Times dated March 11, 1940, by William Fielding Ogburn, a distinguished professor of the University of Chicago, on the same subject.

I also have here a communication from the Director of the Census, Mr. W. L. Austin, to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], dated March 19, 1940, which I should like to have printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the requests of the Senator from Florida?

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WARNING

POLITICAL ACTIVITY OF CENSUS EMPLOYEES PROHIBITED

THE LAW

(Excerpt from the Hatch Act)

It shall be unlawful for any person employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof. No officer or employee in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns. All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they may choose and to express their opinions on all political subjects (sec. 9 (a), act of August 2, 1939—Public, No. 252, 76th Cong.).

The law quoted above prohibits active participation in politics by all employees of the Census Bureau. Activity in connection with municipal, county, State, or national elections, primary or regular, or in behalf of any party, candidate, or any measure to be voted upon, is prohibited. The restrictions regarding political activity apply to temporary employees, employees on leave of absence, with or without pay, and substitute employees during their periods of active employment.

Among the forms of political activity which are prohibited are:

Serving on or for any political committee, party, or other similar organization.

Serving as officer of a political club, as member or officer of any of its committees, addressing such a club or being active in organizing it.

Serving in connection with preparation for, organizing, or conducting a political meeting or rally, addressing such a meeting, or taking any other active part therein except as a spectator.

Engaging in political discussions or conferences while on duty, or canvassing a district or soliciting political support for any party, faction, candidate, or measure.

Manifesting offensive activity at the polls, at primary or regular elections, soliciting votes, assisting voters to mark ballots, or helping to get out the voters on registration or election days.

Acting as recorder, checker, watcher, or challenger of any party or faction.

Assisting in counting the vote, or engaging in any other activity at the polls except marking and depositing the employee's own ballot.

Serving in any position of election officer.

Publishing or being connected editorially or managerially with any political newspaper or writing for publication or publishing any letter or article, signed or unsigned, in favor of or against any political party, candidate, faction, or measure.

Becoming a candidate for nomination or election to or holding office—Federal, State, or local.

Distributing campaign literature or material.

Circulating, but not signing, political petitions, including initiative and referendum, recall, and nomination petitions.

Assuming political leadership or becoming prominently identified with any political movement, party, or faction, or with the success or failure of any candidate for election to public office.

The right to express privately their political opinions is reserved to Census employees.

POLITICAL ASSESSMENTS, SOLICITATIONS, AND DISCRIMINATIONS

Sections 118, 119, 120, and 121 of the Criminal Code (43 Stat. 1073 and 35 Stat. 1110), provide that no legislative officer, officer-elect, or candidate for election, and no executive or judicial officer or employee shall solicit or receive or be concerned in soliciting or receiving any money or contribution for political purposes from any other officer or employee of the Government; that no solicitation or receipt of political assessments shall be made by any person in any room or building occupied in the discharge of official duties by any officer or employee of the United States; that no officer or employee shall be discharged or demoted for refusing to make any contribution for political purposes; and that no officer or employee of the Government shall directly or indirectly give or hand over to any other officer or employee in the service of the United States or to any Member of or Delegate to Congress any money or other valuable thing for the promotion of any political object whatever.

Section 122 of the Criminal Code provides that whoever shall violate any provision of the four sections above mentioned shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 3 years, or both.

Sections 149 and 150, title 18, of the United States Code (44 Stat. 918) provide that it shall be unlawful to pay, or offer to promise to pay, any sum of money, or any other thing of value, to any person, firm, or corporation in consideration of the use or promise to use any influence, whatsoever, to procure any appointive office under the Government of the United States for any person whatsoever; and that it shall be unlawful to solicit or receive from anyone whatsoever, either as political contribution, or for personal emolument, any sum of money or thing of value, whatsoever, in consideration of the promise of support, or use of influence, or for the support or influence of the payee, in behalf of the person paying the money, or any other person, in obtaining any appointive office under the Government of the United States. Section 151 of this title provides that anyone convicted of violating these two sections shall be punished by imprisonment of not more than 1 year or by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

These instructions must be followed by all Census employees.

W. L. AUSTIN,
Director of the Census.

WARNING—POLITICAL ACTIVITY OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES PROHIBITED

THE LAW

It shall be unlawful for any person employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof. No officer or employee in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns. All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they may choose and to express their opinions on all political subjects. (Sec. 9 (a), act of August 2, 1939—Public, No. 252, 76th Cong.)

THE CIVIL-SERVICE RULES

No person in the executive civil service shall use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the results thereof. Persons who by the provisions of these rules are in the competitive classified service, while retaining the right to vote as they please and to express privately their opinions on all political subjects, shall take no active part in political management or in political campaigns.

The law and the rule quoted above prohibit active participation in politics by all employees of the executive branch of the Federal Government, both those who are in the competitive classified service and those who are not in the competitive classified service. Activity in connection with municipal, county, State, or national elections, primary or regular, or in behalf of any party, candidate, or any measure to be voted upon, is prohibited. The restrictions regarding political activity apply to temporary employees, employees on leave of absence, with or without pay, and substitute employees during their periods of active employment.

Among the forms of political activity which are prohibited are:

Serving on or for any political committee, party, or other similar organization.

Serving as officer of a political club, as member or officer of any of its committees, addressing such a club or being active in organizing it.

Serving in connection with preparation for, organizing, or conducting a political meeting or rally, addressing such a meeting, or taking any other active part therein except as a spectator.

Engaging in political discussions or conferences while on duty, or canvassing a district or soliciting political support for any party, faction, candidate, or measure.

Manifesting offensive activity at the polls, at primary or regular elections, soliciting votes, assisting voters to mark ballots, or helping to get out the voters on registration or election days.

Acting as recorder, checker, watcher, or challenger of any party or faction.

Assisting in counting the vote, or engaging in any other activity at the polls except marking and depositing the employee's own ballot.

Serving in any position of election officer.

Publishing or being connected editorially or managerially with any political newspaper or writing for publication or publishing any letter or article, signed or unsigned, in favor of or against any political party, candidate, faction, or measure.

Becoming a candidate for nomination or election to or holding office, Federal, State, or local.

Distributing campaign literature or material.

Circulating, but not signing, political petitions, including initiative and referendum, recall, and nomination petitions.

Assuming political leadership or becoming prominently identified with any political movement, party, or faction, or with the success or failure of any candidate for election to public office.

EXPRESSIONS OF OPINION

The right to express political opinions is reserved to Federal employees. Those employees who are in the classified civil service are required by the civil-service rules to confine themselves to a private expression of opinion.

POLITICAL ASSESSMENTS, SOLICITATIONS, AND DISCRIMINATIONS

Sections 118, 119, 120, and 121 of the Criminal Code (35 Stat. 1110), provide that no legislative officer, officer-elect, or candidate for election, and no executive or judicial officer or employee, shall solicit or receive or be concerned in soliciting or receiving any money or contribution for political purposes from any other officer or employee of the Government; that no solicitation or receipt of political assessments shall be made by any person in any room or building occupied in the discharge of official duties by any officer or employee of the United States; that no officer or employee shall be discharged or demoted for refusing to make any contribution for political purposes; and that no officer or employee of the Government shall directly of indirectly give or hand over to any other officer or employee in the service of the United States or to any Member or Delegate to Congress any money or other valuable thing for the promotion of any political object whatever.

Section 122 of the Criminal Code provides that whoever shall violate any provision of the four sections shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 3 years, or both.

Sections 149 and 150 of the United States Code (44 Stat. 918) provide that it shall be unlawful to pay or offer or promise to pay any sum of money, or any other thing of value, to any person, firm, or corporation in consideration of the use or promise to use any influence whatsoever to procure any appointive office under the Government of the United States for any person whatsoever; and that it shall be unlawful to solicit or receive from anyone whatsoever, either as political contribution or for personal emolument, any sum of money or thing of value whatsoever in consideration of the promise of support, or use of influence, or for the support or influence of the payee, in behalf of the person paying the money, or any other person, in obtaining any appointive office under the Government of the United States. Section 151 of the United States Code provides that anyone convicted of violating these two sections shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 1 year or by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Further information is contained in Form 1236, a copy of which may be obtained from the Commission, its district managers, or any local civil-service board.

It is the duty of any person having knowledge of the violation of any of the foregoing provisions of the civil-service rules or Criminal Code to submit the facts to the United States Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C.

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

MARCH 11, 1940.

The EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES,
New York, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: The New York Times of Sunday, March 10, reports that a United States Senator advises by radio that citizens refuse to answer census questions which they consider an invasion of their privacy; that is, to break a law which makes them liable to fine or imprisonment. The legislator, to whom is entrusted the making of the laws, would seem to have rendered his full measure of service in this political year of 1940. I do not wish to comment further on the respect for law or the functions of a lawmaker, but rather to indicate an issue that has not yet, I believe, appeared in the public discussions of the census controversy. I refer to the damage to the census, an enterprise which is a difficult enough undertaking at all times.

The census has great difficulty, for instance, in even counting the numbers accurately in this age of travel. The Bureau of the Census, a nonpolitical body, spends years in trying to make the data more accurate, by conducting training schools, by giving psychological tests to enumerators, etc. Everyone should want reliable census data. A multiplication table, for instance, is needed by both Republicans and Democrats. But if a false multiplication table would serve political ends, I suppose there would be many who would falsify the multiplication table for political purposes. There are supposed to be standards below which one does not go even in fighting.

To build up clubs to resist the census, as Senator TOBEY is reported to be doing, may well destroy the reliability of the whole census. The census is the greatest single scientific undertaking by our Government. Upon it, as a base, rests all social science. There are tens of thousands of articles, books, and researches made on the census materials. The value of the census to business is incalculable. The science of marketing would be hamstrung without it, and its service is great to advertisers who are a necessity to newspapers. The knowledge of the census is as important to scientists and businessmen as a knowledge of concrete and steel is to engineers. Grand Coulee could not be built on defective concrete nor can a modern state function with inaccurate and unreliable census data. Every modern nation conducts an elaborate census.

As to the questions on wealth and income, they are of particular value to businessmen—if they are complete and accurate. They appear in the censuses of the world. We've had them before in previous censuses. We already collect data on incomes above $5,000. We have asked questions on income and wealth of farmers in censuses taken in the administrations of other Presidents, yet no one seems to have suffered in small communities from snooping, nor have objections been raised on these income questions. The present questions on income merely extend the inquiry to wage earners.

We admire our democracy. We go to war for it. But it should be realized that it cannot be run effectively without a census, nor with an inaccurate and unreliable one. It is a serious thing to destroy the confidence of the people in the census.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM F. OGBURN,
University of Chicago.

MARCH 19, 1940.

MY DEAR SENATOR TOBEY: Now that the little census blitzkrieg which you led so gallantly seems about to have spent its force, and since we are approaching the Easter season, when the spirit of charity and forgiveness should prevail, I am writing to ask you to join with me in binding up the wounds.

I am appealing to you to do this in the interest of a good census, and especially in the interest of more than 3,000 progressive cities whose chambers of commerce and leading citizens have organized to cooperate locally to see that the coming census is a good one. For, remember, these cities are about to have photographs taken which must be their official likenesses for the next 10 years, and it is important to them that the likenesses be sharply in focus.

These are the things which you can generously do now which will demonstrate that Americans, although partisans, can really get together for the common good after they have indulged in their political fun:

1. Write a letter, please, to Mrs. J. Warren Burgess, president of the Federation of Women's Clubs of Tulsa, Okla., telling her that you were in error when you announced over the radio that the census schedule of 1940 contained the question, "Have you ever been divorced?" Explain to her that you were in error in needlessly arousing the ire of many women, resulting in many violent protests to Members of Congress over a question which is not even in the schedule. Kindly explain to her that the question touching on this subject in the 1940 census is the same that has appeared in census schedules since 1890, and requires simply an indication of the "marital condition" of each person—man and woman—as of April 1, 1940. Each person will be listed as "single," "married," "widowed," or "divorced." If a divorced person is remarried, he or she will simply report "married," and there will be no probing into previous marital history. There will be no question on "how many times divorced," as you stated over the radio.

2. Please admit in your next radio address that when you stated that certain questions on occupation were asked only of men, and not of women, you were completely in error, as the fact is that all employed persons, both male and female, will be asked to indicate the occupation and industry in which they were employed during the week preceding the census, and unemployed persons, both male and female, will indicate the occupation and industry in which they were last employed. Please be generous enough to admit, therefore, that this question has no relation to mobilization for war but is intended simply to get basic statistics on the Nation's industrial and occupational skill.

3. Please be generous enough to admit that a large proportion of unemployment involves persons engaged in part-time employment and irregular employment, and that the best measure of the degree of such unemployment is the amount of wage income earned during the year. Be fair enough to explain that the main purpose of this inquiry on wages and salaries is to get a measure of this twilight zone between employment and unemployment; that the question on income involves only persons whose income is $5,000 and less and does not include income from dividends, interest, and other nonwage sources. It would be very helpful, in removing partisanship from the discussion of this question, if you would tell your followers that the congressional act directing the Census Bureau to make "inquiries on unemployment" was passed by a Congress controlled by your own party in 1929 and signed by a President of your own party.

4. Please be good enough to admit that the inquiry on home-mortgage data is not new in this census; that a Congress and a President (Benjamin Harrison), controlled by your own party, in 1890 directed the Census Bureau to obtain this information and that no survey of housing conditions in the United States could be complete without this essential information.

5. Please be frank enough to state the recognized truth that bath and toilet facilities in any home are, perhaps, the most important characteristics to indicate the kind of abode; that they are vital facts in arriving at or justifying claimed values; and that no housing census would be complete without them. Please explain that municipalities, public utilities, real-estate men, bankers, and health authorities need these statistics to govern extensions of facilities in cities, and that these inquiries are for the public good.

6. Won't you please help to make your followers understand that the Census Bureau through 150 years has never violated the law requiring secrecy; that all of its executive staff, except the Director, is civil service; that the present Director, although a Democrat, has spent 40 years in the service, rising from a clerkship to the top; that he received most of his promotions during administrations of your own party; that he became Assistant Director during the administration of President Hoover; that even now our Assistant Director is a Massachusetts Republican, and that our Chief Statistician for Population, who entered the service 30 years ago during the Taft administration, and the man who probably has had more to do in framing the income questions than any other man, is a Maine Republican?

7. Please be fair enough to admit that if there is any justified criticism over the manner of selecting local enumerators, such correction would be a responsibility of Congress, and that all censuses except one since 1870 have been conducted by a field force selected by your own party. I appeal to you in this manner because the quality and completeness of these 10-year surveys are of vital interest to men and women of all parties. They cannot be completely successful without public cooperation and to arouse public resistance through incorrect statements and improper implications is taking a desperate chance with public welfare.

With a sincere desire to have your cooperation rather than your opposition, I appeal to you to join in making the 1940 census successful. I appeal to you without any resentment for what has happened, for I realize that to err is human, to forgive divine.

Respectfully yours,

W. L. AUSTIN, Director.

HON. CHARLES W. TOBEY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 20, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God of heaven and earth, in this varied world of ours, quivering with the unexpected, tremulous with breaking wonders, swift with speaking horrors, veiled with unplucked mysteries, help us to say: It is God's world and good for man to be in it. O let it not be too much with us to lay waste our powers. Heavenly Father, some of us are journeying through the earlier years, some are rushing through the noontide of prime, and yet others are on the summit of age. As we face toward the sealed mysteries, we pray for Thy blessings of grace, love, and communion to be with us. O eternal Christ of God, holy Saviour, in sinful tendencies, in human unworthiness, we would bear with Thee the scourge and the cross. The very breath of the Almighty is moving on, the hush of expectation is upon the air as our Lord enfolds the world in His deathless arms of love and mercy. O grant us the spirit of devotion, the courage to confess our undying faith; do Thou comfort us with the thoughts that overleap the flight of time and give us vision of our immortal destiny. We rejoice that it is Thine only begotten Son that harmonizes the soul with its universe, and its Maker for time and eternity. In His holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate disagrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8641) entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, to provide supplemental appropriations for such fiscal year, and for other purposes"; that it further insists upon its amendments to said bill, asks a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 1398. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917, as amended, to increase the penalties for peacetime violations of such act.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a table on the national debt.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including a statement by Mr. Joseph McFadden, union delegate, Franklin Sugar Refining Co., at a meeting called by the mayor of Philadelphia on December 14, 1939.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address I delivered in Chicago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a brief statement in the New York Post on the activity of the W. P. A. throughout the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, newspaper dispatches yesterday and today carried certain utterances reported to be delivered by the Honorable James H. R. Cromwell, United States Minister to the Dominion of Canada, in a speech before the Canadian and Empire Clubs of Toronto, Canada, March 19, 1940, in which our Minister is quoted as attacking the isolationist's policy of the United States in the present European war, and asserting that one of the warring powers of Europe, to wit, Germany "Frankly and openly seeks to destroy the institutions and social and economic order upon which the United States is founded."

I have just introduced a resolution directing the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives to conduct an investigation to determine the truth or falsity of such statements, and if they be true that they recommend to the President of the United States that the said James H. R. Cromwell be recalled forthwith. I append at this point in the RECORD the said resolution:

Whereas newspaper dispatches today report that in a speech on March 19, 1940, delivered before the Canadian and Empire Clubs at Toronto, Canada, Hon. James H. R. Cromwell, United States Minister to Canada, is quoted as criticizing American isolationists, and asserting that one of the warring powers in Europe openly seeks to destroy the institutions and social and economic order upon which the United States is founded; and

Whereas if such utterances are true, they constitute a flagrant and disgraceful breach of diplomatic conduct, and an affront to our established neutrality affecting all the warring powers of Europe: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs in the House of Representatives do and are hereby directed and authorized to investigate and make inquiry concerning the truth or falsity of such utterances, and if the same be found to be true that said committee make recommendation to the President of the United States that the said James H. R. Cromwell, United States Minister to the Dominion of Canada be recalled forthwith.

Mr. Speaker, it appears that in our Minister to Canada we have the reincarnation of a former Ambassador to Great Britain, Walter Hines Page, who by similar conduct and treasonable action did more than any other individual to embroil us in the last World War. If our playboy Minister to Canada, James H. R. Cromwell, wants to fight for the British Empire, I respectfully suggest that he join the ranks of such distinguished American expatriates as Lady Astor and Kermit Roosevelt, so that he may "carry on" for the Empire.

One cannot be loyal to the United States and loyal to a foreign power at the same time. We should have the courage to tell James Cromwell and his lawfully wedded fortune—Doris Duke, America's wealthy heiress—to get the hell out of this Republic. If, like his distinguished namesake, Butcher Cromwell of old, he likes to wade in other people's blood, the opportunity is his to make the choice. I am willing to wager that his type is too cowardly to take a stand in the blood and filth of a war trench anywhere. It is inconceivable that he would exchange the garb of a morning suit or a tuxedo for a soldier's uniform, and forego the cocktails and Scotch and sodas enjoyed in diplomatic circles. If we ever get into this blood business of Europe, and God forbid we do, it will not be Jimmy Cromwell and the coupon clippers who will have to do the fighting and dying, but it will be the John Gobbucks who will come from the homes of the W. P. A. workers and the low-income groups of the United States.

Jimmy Cromwell's appointment as Minister to Canada is another evidence of the debasement of our Foreign Service, when such a post is awarded to a Cromwell simply because he "laid it on the line," when political campaign funds were needed.

Step by step we are traveling the same road to war we traveled in 1917. Every speech is British propaganda, uncanny in parallel with those of the immediate years preceding our entrance into the World War. The propaganda was augmented by the official visit of the British King and Queen to Washington last June as advance agents for the now existing war. Our shores have been visited by scores of British propagandists, including Lord Marley, Lord Beaverbrooke, and Duff-Cooper, former Lord of the British Admiralty. Recently Duff-Cooper delivered an address in the city of Cleveland, Ohio, before a group of anglophiles, in which he expressed appreciation of his government to the Congress of the United States for lifting the arms embargo, permitting Britain and her allies to secure war supplies in this country to strengthen her Empire. On this occasion with a wink of the eye and a smile on his face, the Honorable Duff-Cooper stated, "We do not want your men"; then a slight hesitation, said, "not yet."

Within a fortnight four distinguished bankers in New York City have predicted if the war lasts a year or two longer in Europe we will have to repeal the Johnson Act, which prohibits loans or credits to nations in default of war debts, in order to save the colonial Empires of England and France.

It is no secret to most Members of this Congress that our national defenses are being weakened at this very hour by the attempt to sell some of our modern air bombers to Great Britain and France.

Recently Admiral Richardson, of the United States Navy, posed for a picture which was published and widely circulated in the magazine Life, of January 22, 1940, over the caption "New Commander in Chief Takes Over United States Fleet." The picture displays the Admiral posed in his study beside a solitary framed photograph of King George VI, of England. The picture was presented to him as a memento of last summer's royal visit, during which Admiral Richardson served as naval aide. The acceptance of this picture was a direct violation in the absence of authority from Congress, of article I, section 9, clause 8, of the Constitution, which reads:

> No title of nobility shall be granted by the United States, and no person holding any office of profit or trust under them shall, without the consent of the Congress, accept of any present, emolument, office, or title of any kind whatever, from any king, prince, or foreign state.

This bold piece of propaganda, absolutely in defiance of the Constitution of the United States, has gone unchallenged except by a few Members of this Congress, including the distinguished Member from Vermont, the Honorable CHARLES A. PLUMLEY.

Mr. Speaker, there is need for a searching investigation into the intense British propaganda now being spread over the air—from the platforms and pulpits of this country—propaganda cleverly designed to draw us into another war.

I submit that no American worthy of the name has any respect for the totalitarian philosophy represented by communism, nazi-ism, and fascism. We have less respect for a dictatorship of a Hitler, a Stalin, or a Mussolini. Nevertheless, we must be constantly on guard against the equally dangerous philosophy of the imperialism represented by the colonial empires of Britain and France, who are constantly seeking to have America once again pull their chestnuts out of the fire.

These two world empires stood idly by, although they had a mandate to protect, and saw the partition of Czechoslovakia, the cruel and brutal dismemberment of ancient Poland, and the abject surrender because of brute force of gallant Finland. Witness also the scrapping of the Balfour declaration denying to the Jews the opportunity of a permanent homeland in Palestine. It was within the power of France and England to have given military aid to Czechoslovakia, Poland, and Finland, but it is now written in the history of our day that such aid was not forthcoming for reasons best known to the statesmen of these countries. Apparently they were more interested in preserving the status quo of their ill-gotten gains than assisting the democracies represented by the three small nations gone temporarily to defeat.

Mr. Speaker, under the nose of the Dies committee, these subversive acts continue daily and nothing is done about it. In the light of Mr. Cromwell's speech and his strictly un-American conduct, I think it is time for the Dies committee and the Congress to sit up and take notice. [Applause.]

WATER CARRIERS

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, under date of March 11, 1940, the New York Times reported that during the course of the debate on Sunday night, March 10, 1940, over the American Forum of the Air, Senator WHEELER, of Montana, made the following statement:

> The water carriers who have and who are getting subsidies as well as huge loans from the Government at very low rates of interest should be the last to complain about regulation.

The debate was on the question of whether water carriers and motortrucks should be subject to the same measure of regulation as carriers by rail. The participants included Senator BURTON K. WHEELER, chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the United States Senate, and J. J. Pelley, President of the Association of American Railroads, favoring such regulation, and William J. Driver, chairman of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, and Chester Gray, director of the National Highway Users' Conference, in opposition.

Senator WHEELER is the chief sponsor of S. 2009, a bill now in conference between committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives which would place the regulation of water carriers under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Because of Senator WHEELER's interest in the pending legislation, and because his statement, when given prominence out of its context, is misleading, some amplification of the facts appears to be in order.

Under existing law carriers by water engaged in foreign, coastwise, and intercoastal trade are subject to regulation by the Maritime Commission. S. 2009 would transfer the regulation of coastwise and intercoastal carriers by water from the Maritime Commission to the Interstate Commerce Commission. There is no question involved, therefore, in the pending legislation, of imposing regulation upon these carriers for the first time, or even of extending the regulatory power.

The only change is the transfer of responsibility for regulation from one agency to another. The pending bill would, however, impose regulation for the first time upon carriers by water on inland waters.

These carriers by water on the inland waters of the United States are not eligible for and do not participate in the subsidy program of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended. The same is true of carriers by water engaged in coastwise and intercoastal trades. Consequently none of the carriers by water, the regulation of which would be affected by the pending legislation, falls within the scope of the ship subsidy program of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended.

Moreover, no loans have been made by the Maritime Commission to any carrier by water affected by the terms of the pending legislation. Under the terms of title XI of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, the Commission is authorized to insure certain types of mortgages. Pursuant to such authority the Commission has approved three mortgage-insurance contracts, in each of which the contracting carrier is engaged in operations on the inland waters of the United States. These contracts, wherein the loans were all made by private lending institutions, may be summarized as follows:

1. Borrower, Erie & St. Lawrence Corporation; loan, $225,000; interest, 4 percent; insurance premium, one-half of 1 percent; waterway on which equipment will be used, Atlantic ports to Great Lakes ports via the New York State Barge Canal.

2. Borrower, Central Barge Line Co.; loan, $1,050,000; interest, 5 percent; insurance premium, 1 percent; waterways, Mississippi, Illinois, Ohio, and Kanawha Rivers.

3. Borrower, Wathen & Co.; loan, $50,000; interest, 5 percent; insurance premium, 1 percent; waterways, Chesapeake Bay and the intercoastal canal.

It is obvious, from the foregoing review of facts concerning the application of the subsidy, loan, and mortgage-insurance programs comprised in the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, that the implications contained in the statement attributed to Senator WHEELER are erroneous as related to the authority and the activities of the Maritime Commission.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I recently received a letter from Sherman H. Dryer, radio director of the University of Chicago, asking me to make a contribution toward a forum to be held this coming Sunday on Can We Defend America. I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein my contribution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a resolution passed by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky to memorialize the Congress of the United States in behalf of the bill (H. R. 8368) to provide for investigation of activities of Government employees on behalf of foreign countries.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

STABILIZATION FUND

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, up to date only $200,000,000 of the $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund has ever been actively used. It can be assumed, obviously, that if $500,000,000 were held ready in cash in the Treasury, that sum would be ample. The Secretary of the Treasury is empowered to invest the stabilization fund in Government bonds. I find, however, on inquiry, that only $11,000,000 of this fund has ever been so invested. If instead of that amount $1,500,000,000 had been invested in Government bonds, it would have saved the payment of interest on that amount of the public debt and would have meant an annual saving to the Treasury each year of approximately $30,000,000, assuming an average rate of interest of 2 percent. This is hardly enough to balance the Budget, but certainly it is a sum of money which could be better used in other ways than in paying unnecessary interest on $1,500,000,000 of Government bonds.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter addressed by me to the Commissioner of Corporations and Taxation of Massachusetts, and his reply thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

THE FRANKING PRIVILEGE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, pennies make the dollars. If the Treasury would do what the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] has suggested, $30,000,000 would be saved. But, Mr. Speaker, every year the departments, bureaus, and agencies of this Government are spending more of the taxpayers' money on propaganda. We could save $100,000,000 a year if we took the franking privilege away from the bureaucrats of the various departments and prohibited them from sending out much of the useless material they are now sending out over the country. This was proved last year by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation when the general counsel in that department franked out over a million letters to help a friend in business. He resigned under fire. In 1937 we franked 669,352,068 pieces of mail sent out by these bureaucrats; in 1938, 742,487,204; and in 1939, 970,764,376 pieces of mail. The amount of mail of this kind that is being sent out under the franking privilege is still increasing, so that when you get the report of the Postmaster General for this year the total will show a further increase. Let us stop waste in government. Will you do it?

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, pennies make the dollars. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including an address on Americanism and the American Legion by Dr. Ruth Miller Speese, State legislative chairman, American Legion Auxiliary of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a feature article from the Beverly Hills Citizen, entitled "Congress Resounds," which was responded to by our colleague the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RODGERS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was not objection.

Mr. RODGERS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, there are at least 101 different ways in which my district in northwestern Pennsylvania excels in achievements and production. We will pass up the hundred and mention only 1—and that 1 is apples.

Already in Washington preparations are under way—and rightly so—to make bigger and better than ever before the celebration of our cherry blossom season, a beautiful spectacle, to say the least.

However, by way of comparison, if you could view the hundreds and thousands of acres of apple orchards that adorn our countryside in apple blossom time, resplendent in all the colors of the rainbow, the two spectacles would admit of comparison in about the same proportions as would the far-off glimmer and glow of the Aurora Borealis to the glories and splendors of the noonday sun. From these blossoms later come a harvest of apples—the best in appearance, the finest in flavor, and the most delicious in taste of any apples produced elsewhere in the entire United States—and that is taking in a lot of territory.

My mere statement however is not proof in itself; but, as our lawyer friends would term it, "only hearsay evidence." Therefore—again in the phraseology of our lawyer friends—I wish to submit exhibit A, "A" meaning apples. Through the courtesy of the Erie County Horticultural Society, I am placing in the cloak rooms today several bushels of these world-famous apples for your inspection, ingestion, and digestion. You are welcome. So help yourselves. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including a radio address delivered by me last Sunday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

PURCHASE OF AIRCRAFT MANUFACTURED IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I wonder how much support I could get for a resolution instructing the airplane manufacturers in our War and Navy Departments to turn over to Germany and Russia the designs and blueprints of the most modern aircraft manufactured in the United States. This is exactly what we are doing when we allow these modern planes to be shipped abroad. It is only a matter of days after they arrive in France or Britain until one of them is bound to be shot down, and we have turned over to them not only the blueprints but a specimen copy of the latest developments. If there are not any secrets in the building of modern aircraft, then the manufacturers are wasting thousands of dollars now being spent to guard their experimental laboratories.

POWER TRUST DECLARES WAR IN OKLAHOMA

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

[Mr. RANKIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the committees.

The Clerk called the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further consideration of the calendar be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

AMERICAN YOUTH CONGRESS

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, I present a privileged report on House Resolution 425 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 425

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the House of Representatives all such information as he may possess, or which may be available in the War Department, and which will show, or tend to show—

(a) Whether at any time 3 days prior to or 3 days after the 10th day of February 1940 the War Department furnished transportation to any person who represented himself to be, or was represented by some other person to be, a member of the organization known as the American Youth Congress, or to any person who was in Washington in attendance at any of the meetings held by the American Youth Congress.

(b) If transportation was furnished to any such person or persons, the number of such persons to whom it was furnished, and from what point to what points it was furnished.

(c) The name of the person or persons at whose request such transportation was furnished.

(d) On the occasion in question, whether any request was made from the White House in writing or whether such request was verbal and by whom it was made.

(e) If such transportation was furnished by Government-owned vehicle, whether it was operated at Government expense.

(f) Whether the War Department has been reimbursed for the cost of such transportation.

(g) To what account the cost of such transportation was charged.

(h) Under what authority or by virtue of what law such transportation was furnished.

(i) Whether lodging or transportation has been furnished at Fort Myer to any other persons who were in distress.

(j) If lodging or transportation has been so furnished, when it was furnished and to how many persons it has been furnished.

(k) By virtue of what statute the War Department is authorized to aid persons in distress.

(l) In the letter dated May 13, 1939, addressed to Mr. W. A. Koerber, national commander, United Boys' Brigades of America, 512 Overbrook Road, Baltimore, Md., and signed by E. S. Adams, major general, The Adjutant General, it was stated:

"DEAR SIR: I am requested by the Secretary of War to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 11th instant addressed to the President, which was transmitted to the War Department relative to Army cots and blankets desired for use at the national convention of the United Boys' Brigades of America, being planned to be held in Baltimore May 20 and 21 next.

"The War Department is without authority to donate, loan, or sell Federal property for any purpose, except as may be specifically provided by Congress, and it is therefore regretted, in the absence of legal authority applicable to this purpose, that the Department is unable to accede to your request."

Is the ruling there given out by The Adjutant General in force at Fort Myer?

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERFERENCE WITH NEUTRAL RIGHTS

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I present the following privileged report on House Resolution 422 and ask its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the House of Representatives—

(1) What facts are in possession of the State Department as to the amount of losses sustained by American exporters and importers as a result of interference with neutral rights contrary to international law, and what, if any, provisions for compensation have been made for losses sustained by American nationals as a result of illegal interference.

(2) What information, if any, is in possession of the State Department relative to any attempt by foreign governments to monopolize the commerce of the world through establishment of a blockade under the guise of belligerent rights.

(3) What facts the State Department has with regard to the improper use, if any, made by Great Britain of information obtained through the search and seizure of United States mails and of information contained in applications filed by American citizens with the British consular officers in the United States for the issuance of so-called navicerts, and whether or not information obtained therefrom was passed on by the British Government to its nationals for solicitation of trade in European neutral countries in unfair trade competition with American commerce, with special reference to American cotton and other agricultural products.

(4) What information, if any, is in possession of the State Department as to the improper use made by Great Britain of information contained in applications for certificates of origin and interest filed by American citizens with British and French consular officers at European neutral ports for submission and approval by the British Ministry on Economic Warfare at London, England, and whether or not information obtained therefrom was passed on by the Government of Great Britain to its nationals for solicitation of trade in the United States in unfair competition with American commerce.

(5) What facts, if any, the State Department has relative to the delay in granting of certificates of origin and interest on American property lying in warehouses at European neutral ports resulting in tremendous losses to American citizens.

(6) Whether the State Department has any facts concerning the discriminatory treatment of American commerce by the Allied Governments in contravention of the most-favored-nation policy of the reciprocal-trade agreements concluded with Great Britain and France.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was laid on the table was ordered to lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. Under special order of the House heretofore made, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] for 20 minutes.

JAMES H. R. CROMWELL

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to join in the general chorus of those who are demanding the recall of Mr. James H. R. Cromwell, the American Minister to Canada. I want first to find out more about the exact situation. I want to find out whether he is speaking for the administration; whether Mr. Cromwell spoke with the consent and approval of the President of the United States and with the consent and approval of the State Department.

This action by our Minister to Canada is one of the most unprecedented in the history of American diplomacy. Never before has an American Minister in a foreign land attempted to destroy American neutrality by making a speech in a warring nation denouncing another belligerent nation. It would have been identical if during our War with Spain the German Minister to Spain had denounced the United States, our Government, and what we sought to accomplish in that war. I have known Mr. Cromwell for a long time, and therefore I do not want to judge him hastily. He is new to the Diplomatic Service. He has had no experience whatever in diplomacy and very little with American politics. I venture to call to his attention the remarks of George Washington in his Farewell Address:

Excessive partiality for one foreign nation, and excessive dislike of another, cause those whom they actuate to see dangers only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots who may resist the intrigues of the favorite are liable to become suspected and odious; while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people, to surrender their interests.

This is what Mr. Cromwell had to say:

As Minister of the United States, I am pledged to a policy of neutrality. As you know, this policy has the active support of the overwhelming majority of the American people. But, gentlemen, that is no good reason why we should not face the fact and weigh the issues which confront us.

Mr. Cromwell admits that the overwhelming majority of the American people believe in American neutrality. In other words, the American people believe in our traditional foreign policy of neutrality, nonintervention, peace, and no entangling alliances. Mr. Cromwell, a novice in diplomacy, goes up to Canada and while admitting that is the attitude of the American public, states that he thinks differently, and then launches into a most unneutral attack on a foreign nation. We have the right, in the Congress, to find out whether he is speaking for the President, whether this is part of the administration's program to destroy American neutrality, and to bring about a situation that will involve us in a foreign war.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and is well acquainted with all of these matters and questions relating to foreign entanglements.

Would the gentleman say that a diplomat cannot speak his own individual mind just because he happens to be a representative of a government? Would the gentleman say that he is prohibited from even opening his mouth—that he must sit there as a dummy and say nothing when he sees things before him? I wish the gentleman would enlighten us.

Mr. FISH. I am very glad the gentleman asked that question. Our ministers and ambassadors go to foreign countries in order to preserve and promote peaceful relations, not only with those countries to which they are accredited but also throughout the world. It is the unwritten law of centuries that no minister should attack any nation while acting in the official capacity of minister or ambassador. It would make no difference whether he were our Minister to Canada or to some other country; when he is accredited to a foreign nation and attacks some other country or its government, he has violated every principle of diplomacy that has existed for 1,000 years or more. I am not saying yet, as did the gentleman from Ohio, that he should be recalled. If he is not speaking officially for the administration, it is up to the President to reprimand him.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does this not prove that we ought to send to these posts people who are trained in diplomacy rather than to send political appointees?

Mr. FISH. I think there is a great deal of merit in what the gentlewoman from Massachusetts says, but there are exceptions to every rule. We have had some very able ambassadors who were not trained in diplomacy and we have had some appalling ones.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. SWEENEY. Is it not true that the distinguished Minister to Canada received his appointment because he laid down on the line a huge campaign contribution?

Mr. FISH. That statement, coming from a Democrat, ought to carry weight; he ought to know more about it than we do on the Republican side.

Mr. SWEENEY. I am asking the gentleman if that is not true? I have no access to the records.

Mr. FISH. I do not want to be involved in any of the internal quarrels of the Democratic Party as to the size of campaign contributions. I admit, however, not speaking for this side of the aisle but for myself, that I am in favor of the limitation put in the Hatch bill against contributions in excess of $5,000 by any individual or corporation. I think both parties would be much better off if that principle is enacted into law and goes into effect immediately. [Applause.]

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. SWEENEY. The gentleman is too clever a politician to make that statement with a reservation. If the Hatch law, as amended this week by the Senate, is put into effect with the limitation of $5,000 on contributions from any one corporation or individual, the gentleman knows there will be 1,000 ways to circumvent it.

Mr. FISH. That is the trouble; I wish it were not so. It is my honest belief—the gentleman, of course, can speak for his own party—but it is my honest belief that some of the ultra rich members of the Republican Party have done great harm to our party by creating in the mind of the public the belief that we were dominated by a few rich men. I think they have done us a great deal of harm with the electorate and in getting votes on election day. They do, however, use their money freely in influencing nominations at party conventions and often to the detriment of party success.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. FISH. Yes; if the gentleman will take me back to the Cromwell phase of this discussion.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That was exactly my intention. I feel that the gentleman from Ohio is a little unfair when he injects into this important debate the question of somebody's being appointed because he made a campaign contribution. I do not believe that there has been any evidence produced before this House, or anywhere else to that effect. The gentleman started to answer my statement relative to the personal rights of diplomats.

Mr. FISH. I am not taking issue with the statements of the gentleman from Ohio, because that is a matter for the Democrats to settle themselves—how much a would-be diplomat should contribute. The gentleman from Ohio said he contributed a large sum. The question seems to be how much.

Mr. SWEENEY. I did not say; I would have to find out.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman is going to find this out and I am sure it will interest not only the Members of Congress but the American public as well.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I wanted the gentleman to proceed along the lines he started as to the functions of a diplomat, a representative of this country, whether he has the right sometimes to speak his own mind, or whether he must sit still and be a dummy.

Mr. FISH. That is just what I propose to do. As I stated, during our War with Spain if a German minister to Spain had attacked our Government, our institutions, or war aims, our Government would have protested, immediately, and properly so. That is identically the same situation that exists as far as Mr. Cromwell is concerned. He is our Minister to a warring nation. He denounced another warring nation with which we are at peace. During our war with Spain a French marine infantry regiment passed a resolution of sympathy with the Spanish Government and with its war aims and sent it to Madrid. Immediately our Minister protested and we received a direct apology from the French Government; although the statement objected to came not from an ambassador or a minister, but from a small unit which had merely expressed sympathy for one of the belligerent nations. A fraudulent neutrality is no neutrality. It must be a real and impartial neutrality or a fraudulent neutrality. Certainly it is fraudulent to have our Minister go to Canada representing a neutral Nation and denounce in a lengthy speech one of the warring nations and its form of government.

We have nothing to do with the form of government in any foreign land any more than any foreign country has anything to do with the form of government in the United States of America. But Mr. Cromwell, who is new to diplomacy, took it upon himself to make that type of speech which discredits all American diplomacy and undermines American neutrality. I am not advocating that he be recalled, as does my friend from Ohio. I have known Mr. Cromwell for a number of years. He is inexperienced and new to diplomatic precedents and principles. This may be just a slip. What I want to find out is whether the administration in the person of the President of the United States or the Secretary of State intends to rebuke and reprimand him for his unneutral and unprecedented speech at Toronto.

Mr. Speaker, if the President of the United States does not reprimand him or rebuke him, or if the Secretary of State does not reprimand him or rebuke him, he being an agent of the President of the United States and of the State Department, it can only be assumed that he spoke officially for them. If that is the attitude of the President and the Secretary of State of denouncing foreign nations and their governments and having our ambassadors and ministers likewise denounce them, then the American people have a right to know it. I have stated repeatedly, and I think rightly, that the Democratic Party is the party of internationalism and is rapidly becoming the war party in the United States. But if the President of the United States rebukes his Minister to Canada, then I may be in error and we may be able to still maintain some semblance of American neutrality. Certainly if the President remains silent that should be adequate proof of what I have said before—that the Democratic Party today is the party of internationalism and the Republican Party must be the party of American tradition, neutrality, and of Americanism.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman knows and everyone knows without question right now that the President never advised Mr. Cromwell or told him to make that sort of speech. Neither did the State Department. That would be impossible with the attitude that our President has on neutrality.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman is a lawyer and he knows that an agent speaks for the principal and that the principal is responsible for his actions.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is true.

Mr. FISH. If that is the case, our Ministers and Ambassadors are the agents of the President of the United States who appoints them. There is no question about that. I will not quibble with the gentleman over the question of responsibility because there can be no argument. A Minister represents directly the President of the United States. If he misrepresents the views of the President or misrepresents the views of the American people on such a vital issue as neutrality, which Mr. Cromwell did, and he admits it, then he should be rebuked and officially reprimanded. He admitted that he knew that the American people believed in neutrality and yet deliberately misrepresented their views and violated diplomatic ethics and jeopardized American neutrality.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That may have been his own statement.

Mr. FISH. The administration's action will determine that. The American people overwhelmingly believe in maintaining our neutrality but Mr. Cromwell virtually says he does not care about that and does not represent them and does not believe in American neutrality.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman does not believe that the President or the State Department would permit any Minister or Ambassador to involve us in a controversy of a kind which would violate our neutrality, does he?

Mr. FISH. Does the gentleman believe the speech Mr. Cromwell made does not violate American neutrality?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. He may have stated that on his own responsibility.

Mr. FISH. I hope for the sake of my country and its neutrality that he did, but I am waiting for the Government to act. I am waiting to see whether it reprimands him or not. If the President does not reprimand him, then his statement may logically be said to reflect the views of the White House and of the State Department, and that is exactly what other foreign nations will believe. There can be no question about that. All I am asking is whether the State Department or the President will reprimand him or whether they are going to support him by their silence. If they approve his speech by remaining silent, then it substantiates what I have said for a number of months, that the Democratic Party is the party of internationalism and believes in collective security, economic sanctions, determining the aggressor nation, quarantining and policing the world, and is destroying American neutrality. The President of the United States has the right to be an internationalist and so has the Secretary of State. They have a right to believe in the League of Nations and to advocate collective security, economic sanctions, and the policing and quarantining of the world, but the American people have a right to know where they stand on these issues, and now is the time to find out after that speech of Mr. Cromwell, violating the letter and the spirit of American neutrality.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. As a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, would not the gentleman have the right to call in members of the State Department or Mr. Cromwell himself, if necessary, to determine the question the gentleman is raising so much fuss about and by which he infers that the President acquiesces in the statement of Mr. Cromwell? I do not know what he said and I do not know Mr. Cromwell.

Mr. FISH. I am only inferring that the President and the State Department have acquiesced by their silence and the answer will be known to all within the next few days. If they rebuke him, however, then he does not represent them, and that is what the administration should do unless they agree with him. Of course, if they agree with him, you cannot blame me, representing the minority, for trying to find out if that is the attitude of the Roosevelt administration and whether they believe in disregarding American neutrality and becoming the avowed champions of internationalism or not. If that is the issue before the country, let us take it to the people. I do not believe the rank and file of the Democratic voters believe in internationalism; I do not believe they believe in collective security, economic sanctions, or in quarantining and policing the world; but I am convinced the leaders of the party, such as President Roosevelt and Secretary Hull, are internationalists and are making the Democratic Party into the party of internationalism and war. I hope for the sake of my country they do not, because I believe in American neutrality, in nonintervention, and keeping out of all foreign entangling alliances and foreign wars.

Mr. BARRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BARRY. What qualifications, other than the ability to contribute to party campaign funds, has Mr. Cromwell, our Minister to Canada?

Mr. FISH. The gentleman has asked me a personal question. I would rather he answer it himself, because, as I have stated, I know Mr. Cromwell, and I have visited him, and have nothing but a friendly feeling for him. I am not asking for his recall.

Mr. BARRY. Does not the gentleman think this body should take into consideration the method of selecting the ministers to foreign countries and see to it that they are adequately paid so that men other than those who can contribute to a political party's campaign fund may be selected to represent the United States in foreign countries?

Mr. FISH. That is just what the gentlewoman from Massachusetts has already said. I believe we ought to be a little more careful in our selection of ministers and ambassadors, whether they be Democrats or Republicans. I do not know that it is necessary to put them under civil service if they have the proper training or ability. You do not necessarily have to have a career man, but why take a man who has had no experience whatever?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I know that during Republican administrations men were appointed who had no experience at all, yet they made great Ambassadors and great Ministers. I do not believe that this is the argument before the House at all. The gentleman's discussion is based on whether Mr. Cromwell represented the Government in making a certain public statement or whether he made it on his own hook. If he made it on his own hook without the sanction of the White House or the State Department I do not know why we are making all this fuss, when we have a Committee on Foreign Affairs that can go right into the question and determine it for itself and then present the matter before the American people.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman knows we have no power either to recall any Minister or to rebuke him. I doubt if we have power to do that through any action by the Congress. Mr. Cromwell is merely the agent of the President. The President is the only one who has the power to recall him and the only one who has the power to rebuke or reprimand him. If the President fails to do so, then, of course, what he said at Toronto will be considered as the views of the White House itself by every foreign nation, in accordance with long practice in diplomacy. Our Ministers and Ambassadors are sent to foreign nations to represent the President and through him the United States. When they misrepresent him, of course, they are called to order; but if the President ignores Mr. Cromwell's repudiation of American neutrality, then you cannot help it if the American people and the people in foreign lands believe he is the official spokesman of the President and what he said has the approval of President Roosevelt and the State Department.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot submit that request without the consent of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS], who, under a previous special order, is entitled to be recognized at this time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am authorized to say that the gentlewoman from Massachusetts is willing that the gentleman proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SWEENEY. The gentleman has made a correct statement in saying that there is no power in the Congress to recall a Minister or an Ambassador; it is solely up to the Executive. May I ask the gentleman, however, if it is not true that the Committee on Foreign Relations of this House by virtue of the resolution before it that I introduced today has the power to inquire into the facts as to whether or not our Minister to Canada did make the statement attributed to him in the public press?

Mr. FISH. I believe any Member of the Congress has the right to introduce a resolution of inquiry and ask the State Department about a diplomatic matter, but whether or not the gentleman will get the answer I do not know.

Mr. SWEENEY. I am talking about the gentleman's committee.

Mr. FISH. I doubt if we have any power whatever over any Minister in any foreign land. Certainly we can not insist on his leaving his post and appearing before our committee without the consent of the President.

Mr. SWEENEY. To make inquiry?

Mr. FISH. I do not believe so. We could not recall him even temporarily from his post if he did not want to testify voluntarily.

Mr. SWEENEY. I do not say you could recall him.

Mr. FISH. We could investigate what he said, but that is all we could do.

Mr. SWEENEY. You could make a recommendation to the President.

Mr. FISH. You can read the newspapers and find out exactly what he said. The New York Times of today has a full and complete copy of Mr. Cromwell's speech. The responsibility for any punitive or disciplinary action rests with the President.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. You would not want to recall him without first paying back the $50,000 campaign contribution to the New Deal which was made by the very rich wife of this New Deal multimillionaire Canadian Minister.

Mr. FISH. That is a matter of opinion. I am not seeking to have him recalled, but to ascertain the views of the administration on maintaining American neutrality.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Assuming that the White House or the State Department had nothing to do with that speech, assuming that the statement was made by Mr. Cromwell in his own personal capacity, and assuming further that the statements made by him were true with regard to a certain government's role in trying to undermine our form of government and our institutions, what would be the remedy? I am sure the gentleman would like to answer this question if he can.

Mr. FISH. If he did not speak for the President?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. FISH. The President then ought to reprimand or recall him immediately, if he made that statement repudiating American neutrality and denouncing a foreign nation without the knowledge or approval of the administration.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Assuming the statements made are true regarding undermining our form of government and our institutions, what would be the remedy?

Mr. FISH. Certainly the President ought to reprimand or recall him immediately.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Why?

Mr. FISH. Because it is utterly improper and beyond the practice of diplomacy for a minister to a foreign land, particularly to a nation at war, as Canada is, to attack a foreign government that is at war. We have nothing to do with the form of government in Germany or elsewhere. We will defend and take care of our own institutions and form of government whenever the necessity arises.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. This Minister made a certain statement.

Mr. FISH. Perhaps the gentleman has not read the entire speech. It was of considerable length.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. We read the same newspapers. We all read the same newspapers.

Mr. FISH. The New York Times carried a complete copy of the speech.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. KITCHENS. The gentleman would not place this statement of our Minister in the category of diplomatic finesse, would he?

Mr. FISH. No; there is no diplomatic finesse about it. There are men on this side who would put it in the category of treason, but I am not going as far as that. I am not even here to ask for any specific action except to find out from the administration whether or not they approve of the speech. If they approve it by silence, then it is the attitude and viewpoint of the administration, and we can prepare to fight that issue out in the campaign this fall. The election this November ought to be fought out on the basis of internationalism against American traditions; whether we believe in our traditional foreign policy laid down by George Washington, of neutrality, nonintervention, no entangling alliances, and peace, or whether we propose to send ministers and ambassadors all over the world to deny and undermine American neutrality, and to intervene, and to spread war propaganda in foreign nations. This is only the beginning of the story, and the departure from American neutrality to internationalism. Unless we stop it now and this precedent is established, you will find that all our ministers and ambassadors will be attacking and denouncing foreign governments and their institutions. That is what the people back home want to know—whether President Roosevelt proposes to scrap our traditional foreign policy of neutrality and nonintervention for internationalism and quarantining the world, and, if so, that will be the issue this fall for the American people to decide. [Applause.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER] may be granted leave of absence for a few days because of the death of his father.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is that agreeable to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Yes; Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, penny-wise and dollar foolish is an old, trite axiom but unusually apropos of the situation which I am about to call to your attention.

No Member of this House more earnestly desires to reduce Government spending and the expenses of Government than I do. No Member of this House regrets more deeply than I do the fact that we have not made any worth-while progress in that direction. I will even venture to predict that the people of this Nation will consider this an indication of our stewardship when they take account of us next November.

There are plenty of places for us to step in and make worthwhile reductions in the cost of Government. This Nation is overrun with bureaucrats whose sole purpose of existence is to invade the liberty of the individual and harass the businessmen of the country under the guise of social progress. It is my considered opinion that we could kick out at least a hundred thousand bureaucrats tomorrow and the whole Nation will be the better off.

However there are some agencies of this Government which not only must be continued but might well be given more money. One such agency is the Civilian Conservation Corps, the only New Deal accomplishment which even our dear friends on the far side of the aisle have praised and supported because it has been so singularly successful and so obviously fruitful.

The Civilian Conservation Corps is faced with serious disaster and only this House can prevent it. The Director of the C. C. C. has furnished me with statistics showing that the C. C. C. will have $65,000,000 less to operate with in 1941 than it had in 1940 if the proposed reduction in the C. C. C. appropriation is approved by this body.

If this reduction is permitted, 273 C. C. C. camps will of necessity be closed on April 1, 1940, and the enrolled strength will have to be reduced by 54,600 men and young men. Among those so affected are a great many World War veterans who have found haven and refuge in these camps. It is estimated that between 9 and 10 percent of the enrollees are veterans. If we approve the proposed reduction, then a very great number of these men and young men will necessarily be deprived of the only means of support now available to them. Unquestionably they will forthwith become applicants for the W. P. A., direct relief, or some other kind of assistance, all of which is far more expensive and extravagant and less worth while than the C. C. C. As I see it, the reduction in the C. C. C. appropriation is not in the interest of true economy in government and will undoubtedly achieve the exact opposite result. As long as we spend our money keeping these veterans and young men in the C. C. C. we will have something to show for our investment. Unfortunately, we cannot always say the same of the W. P. A., and certainly not of direct relief.

Let us for a moment consider a few pertinent facts in regard to the C. C. C. program and what it means to this Nation in terms of accomplishment and sound investment.

The report of the Secretary of Agriculture for 1939 reveals that more than two-thirds of the C. C. C. camps have been allocated to the Department of Agriculture for its conservation program. For the fiscal year of 1939, 1,059 C. C. C. camps were assigned to the Department of Agriculture. These camps are located in every State of this Union.

Here is a very significant statement by the Secretary of Agriculture from his annual report:

> The accomplishments of the Civilian Conservation Corps on projects of the Department of Agriculture since 1933 have been extensive and to a high degree permanent. * * * Some authorities believe the C. C. C. has advanced conservation by a quarter of a century. * * * Along with the improvement and betterment of natural resources have gone the betterment and often the salvation of the C. C. C. enrollees. Approximately 1,500,000 young men have worked in the C. C. C. camps under the Department of Agriculture in 6½ years. Formerly undernourished, anemic, discouraged, and listless, these young men have gained in physical, moral, and mental stamina through regular and daily work. It has not been "made work," but work which is recognized as a permanent contribution to national welfare. * * * On leaving the C. C. C. camps at the end of their 2-year periods graduates of the C. C. C. face the world with confidence and energy and with invaluable training.

Not so long ago this city witnessed the sorry spectacle of the National Youth Congress Convention, which was packed with young men not knowing anything of the first principles of democracy and knowing even less about the necessity for work. I venture to say that few, if any, C. C. C. boys were among the misguided horde that infested the Capital a few weeks ago. It is my humble opinion that the C. C. C. program is our most effective answer to the ill-considered vituperations of the so-called youth organizations.

I invite the membership of this House, one and all, to pay a visit to any C. C. C. camp and talk with the boys or the veterans, as I have done on many occasions. View with your own eyes the great work they have done for the Nation and for their personal honor and welfare. If you do this I am sure that you will not permit the proposed reduction in the C. C. C. appropriation.

I find it impossible to reconcile our willingness to authorize the expenditure of $70,000,000 for a single battleship with a movement to take away a much smaller figure from the C. C. C.

The curtailment of a program that has done so much for the conservation of soil and forest, for better roads and highways, and for the bodies and souls of more than a million and a half young men is not economy. It is the most glaring example of folly and abject stupidity.

Thousands of dollars were spent in my city on a tree-counting project in a section of St. Louis where there has been no trees since the Indians left Missouri. Other thousands were spent to preserve the "talent" of unemployed actors and artists; and still more thousands were spent on projects of doubtful value or propriety. Are we going to permit the C. C. C. to be cut after having permitted such practices?

I have yet to hear a sound argument offered against the C. C. C. or its work, from any fair or informed source, and our constituencies are of like opinion.

While there is time let us prevent this threatened disruption and curtailment of the most worth-while accomplishment of 7½ years of effort to bring back America. [Applause.]

DELEGATION OF CERTAIN REGULATORY FUNCTIONS BY THE SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I call up conference report on the bill (S. 1955) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to delegate certain regulatory functions, and to create the position of Second Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1955), to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to delegate certain regulatory functions, and to create the position of Second Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the text of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following: "That as used in this Act—

"(a) The term 'regulatory order' means an order, marketing agreement, standard, permit, license, registration, suspension or revocation of a permit, license, or registration, certificate, award, rule, or regulation, if it has the force and effect of law, and if it may be made, prescribed, issued, or promulgated only after notice and hearing or opportunity for hearing have been given.

"(b) The term 'regulatory function' means the making, prescribing, issuing, or promulgating, of a regulatory order; and includes (1) determining whether such making, prescribing, issuing, or promulgating is authorized or required by law, and (2) any action which is required or authorized to be performed before, after, or in connection with, such determining, making, prescribing, issuing, or promulgating.

"SEC. 2. Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture deems that the delegation of the whole or any part of any regulatory function which the Secretary is, now or hereafter, required or authorized to perform will result in the more expeditious discharge of the duties of the Department of Agriculture, he is authorized to make such delegation to any officer or employee designated under this section. The Secretary is authorized to designate officers or employees of the Department to whom functions may be delegated under this section and to assign appropriate titles to such officers or employees. The position held by any officer or employee while he is designated under this section, and vested with a regulatory function or part thereof delegated under this section, shall be allocated to a grade, not lower than grade 7, in the professional and scientific service provided for by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, or to a grade, not lower than grade 14, in the clerical, administrative, and fiscal service provided for by such Act, as amended. There shall not be in the Department at any one time more than two officers or employees designated under this section and vested with a regulatory function or part thereof delegated under this section. The Secretary may at any time revoke the whole or any part of a delegation or designation made by him under this section.

"SEC. 3. Whenever a delegation is made under section 2, all provisions of law shall be construed as if the regulatory function or the part thereof delegated had (to the extent of the delegation) been vested by law in the individual to whom the delegation is made, instead of in the Secretary of Agriculture. A revocation of delegation shall not be retroactive, and each regulatory function or part thereof performed (within the scope of the delegation) by such individual prior to the revocation shall be considered as having been performed by the Secretary.

"SEC. 4. The provisions of section 2 shall not be deemed to prohibit the delegation, under authority of any other provision of law, of the whole or any part of any regulatory function or other function to any officer or employee of the Department of Agriculture.

"SEC. 5. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act."

And the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

MARVIN JONES,
H. P. FULMER,
CLIFFORD R. HOPE,
Managers on the part of the House.

B. K. WHEELER,

L. B. SCHWELLENBACH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1955) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to delegate certain regulatory functions, and to create the position of Second Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate bill established the position of Second Assistant Secretary of Agriculture and authorized the delegation to him of regulatory functions which the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to delegate under the bill. The House amendment eliminated the provisions for the establishment of the position of Second Assistant Secretary, and authorized the Secretary to delegate regulatory functions under the bill to not more than two officers or employees of the Department of Agriculture, who held positions not below the two top grades in the classified service. The conference agreement follows substantially the policy of the House amendment. It does not establish the position of Second Assistant Secretary, but authorizes the delegation of regulatory functions to officers or employees of the Department. It provides that not more than two such officers or employees shall be vested at any one time with regulatory functions delegated under this act, and that while they are so vested they shall hold positions in grades not lower than grade 7 in the professional and scientific service, or grade 14 in the clerical, administrative, and fiscal service.

The House amendment also included a provision, not in the Senate bill, to the effect that the authority to make delegations to officers or employees under this act should not be deemed to prohibit the delegation of other functions to the same officers or employees under authority of other provisions of law. The conference agreement retains this provision with a change which makes it clear that the act is also not to be deemed to prohibit the delegation of regulatory functions to other officers or employees under authority of other provisions of law.

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title of the bill.

MARVIN JONES,
H. P. FULMER,
CLIFFORD R. HOPE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is going to explain the report somewhat?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes; I may state that this bill originally was introduced in the Senate and carried the creation of a new position, Second Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, but its main purpose was to authorize the Secretary to delegate to certain subordinate officials the matter of conducting hearings and issuing orders in a great many hearings that are required in the Department of Agriculture. Scores of hearings are required in reference to a number of measures like the commodity exchange, Packers and Stockyards Act, and the warehouse law, as well as various other acts. It is not physically possible for all of these numerous hearings to be conducted by the Secretary in person. By delegating this power to a certain limited number of officers in the Department of Agriculture, the matter can be handled not only more expeditiously but in a more judicial way.

In the matter of creating a new position in the Department of Agriculture, the Committee on Agriculture of the House eliminated that provision, and the House passed it in that form. The conference report follows the House provision with only one or two very minor changes. The conference report eliminates the additional position and requires the hearings, and so forth, to be conducted before authorities now in the Department.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. The bill as agreed upon by the conference committee is substantially the same bill that passed the House by unanimous consent?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Almost exactly; it limits, just as the House measure did, the number of officers before whom they may appear.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Does this bill carry with it any additional funds over and above what was passed by the House?

Mr. JONES of Texas. No; it does not. The Secretary of Agriculture is charged with all the duties that are covered in this bill, and it is simply a matter of convenience as to who shall conduct the hearings. It is physically impossible for the Secretary to conduct all of them.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF CODE OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA RELATING TO FIRST-DEGREE MURDER

Mr. NICHOLS submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (S. 186) to amend section 798 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, relating to murder in the first degree:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 186) to amend section 798 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, relating to murder in the first degree, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the text of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

"That sections 798 and 800 of the Act entitled "An Act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia", approved March 3, 1901 (31 Stat. 1189), be amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 798. Murder in the first degree: Whoever, being of sound memory and discretion, kills another purposely, either of deliberate and premeditated malice or by means of poison, or in perpetrating or attempting to perpetrate any offense punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary, or without purpose so to do kills another in perpetrating or in attempting to perpetrate any arson, as defined in section 820 or 821 of this Code, rape, mayhem, robbery, or kidnaping, or in perpetrating or in attempting to perpetrate any housebreaking while armed with or using a dangerous weapon, is guilty of murder in the first degree.

"'SEC. 800. Murder in the second degree: Whoever with malice aforethought, except as provided in the last two sections, kills another, is guilty of murder in the second degree.'"

And the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

JACK NICHOLS,
HERMAN P. EBERHARTER,
EVERETT M. DIRKSEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

WILLIAM H. KING,
FREDERICK VAN NUYS,
G. W. NORRIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 186) to amend section 798 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, relating to murder in the first degree, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate bill amended section 798 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia relating to murder in the first degree. The House amendment also amended such section 798, but substituted a somewhat different and more comprehensive provision and, in addition, amended section 800 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia. The conference agreement adopts the House provisions with a clarifying change.

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title of the bill.

JACK NICHOLS,
HERMAN P. EBERHARTER,
EVERETT M. DIRKSEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill (S. 186) to amend section 798 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, relating to murder in the first degree.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman consulted the Republican membership on the committee?

Mr. NICHOLS. Oh, yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Has the gentleman notified them about calling up the report at this time?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes; and I may state that all this does is to amend the murder statute of the District of Columbia by simply providing that if in the commission of a felony there is a homicide, then they shall be guilty of murder in the first degree.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is a unanimous report?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes; a unanimous report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the St. Lawrence waterway.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SALUTE TO FINLAND

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to extend my remarks by the inclusion therein of an editorial from the Portland Oregonian entitled "Salute to Finland."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HE DIED FOR FINLAND—HE DIED FOR LIBERTY—TRUTH CRUSHED TO EARTH SHALL RISE AGAIN

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, the heart of America throbs for Finland. When the annals of our times shall have been written there will be no more heart-gripping record than that of heroic little Finland, fighting against overpowering odds in defense of her firesides and civilization—fighting to hold back the hordes of barbarism threatening to engulf her. It may be said Finland lost the contest, but she won the enduring gratitude, admiration, and respect of the civilized world. From all the pages of history we find no record surpassing the outstanding heroism, courage, and indomitable defense of home of the fighting men and women of Finland. Civilization for all time is enriched by Finland's unsurpassed accomplishment.

Mr. Speaker, I submit under leave granted to include as a part of my remarks the following editorial appearing in the Oregonian of March 15, 1940, entitled "The Salute to Finland":

[From the Portland Oregonian of March 15, 1940]

THE SALUTE TO FINLAND

It is no overstatement, for this were not possible, to say that the fall of Finland is as a great grief to civilization. By civilization one means freedom of conscience and government in full expression; the right and exercise of an uncoerced, unregimented measure of human happiness. The inalienable right to breathe deeply of liberty. The hour is dark when a people so valiant as the Finns, so imbued with love of country, home, and freedom, goes down beneath the hobnails of an inferior culture and a brutal strength. There is a certain shame, and warranted, that international sympathy and decency were scarcely more than idle observers of this most monstrous outrage.

Yet nothing now is to be gained by recriminations, nor by imagining what might have been and will follow. Such conjectures are vain and cannot, though they speak our chagrin, avail that minor and magnificent nation whose shining valor, unsurpassed in history, was not equal to the task. Deserted and alone the sacrificial Finnish soldiers fought sleeplessly and with dwindling munitions, the fight that is at last to save the world we love from an intolerable despotism. That they should lose the conflict was predestined, for there are cruel circumstances in which the breasts of patriots, however gladly offered, cannot be the ramparts of their country. And yet, in losing somehow, still one thinks they won. Rejoicings in the Kremlin singularly fail of conveying conviction—outfought, outgeneraled, man to man the inferior of the Finnish enemy, it is a curious pride the soviets salvage from such a sorry victory. The victory of Communist arms in Finland is, in the broader aspect, an early battle lost, and in the one cause, through no fault of Finland.

The cynical may ask why civilization sorrows so deeply for Finland, that takes perforce the terms of totalitarian aggression, and somewhat less for Czechoslovakia and Poland, alike ravished by a comrade criminal. The politics of these comparable crimes against free peoples do not concern the common analysis—in which the tall young soldiers of Finland typify to civilization all that is valorous and splendid, a concept that is inclusive of the Finnish people. For it is realized, from the simplicity of the essential facts, that when the world saw Finland fighting the massed might of Russia, that spectacle was of an epic heroism that shall illuminate the historian's page for many a thousand years.

Someday, or so the hope and faith of civilization give voice to the desire, unhappy Finland shall be made whole again and happy. In that gigantic struggle which impends, and which shall fertilize the fields of Europe from the veins of her sons, the victory of the right can never be truly victorious until atonement and reparation in fullest possible degree have been made to those hapless nations that were the first victims of the greed which makes men slaves. Thus Finland, among the others, will have her own again, and fell her own forests and reap her own harvests, or the victory of the democracies shall be a mockery and derision of the right. Not that alone, but also there must be a fitting punishment of those who brought such things as this to pass.

And some will say at this that it is said in the security of America, and without thought to aid. You stir the cauldron, some will say, who are not in it. There is enough of seeming truth in the criticism to warrant raising the question. But now the question properly is that of our American sympathies, and of our privileged concept of the issue yonder in Europe, and is no more than this. We are the audience to such drama as men never dreamed before, and our comment is alike natural and spontaneous. To hate the organized injustice which tramples prostrate Finland seems good to us, for it were shameful not to hate it. And for that matter the Allies themselves have clearly defined their own duty, if now and then they seem to shrink from it. The concept is no more of ours than theirs—though it is they who are at grips with the reality.

To a soldier of Finland, fallen somewhere in the snows, where the spring thaw will discover him, the world would say it thinks he has not died in vain. He died for Finland, it is true, and with such devotion as seldom has been witnessed—but liberty is the universal ideal, and he died for liberty, too. The forlorn battle was lost. And the world, the civilized world, cannot and will not forget him. How was it Bryant phrased the thought?

Truth crushed to earth shall rise again—
The eternal years of God are hers;
But Error, wounded, writhes with pain,
And dies among his worshippers.

The chapter closes, but the book, waiting the full record, is not yet completed. Long live Finland!

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Does the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] desire to use the time that has been allotted to her?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] is temporarily absent from the Chamber, and is unable to use the time allotted to her today. I ask unanimous consent that she be allowed to speak for 15 minutes tomorrow, after the conclusion of the business of the day and any other special orders heretofore made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

UNITED STATES SECURITIES

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I mentioned that I am rather disturbed over the relief problem. I have a few figures here that I desire to have placed in the RECORD and which are very startling. One of the oldest towns in the United States annually appropriates about $900,000. Last year there was spent for relief the following:

Welfare relief, $86,000; dependent children, $15,000; old-age assistance, $124,000; soldiers' relief, $13,000; surplus commodities, $32,000; clothing, $8,000; Federal expenditures, W. P. A., $275,000; local expenditures, W. P. A., $50,000; total, $607,000. That is an amount almost equal to the usual annual budget for all purposes.

There are many States in this Union that are competent to take care of their own relief, but they have soiled their hands by taking money from the Federal Government, even though they must know, and in fact do know, that when payment is made, if it ever is made, they will pay back three, perhaps five, times as much as they have received, because they will also have to pay the share of the so-called backward States. Why are we so dumb?

I also stated yesterday that there is a great deal of nervousness about the public debt. Recently I attended a bankers' meeting, some 25 bankers being present, in a 5-hour round-table discussion, behind closed doors. What they were particularly anxious about—and perhaps four-fifths of the conversation was devoted to it—was this: What is to be the future of United States securities? They were greatly disturbed. When will bonds demand higher interest rates? And then what will happen to those already issued at low rates? Have their portfolios already been filled too greatly with these securities? This must be a constant source of worry to all bankers. I read yesterday that the New York Life Insurance Co. has 25 percent of its portfolio in United States securities. An investigation is now being carried on by the T. N. E. C., and some people are not lacking in suspicion that it is trying to show that the insurance company has lately been welching on taking United States securities, and that this investigation may induce them to take more. The sinking funds of this administration are filled with Government debt certificates. I give you this thought: It is you here who represent the Government. Do not tell your people that the resources of this Nation are back of this Government debt. Such resources are not, except as you vote confiscation, or to tax the people. And, so far as taxation is concerned, you are already determined to tax less, not more. You have realized that you must release business from taxes already too burdensome. You will not confiscate. If certificates of Government debt decline in value, the holders will take their chances, as always. Open-market operations and purchasing by sinking funds may not always be sufficient to support those values. Bonds will be allowed to go down, as they were in 1922 or thereabouts, and should they fall to any such degree, as they did then, there will be real trouble. Are our bankers and insurance companies to be forced to continue to buy securities of the Government? The Government is in absolute and complete control of the financial operations today, and can force these purchases. But there must be an end to this at some point. I am greatly interested in that group of 30 men, of which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] is one, wherein they are trying to find ways to cure unemployment, trying to discover some new money scheme; some new rabbit to pull out of the hat. I say to these 30 Members you can easily find the answer if you will just take up the matter with a comparatively few of the businessmen of the country.

They will tell you, simply and convincingly, what the trouble is with the business of the country—the only instrumentality to put the idle to work.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes, to be used by the Members present.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. When the extension of the reciprocal-trade agreement was before the House we were told that it had so stimulated exports and production that unemployment had been reduced several millions, as the gentleman will recall. Now, however, that we are about to get W. P. A. estimates up here they have wrung the unemployment figures back up to about 10,000,000 or 10,500,000. What kind of bookkeeping is that?

Mr. GIFFORD. Well, their figures usually try to make 2 and 2 equal 5. If we take Colonel Ayers' prediction—and he is perhaps the best authority we have on these matters—it is to the effect that this recession of the last 3 months has been so abruptly downward that, as always before in history, it must continue downward for some time to come. How frightening the New York Times index of business is—the war boom that did not boom; which gave us a little uplift the last 2 or 3 months of 1939 but which went abruptly down in the first 3 months of 1940, and must still go down unless and until another "war boom" occurs, or spendthrift methods are again adopted—another "shot in the arm" in an attempt to dull the pain of a very sick patient.

Mr. KNUTSON. Steel is down to 65 percent of capacity now.

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes; but it is the heart of man that is especially down; the heart of the businessman is growing constantly weaker.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is being destroyed.

Mr. GIFFORD. The only hope is confidence; and it is time we had confidence restored, it has been so sadly shaken. But there can now be no confidence within business with the vagaries and under the lash of this administration.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman believe that with the banks, that is, member banks and nonmember banks, holding in round figures $18,000,000 of Government bonds and obligations, if the market breaks as a result of increasing interest rates we will say, that the open market operations of the Federal Reserve Board would be sufficient to maintain the market on that grand scale?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, for a time we can maintain this market. The Government can print $3,000,000,000 to buy in securities.

Mr. CRAWFORD. No; apparently I have not made myself clear on that. Let us start with the assumption that the banks hold say $18,000,000,000 of Government securities. In the gentleman's opinion can the open market operations of the Federal Reserve Board be on a broad enough scale to support the Government bond market?

Mr. GIFFORD. There must come a time when I do not think it possibly can. I refer again to that meeting of bankers I listened to for some 5 hours. Most of the discussion was devoted to the reassurances of Governor Eccles regarding Government debt. He even said that if we compared ourselves to England we could have a debt of $100,000,000,000. I want to remind the House, however, that England's debt was largely contracted because of her colonies and the great expense involved in taking care of a far-flung empire. She would not have to dispose of many of her colonies to pay her debt. We have little we could dispose of with which to pay ours. What a comparison!

Mr. CRAWFORD. Now, may I ask the gentleman this question? Let us assume, for instance, that the stream of life-insurance premiums flowing from the people's pockets to the investment committees of life-insurance companies are also diverted into investment in Government securities; how much more loss will the Board of Governors be able to maintain on the market that has been built up on that basis?

Mr. GIFFORD. Present indications are that everything is safe for the moment. People seem to wish to own these bonds since they are tax exempt. Maybe we should not tax more, but rather continue to borrow and live on in this "political" paradise. We should perhaps continue to let these poor deluded people, who are willing to buy Government debt at low rates, continue to take their chance.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to have 5 additional minutes. I have something to say that I think will interest the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would remind the gentleman that the gentleman's original time has not expired.

Mr. GIFFORD. But I ask for 5 additional minutes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. Above all things I wish for a return of confidence in the hearts of the people. This frightening third-term bugbear—it is striking at the very heart of confidence in this Nation. I ask the members of the Democratic Party here: Is there but one man among you sufficiently able to act as President of the United States? I have a suggestion to make to you. I have been wanting for some time to make it. You have other notable men who could fill that position. Do not break that tradition, so dear to this Nation. I plead, do not break it. Do not bring it about that next year we will have to have the anointing basin here and the crown that necessarily would be placed on the head of a perpetual ruler. I want to make the suggestion that you have as a Speaker of the House of Representatives a true gentleman, and one fully endowed with all necessary attributes for a Presidential nominee. [Applause.] Why do you not nominate him?

Mr. PATRICK. I second the motion. [Applause.]

Mr. GIFFORD. We Republicans have real affection for him and know his great ability. Why, if he were your candidate, the mouths of the orators of the House on the Republican side would be closed. What could we say against him?

Mr. BOLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOLAND].

Mr. BOLAND. If the gentleman is so sure that the Republican Party is going to be successful next year——

Mr. GIFFORD. I did not mention that, although, of course——

Mr. BOLAND. The gentleman's party seems to act that way. Why is the gentleman so much disturbed about a third term for President Roosevelt? Let me assure the gentleman that my contention is a third term will be nothing but a myth in this coming campaign, and if President Roosevelt is the candidate he will sweep the country again.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am afraid of that possibility. With another half billion dollars for W. P. A., and another cloudburst of checks before election, it might well be another "bought election." Of course, I am afraid that Santa Claus may again be enthroned.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. I regret there are only nine Democrats on the floor at the present time——

Mr. BOLAND. That is enough to compete with the gentleman.

Mr. KNUTSON. To listen to the able tribute paid our beloved Speaker.

Mr. GIFFORD. Again, why give the present incumbent a third term and clothe him with power such as no man on earth ever had before? No ruler was ever before enthroned over a nation with such vast wealth and resources.

Mr. PATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. I think the gentleman is eminently correct in his statement that the Democratic Party has able capable men which it can present. Of course, I think the Speaker of this House stands at the top of the list. But we certainly are not trying to bring forth some fledgling district attorney and trying to run him in.

Mr. GIFFORD. I have sympathy with the gentleman. Incidentally, I pay tribute to the lady who would then be First Lady, should the Speaker be elected President; a very agreeable change. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. If we do run the New York district attorney, it will not be as bad as running a New York international banker, German-mark peddler, and former slot-machine stock promoter as our Democratic brethren did in 1932 and 1936.

Mr. GIFFORD. The Republicans have real issues. We do not pin everything on the personal popularity or the charm of one particular man. The Democratic Party is poor indeed when they have to resort to such a violent and revolutionary doctrine as a third term. But this is now a Government of men; no longer a Government of laws. Bureaucrats are in control. They make rules and regulations having the full force of laws. Nobody now knows what the law is. Today you have to appeal to a bureaucrat to tell you what the law may be from day to day. It is no wonder that the confidence of our people is so entirely lacking in any sort of business endeavor. Behold what their own Government has done to them.

I plead with you Democrats, do not break that tradition so carefully guarded for 150 years. Do not again place a man who has already brought a debt of $45,000,000,000 to this country and knows no other remedy than to increase it billions more. Again referring to the danger of the public debt, I have recited this on the floor of the House before. It is so simply stated and foretells the future so accurately that I want all of you to memorize it:

Hush, little deficit, don't you cry,
You will be a crisis by and by.

[Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COFFEE of Washington asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

SENATE ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 2739. An act to amend section 45 of the United States Criminal Code to make it applicable to the outlying possessions of the United States.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 21 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, March 21, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

R. 8443, to give the Commissioner of Patents power to protect inventors by establishing adequate standards of professional conduct among attorneys; and H. R. 8444, to permit the assignee of an application for letters patent to make certain supplemental applications.

COMMITTEE ON INSULAR AFFAIRS

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Insular Affairs on Thursday, March 21, 1940, at 10 a. m., for the consideration of H. R. 8239, creating the Puerto Rico Water Resources Authority, and for other purposes.

COMMITTEE ON FLOOD CONTROL

SCHEDULE OF HEARINGS ON FLOOD-CONTROL BILL OF 1940 BEGINNING MARCH 18, 1940, AT 10 A. M., DAILY

The hearings will be on reports submitted by the Chief of Engineers since the Flood Control Act of June 28, 1938, and on amendments to existing law. The committee plans to report an omnibus bill with authorizations of approximately one hundred and fifty to one hundred and seventy-five million dollars covering the principal regions of the country.

1. Monday, March 18: Maj. Gen. Julian L. Schley, Chief of Engineers, has been requested to make a general statement, with his recommendations covering a general flood-control bill and the projects that should be included in the bill. He, the president of the Mississippi River Commission, the assistants to the Chief of Engineers, the division engineers, and the district engineers will be requested to submit additional statements as individual projects are considered and as desired by the committee.

2. Tuesday, March 19: Sponsors and representatives of the Corps of Engineers, from New England, New York, and the Atlantic seaboard on all reported projects and pending bills.

3. Wednesday, March 20: Sponsors and representatives of the Corps of Engineers, from the upper Ohio and tributaries, on additional authorizations for levees, flood walls, and reservoirs.

4. Thursday, March 21: Sponsors and representatives of the Corps of Engineers, from the lower Ohio and tributaries, on additional authorizations for levees, flood walls, and reservoirs.

5. Friday, March 22: Sponsors and representatives of the Corps of Engineers, for the upper Mississippi and tributaries, and Missouri River and tributaries.

6. Saturday, March 23: Sponsors and representatives of the Corps of Engineers for projects on the Arkansas River and tributaries.

7. Monday, March 25: Sponsors and representatives of the Corps of Engineers for projects on the White River and tributaries.

8. Tuesday, March 26: Sponsors and representatives of the Corps of Engineers for projects in reports on rivers in Texas and the Southwest.

9. Wednesday, March 27: Sponsors and representatives of the Corps of Engineers for projects in the Los Angeles area and in the Pacific Northwest.

10. Thursday, March 28: Sponsors and representatives of the Corps of Engineers for projects in Colorado and other western areas.

11. Friday, March 29: Sponsors and representatives of the Corps of Engineers for the lower Mississippi River and other tributaries.

12. Saturday, March 30: Sponsors and representatives of the Corps of Engineers for other drainage-basin areas for other projects in other parts of the country.

13. Monday, April 1: Senators and Members of Congress, Department of Agriculture, and other governmental agencies.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1473. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, pursuant to section 1 of the River and Harbor Act approved January 21, 1927, and section 10 of the Flood Control Act approved May 15, 1928, a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated February 27, 1940, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and illustrations, containing a general plan for the improvement of Mississippi River between Coon Rapids Dam, near Minneapolis, Minn., and mouth of the Ohio River, for the purposes of navigation and efficient development of its water power, the control of floods, and the needs of irrigation (H. Doc. No. 669); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with two illustrations.

1474. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated February 27, 1940, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and an illustration, on reexamination of Petersburg Harbor, Alaska, requested by resolution of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, adopted January 24, 1939 (H. Doc. No. 670); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with an illustration.

1475. Doc. No. 671); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with an illustration.

1476. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated February 27, 1940, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and an illustration, on reexamination of Coquille River, Oreg., requested by resolution of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, adopted February 28, 1939 (H. Doc. No. 672); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with an illustration.

1477. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated February 27, 1940, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and an illustration, on reexamination of Compton Creek, N. J., requested by resolution of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, adopted April 27, 1938 (H. Doc. No. 673); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with an illustration.

1479. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated March 12, 1940, submitting an interim report, together with accompanying papers and an illustration, on reexamination of Alabama-Coosa branch of Mobile River system, Georgia and Alabama, with a view to flood protection for Rome, Ga., requested by resolutions of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, adopted April 1, 1936, and April 28, 1936, and the Committee on Commerce, United States Senate, adopted January 18, 1939 (H. Doc. No. 674); to the Committee on Flood Control and ordered to be printed, with an illustration.

1480. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the draft of a bill to provide for retirement of assistant chiefs of branches and of wing commanders of the Air Corps with the rank and pay of the highest grade held by such officers as assistant chiefs and as wing commanders; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1481. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting the draft of a bill to amend chapter 21 of the Internal Revenue Code, relating to the processing tax on certain oils imported from the Philippine Islands or other possessions of the United States, so as to provide uniform treatment for Guam, American Samoa, and the Philippine Islands; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. NICHOLS: Committee of conference. S. 186. An act to amend section 798 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia relating to murder in the first degree (Rept. No. 1821). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. O'NEAL:

H. R. 9006. A bill authorizing the appointment of Robert B. Lorch as a major in the Regular Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

7065. By Mr. COFFEE of Washington: Resolution of the King County National Farm Loan Association, Lake Washington National Farm Loan Association, and Seattle National Farm Loan Association, pointing out that Farm Credit Administration was created to be farmer controlled and owned and nonpolitical in nature; therefore deploring the recent transfer to the Department of Agriculture from the Treasury Department of the Farm Credit Administration, and urging its return to its former status as an independent nonpolitical organization; and deploring the conditions which eventuated in the resignation of F. F. Hill as Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, A. S. Goss as Land Bank Commissioner, and other prominent officers and keymen of the organization; to the Committee on Agriculture.

7066. By Mr. FITZPATRICK: Petition of the Board of Supervisors of Westchester, N. Y., opposing any sugar legislation which is not fair and equitable to New York workers and consumers and which might bring about a reduction in the amount of sugar refining done in the State of New York, by permitting either expansion of sugar refining in the tropics or an expansion of the subsidized beet-sugar industry; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

7067. By Mr. HARTER of New York: Petition of sundry citizens of Buffalo, N. Y., requesting the enactment of House bill 5620, the so-called General Welfare Act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7068. By Mr. KEOGH: Petition of the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, New York City, protesting against the use of animals to test the explosive of Lester P. Barlow; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

7069. Also, petition of the trustees of the estate belonging to the diocese of Long Island, Brooklyn, N. Y., concerning amendment to the Social Security Act, with reference to coverage to church lay employees; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7070. Also, petition of the Merchants Association of New York, concerning the Walter-Logan bill (H. R. 6324 and S. 915); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

7071. Also, petition of the Ladies Aid of George D. Russell Camp, No. 43, favoring sugar legislation that will protect the jobs of the Brooklyn sugar refinery workers; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

7072. By Mr. KRAMER: Resolution of the Highland Park Progressive Democratic Club, of Los Angeles, relative to Work Projects Administration appropriations, etc.; to the Committee on Appropriations.

7073. Also, resolution of the board of directors of the Automobile Club of Southern California, relative to Federal aid for highway projects, etc.; to the Committee on Appropriations.

7074. Also, resolution of the California State Board of Agriculture, relative to migratory labor in agriculture; to the Committee on Labor.

7075. By Mr. PFEIFER: Petition of the Ladies Aid of George D. Russell Camp, No. 43, United States War Veterans, Brooklyn, N. Y., concerning the 1940 sugar legislation that will prohibit further expansion and curtail importation of refined sugar from the Tropics; to the Committee on Agriculture.

7076. By Mr. SWEENEY: Petition of Winton Engine Local No. 207 of the International Union United Automobile Workers of America, urging defeat of Smith amendments to the National Labor Relations Act and support of amendments proposed by the Congress of Industrial Organizations; to the Committee on Labor.

7077. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Fifteenth Annual Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense, Washington, D. C., petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to the American Youth Act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7078. Also, petition of the United Association of Journeymen Plumbers and Steamfitters of the United States and Canada, petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to the United States Housing Authority; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

7079. Also, petition of Local Union No. 230, United Association of Journeymen Plumbers and Steamfitters of the United States and Canada, petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to United States Housing Authority; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

7080. Also, petition of Edmond C. Fletcher, of Washington, D. C., petitioning consideration of resolution with reference to impeachment of the Honorable Bolitha J. Laws, associate justice of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE

THURSDAY, MARCH 21, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, March 4, 1940)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most loving Father, whose tender care reacheth to the uttermost part of the earth, who willest us to give thanks for all things, and to dread nothing but the loss of Thee: Preserve us from all faithless fears and from whatever else may hinder our vision of the Son of God.

"Enable with perpetual light
The dullness of our blinded sight."

O Saviour of the world, who on this day didst give us the divine example of Thy great humility, help us in this always to follow Thee. Thou also gavest us a new commandment, that we should love one another. Help us ever so to do; and as in this night, wherein Thou wast betrayed, Thou didst institute Thy sacrament of love, O may the perfect blending of the human and divine be revealed in us, Thou crucified and risen One, as we worship from the altar of our hearts.

We ask it in Thy name and under the shadow of Thy cross. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Wednesday, March 20, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is unavoidably detained.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATES, INTERIOR DEPARTMENT (S. DOC. NO. 169)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Department of the Interior, fiscal year 1941—for the reclamation fund, special fund—Klamath project, Oregon-California, $200,000; restoration of lower Klamath migratory waterfowl refuge, $70,000; in the total amount of $270,000, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MONTHLY REPORT OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation submitting, pursuant to law, a report of the activities and expenditures of the Corporation for the month of February 1940, together with statement of condition of the Corporation as of the close of business February 29, 1940, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PETITION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the supplemental petition of the committee representing the original stock and guaranteed mortgage certificate holders in the Fidelity Union Title & Mortgage Guaranty Co., of Newark, N. J., signed by W. D. T. Libby, chairman, praying for a congressional investigation of the subject matter of the original petition filed on or about April 1, 1939, and the present supplemental petition relative to difficulties of the original stock and mortgage certificate holders in the matter of the Fidelity Union Title & Mortgage Guaranty Co., the Fidelity Union Trust Co., and other companies, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

ADDRESS BY AMBASSADOR JAMES H. CROMWELL AT TORONTO, CANADA

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, nearly all Senators have been receiving letters of protest against the speech delivered at Toronto, Canada, by the American Ambassador to Canada. One letter coming to me from a prominent professor at Phillips Academy at Andover, Mass.—one of the most outstanding preparatory schools in America—has so impressed me as expressing my own view and the views of all prudent and patriotic Americans, that I am going to ask to have it read at the desk, treated as a petition, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. Let me add that it is gratifying to learn that the State Department is already investigating this most undiplomatic utterance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

PHILLIPS ACADEMY,
Andover, Mass., March 20, 1940.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: As one of your supporters and as one who has appreciated your many stands on national and international matters, I bear record that some pressure must be brought to bear to either recall the United States Minister to Canada, Mr. James H. Cromwell, or have the Washington authorities disavow his pronouncements that were made before the joint luncheon of the Canadian and Empire Clubs of Toronto.

I heard his remarks and if I have any judgment they sounded more like the pronouncements of one from Canada or from Great Britain. Certainly the spoken words were not those of an American diplomat. This business of lecturing other nations, of mentioning heads of other governments, and of citing what Germany is, etc.—well, it is time that our representative diplomats carry themselves properly. I need not go into detail as to what was said, I am very sure you have official records to support the reflections I am making.

I am a veteran of the last war, saw action, am married with two fine children, a boy and a girl. I bear record that I do not want my children to be led astray by such ignorant and unwise statements. I am strong for America to be strong and to attend to her own business. It is time Washington takes record of the wishes of the good people of this country. How about taking some responsibility and see to it that a sharp reprimand be given to this supposed American diplomat?

In full hopes that this criticism will not go amiss, I am

Very truly yours,

WINFIELD M. SIDES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The letter, in the nature of a petition, will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3840) to amend the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1335) thereon.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on March 20, 1940, that committee presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 2739) to amend section 45 of the United States Criminal Code to make it applicable to the outlying possessions of the United States.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SCHWELLENBACH:

S. 3642. A bill granting the consent of Congress to the Secretary of the Interior and the State of Washington to construct, maintain, and operate a highway bridge across the Spokane River, Wash.;

S. 3643. A bill granting the consent of Congress to the Secretary of the Interior and Stevens County, State of Washington, to construct, maintain, and operate a highway bridge across the Kettle River, near Kettle Falls, Wash.; and

S. 3644. A bill granting the consent of Congress to the Secretary of the Interior and the Great Northern Railway Co. to construct, maintain, and operate two railroad bridges across the Kettle River, near Kettle Falls, Wash.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WAGNER:

S. 3645. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act to provide books for the adult blind," approved March 3, 1931 (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. BRIDGES:

S. 3646. A bill for the relief of Angelina Chartier; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. BANKHEAD:

S. 3647. A bill for the relief of Paul Sanford, a minor; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HATCH:

S. 3648. A bill for the relief of Lane P. Criswell; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR CIVIL FUNCTIONS OF THE WAR DEPARTMENT—AMENDMENTS

Mr. MALONEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 8668) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 9, line 25, insert the following: "Provided further, That the flood-control project at East Hartford, Conn., authorized by the Flood Control Act approved June 28, 1938, shall be constructed in accordance with the revised plans and cost estimates described in House Document No. 653, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session."

Mr. MALONEY and Mr. HILL, jointly, submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate a sum not to exceed $800,000 as an emergency fund for flood control on rivers or tributaries other than those of the Mississippi River, intended to be proposed by them to the bill (H. R. 8668) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. HAYDEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 8202, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, 1941, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 25, line 15, insert the following: "Provided further, That not to exceed $5,000 of the amount herein made available may be used to purchase and supply beef to the Seminole Indians of the Big Cypress Swamp area, Hendry County, Fla., during the time that deer infested with cattle ticks are being removed from said area and until such area is restocked with deer."

PRINTING OF MONOGRAPHS ON ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE

Mr. HAYDEN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 248), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the monographs published by the Attorney General's Committee on Administrative Procedure embodying the results of the investigations made by the staff of said committee relative to the practices and procedures of the Division of Public Contracts, Department of Labor; the Veterans' Administration; the Federal Communications Commission; the United States Maritime Commission; the Federal Alcohol Administration; the Federal Trade Commission; the Administration of the Grain Standards Act, Department of Agriculture; the Railroad Retirement Board; the Federal Reserve System; the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, Department of Commerce; the Administration of the Packers and Stockyards Act, Department of Agriculture; the Post Office Department; the Bureau of the Comptroller of the Currency, Treasury Department; and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, be printed as a Senate Document; and that 1,300 additional copies be printed for the use of the Joint Committee on Printing.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 1361) for the relief of Henry Fischer, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 1398. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917, as amended, to increase the penalties for peacetime violations of such act; and

S. 1750. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to convey to the town of Marmet, W. Va., two tracts of land to be used for municipal purposes.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 1361) for the relief of Henry Fischer, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION—ADDRESS BY SENATOR SHEPPARD

[Mr. SHEPPARD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by him on Tuesday, March 19, 1940, over the Mutual Broadcasting System, on the subject National Transportation, which appears in the Appendix.]

EFFECT OF BRITISH EMBARGO ON AMERICAN PRODUCTION OF TOBACCO

[Mr. BYRD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a statement made by him before a joint committee of the civic clubs of Danville, Va., on March 13, relative to suggestions for the improvement of conditions confronting tobacco growers and tobacco manufacturers, which appears in the Appendix.]

FOOD-STAMP PLAN—LETTER OF SENATOR PITTMAN TO THE SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE

[Mr. PITTMAN asked and obtained leave to have inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD a letter written by him to the Secretary of Agriculture relative to the inauguration of the food-stamp plan, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE NATIONAL FARM PROBLEM—ADDRESS BY SENATOR WHEELER

[Mr. LA FOLLETTE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address by Senator WHEELER over the Mutual Broadcasting System on March 20, 1940, on the national farm problem, together with the introductory remarks by Chester H. Gray, which appear in the Appendix.]

AGGRESSION ON POLAND

[Mr. TOBEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by George Rothwell Brown entitled "The Political Parade," published in the New York Journal-American of March 20, 1940, which appears in the Appendix.]

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8202) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate took a recess yesterday there was pending an appeal by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] from the decision of the Chair. The question before the Senate at the moment is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the records of the Senate are replete with instances of the Senate, after an appeal from the decision of the Chair, giving a liberal interpretation to the rules of the Senate. It is my fervent hope that a majority of the Senate will see its way clear to take that position upon this question. In order, however, that there may not be any misunderstanding so far as my own attitude is concerned, in order that the Senate may appreciate the serious situation which I think is involved in the amendment which I seek to tender to this bill, and in the hope that a majority of the Senate may be persuaded to see the situation as I do, I desire first of all to discuss the situation confronting the farmers of the country, and to discuss the amendment which will be in order if the Senate reverses the decision of the Chair.

Mr. President, I think every student of the economic history of our country since 1917 will be forced to the conclusion that one of the prime factors in producing the problem with which we have been wrestling since the onset of the economic crisis in 1929 was the effect of the war and post-war conditions upon the economy of this country. At a time in the 1920's when many Senators and a large number of others seemed to believe that we had entered a new economic era, I took occasion to point out in the Senate time and time again that the farmers of this country were already in a serious economic situation; that they were obtaining less and less of their proportionate and fair share of the national income; and that the continued disadvantage, from an economic standpoint, of this great basic industry and those dependent upon it directly and indirectly could only ultimately result in a serious economic collapse. Since that time efforts have been made by this administration to meet the problem of the American farmer; yet I think we will all have to agree that, despite these efforts, we have not solved the problem. Today, despite all of the efforts which have been put forth by the legislative and executive branches of government, while the farmers comprise 25 percent of the total population, they receive only 11 percent of the national income.

In my opinion, three major factors are responsible for this situation. One is the scientific agriculture which has been followed in ever-increasing measure and which has resulted in an increase both in the quality and quantity of agricultural production in the United States. I shall not pause long enough this morning to cite more than a couple of examples. The yields of corn in the 10 Corn Belt States were, in the years 1936 to 1939, 22.8 percent above the 1929–33 average. Yields of cotton lint are 35 percent greater per acre today than they were 10 years ago.

The marked advance in technological and scientific improvement of farm methods and practices in the United States was graphically illustrated by the Secretary of Agriculture when he said:

> One hundred and fifty years ago it required 19 people living on the land to support themselves and 1 person in town. Today 1 person on the land supports himself, 3 people in town, and 1 overseas.

There is a second factor which has resulted in depriving the farmer of his fair share of the national income. It is a factor of recent appearance, and I fear has only begun to manifest itself. I refer to the impact of the war in Europe on the farmer and the producer of nonmilitary manufactured goods.

Great Britain and France and some neutrals have, since September 3, 1939, gone totalitarian in their techniques of foreign trade and control of their domestic economy. The belligerents are using these weapons as a part of their economic warfare. Already serious results have flowed from this policy, and we do not yet see the end of it.

Our exports of tobacco, fruits, canned fruits, and vegetables have been seriously injured. Exchange provisions with regard to South American trade with Great Britain, in which they have announced that purchases of commodities in South America from the British Empire will be paid for in dollar exchange, will mean, of course, less dollar exchange remaining for the nationals of those countries to the south of us with which to purchase American-manufactured and other products.

There are two ways, in my opinion, of meeting this serious problem. One is the adoption of a vigorous policy to protect our normal export trade, a policy which will put an end to this procedure of "taking it on the chin." Farmers and producers of nonmilitary manufactured products in the United States should not be asked to bear the brunt of the war. When the reciprocal trade agreements measure is taken up for consideration by the Senate, I intend to offer an amendment which I believe would set up an instrumentality which would give the executive arm of our Government, if it chose to use it, an effective means of meeting the situation confronting our normal export trade. It is not my purpose to do more than to suggest this morning the imminence of this problem as it affects farmers and the producers of nonmilitary manufactured products in the United States.

The second way in which we can meet this problem is by providing for an increased consumption on the part of the American people, and thus to ease further the blow which farmers in this country are now suffering, and which I fear they will continue to suffer to an even greater degree as the war in Europe progresses.

Therefore, Mr. President, I have attempted to offer to the pending appropriation bill this amendment providing $113,000,000 additional money for the purposes of section 32; in order that we may augment the funds necessary to cushion the shock of war upon the American farmer. As has been said again and again in this Chamber and elsewhere, we have a huge potential market here at home for farm products.

Some time ago the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the Bureau of Home Economics, and the National Resources Committee made a study of incomes during 1935–36 according to certain specified income groups. The figures were graphically presented to the Temporary National Economic Committee by the able Commissioner of Labor Statistics, Dr. Lubin. They show in general that in 1935–36 there were 29,400,000 families and 10,000,000 single people in the United States, representing 126,000,000 of our population. They show that 4,000,000 families, or 14 percent of the total number of families in the United States, had an average income of only $312 in 1935–36. Eight million other families, or 25.5 percent of the total, had an average income of $758 a year. About 7,000,000 families, or 23 percent of the total, had an average income of $1,224. Nearly two-thirds of the families in this, the richest nation on earth, had an average income of $1,500. The annual average was only $826, or $69 a month, for a whole family.

Mr. President, in my opinion, we should not be misled by average family income statements. In 1935, for example, the average for all families was $1,622, but 65 percent of the people were getting on an average only about one-half of that amount.

In 1935 over 29,400,000 families spent $13,700,000,000 for food, but only $848,000,000, or 6 percent, came from the 4,200,000 families of the lowest income group, who are 14 percent of all the families.

This group constitutes a great potential market for both farm and manufacturers' products in this country, and it can be utilized to cushion the shocks of European war-trade control, and embargoes, and licenses, upon the American farmer.

Only 20 percent of this sum came from another 8,000,000 families, who made up 27.5 percent of the total. In short, nearly 42 percent of our families provided only 26 percent of the farmer's food market. Studies show that 14 percent, with average incomes of $312 a year, are spending only $1 a week per person for food.

Mr. President, further studies have been made on the basis of the studies to which I have referred in an effort to ascertain what the effect is upon the food purchases of families in the lower income groups when their incomes are increased. With an increased income to $758 a year the per capita expenditure for food rose to $1.62 a person a week. With an increased income to an average of $1,224, the per capita expenditure a week rose to $2.18 for food. In other words, families with incomes under $500 a year spent about 5 cents a person a meal for food. Families getting $100 per month spent 10 cents a meal a person, or double the amount, and therefore the farmer's market doubled.

These studies show that if all families getting less than $100 a month could be raised to that level—and I submit that $100 a month for a family is not an overly ambitious goal—this would have meant an increase in food expenditures of around $1,900,000,000, or 51 percent increase in food expenditures of these people. The farmers would have gotten about $1,000,000,000 more directly. It would have lifted the demand and improved farm prices.

Mr. President, those millions of families with less than $500 a year average income bought only 38 percent as much fruit as the group receiving about $100 a month.

The meat purchases of the $500 a year or under group were only 56 percent of the per capita expenditures of the group which receives around $100 a month.

Those receiving $500 a year or less purchased only about 43 percent as much dairy products as those who were receiving around $1,200 a year.

Those with incomes of $500 a year purchased only 57 percent as many eggs as the group receiving around $1,200. They purchased only 58 percent of the vegetables that were purchased by the group receiving $100 a month on the average.

Mr. President, I realize that these are cold statistics, but an examination of them will persuade any person who pauses long enough to study them that here is a great potential market, here is a great potential outlet for the producers of farm products. They will likewise, in my opinion, dislodge any feeling of complacency upon the part of those who assume that we have in this country a standard of living for a substantial portion of our population that we can point to with any pride. In fact, it is an indictment of our failure to solve the problem of distribution.

Mr. President, in my opinion, the stamp plan inaugurated under section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is the most efficient and the most effective device which has yet been worked out, that seeks to deal with the problem of underconsumption of essential food products on the part of substantial percentages of the population of the richest Nation on earth.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHIPSTEAD in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I wonder if the Senator from Wisconsin feels that the stamp plan represents a final adjustment, or whether it is merely a stopgap in the handling of this very serious problem which he has so correctly described.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I was about to come to that, but I shall be glad to discuss it at this point, in view of the interruption of the Senator, which I welcome.

Of course, I do not regard the stamp plan as a permanent solution of this problem, but I do say that it is the only device at hand; that it has been tried out upon a sufficiently large scale to show that it is effective in helping to increase consumption of our surplus farm commodities; that it has had a very substantial influence in preventing the prices of these surplus commodities from falling even farther below their disastrously low level; and that it has increased the dietary standards of substantial numbers of people in this country. But, of course, it is not a final solution.

On the other hand, Mr. President, in view of the situation which confronts us so far as world trade is concerned, in view of the situation which confronts the farmers of this country, I say that the Senate should not be unwilling to reverse the decision of the Chair in this emergency situation and permit this amendment to be considered upon its merits.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I quite agree with what the Senator has said about the fairness of the plan as a method of removing surplus commodities and of tending to maintain prices for the agricultural producer, and because of that belief I was one of the Senators who in the committee voted to put in the amendment which appears as the committee amendment.

But I interrupt the Senator long enough to make this remark: It seems to me to be an appalling situation that according to the testimony of Mr. Perkins, the very able Administrator of the Surplus Commodities Corporation, there are approximately 14,000,000 persons in the United States who are now certified as eligible to take advantage of this stamp plan.

I think of it in this light. There are 14,000,000 persons who are authorized to take advantage of this plan and to buy two orange stamps for 25 cents apiece, and to receive at the same time as a gift a blue stamp which also has the face value of 25 cents. It means that between three and one-half and four million American families are, through no fault of their own, compelled to resort to this relief method to obtain food. This seems to me to be an appalling indictment of the conditions which exist in this country. When one considers what is happening on the farms and in the rural areas, where farm tenancy is increasing apace, and what is happening in the great urban centers where we have been obviously wholly unable by way of Government expenditures to take care of unemployment, we seem to be headed straight for the creation of a peasant class in America, something which should stir to the very heart every Member of the Congress. It is the overriding problem before us, and I am convinced, Mr. President, that it cannot be solved merely by increasing appropriations. We must go to the heart of this matter. We must find a way to provide real employment, both on the farms and in the cities, so that those who are out of work may find jobs at real wages, so that they may become a real market for the products of the farm, as well as of the factory.

Distribution is our task; distribution, not on a relief basis but upon a basis of full employment. Unless we are willing to face the very real possibility of making relief a permanent Government activity and of creating a permanent class of underprivileged, to use a much-used phrase, we must turn our attention to the problem of providing real employment in private industry for all who are willing and able to work.

Not by relief appropriations but by helping industry to create jobs shall we find the way out.

I am sorry to have interrupted the Senator.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No, Mr. President; I am pleased to have had the Senator's interruption, and I digress long enough to say that I think I have indicated by my record here and by the speeches which I have made ever since 1929 that I am fully aware of the magnitude and the gravity of the problems with which this country is confronted. I believe that unless we find solutions for them the whole feature of the democratic process is in jeopardy.

But, Mr. President, because we have not been able to agree upon and to inaugurate fundamental policies and programs to meet these problems is no argument against utilizing those devices which purchase time in which we can work upon these fundamental solutions. The statement of the able Senator from Wyoming, who has shown his great interest in these problems through the splendid work of the Temporary National Economic Committee, is only a further argument in favor of taking action upon this amendment on its merits. I shall show before I conclude that the recommendation of the committee, while, of course, I approve it because it was an increase over the Budget estimates and because it was placed in this bill after it had passed the House without any provision for additional funds—I shall show, I believe, that in the light of the achievements which have already been won under the stamp plan, and in light of the demonstrated demand that it be extended, in the light of those facts, and in the light of the further facts which are staring us in the face, if we but have the wisdom to study them as to what the effect of the policy of the nations at war and neutral nations is having and will have upon our export trade, we are justified in not sustaining the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I recall a statement some time ago by Dr. Alexander, the head of the Farm Security Administration, to the effect that in a recent period more than 1,000,000 farmers had left American farms due to the mechanization of the farm. It has seemed to me that much of our problem is to make our political processes keep pace with technological and scientific changes which have been wrought in the lifetime of most of us. I recall reading a year or more ago a statement from one of the brilliant young chemical engineers of the country, in which he made an astounding assertion. Since it came from a most respectable source, I take it that he and his organization were quite prepared to sustain it in fact. He said that American chemists have now developed synthetic chemical fertilizers so potent that with their use one-fourth of the arable land in the United States could produce more than enough to feed and clothe America in abundance.

We have implicit faith in that sort of thing—a great tragedy unless the problem be correctly handled. It certainly bespeaks the necessity for making our political processes keep pace with technological change. Otherwise disaster will overwhelm us, and we shall find one disaster tumbling on the heels of another. We pass a law, and then we find that science, which we cannot repel—and would not if we could—is daily presenting new problems to us. What was once possible is now probable; and while we wrestle with the problem the young men in our universities and in the scientific divisions of our great institutions of learning are daily handing us new achievements and new faites accomplis of some sort, which further complicate the efforts of the Congress.

I do not know what the answer is, unless we set ourselves vigorously to the task of so arranging our political machinery as to keep pace with that sort of thing. Otherwise we shall be overwhelmed.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. The distinguished Senator who has just spoken has brought out a point which I believe ought to be emphasized in the course of this debate. Before I make the observation I have in mind I wish to say that the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], by reason of the soundness of the policies he is enunciating, has lifted the debates to the level where we are really making an attempt to get down to the fundamentally basic principles involved in the problem. The policies which he is enunciating are logical and rational, and in nowise savor of the political.

The Senator from Wisconsin has made the point that, because of the involved condition of affairs in the Old World, with embargoes and licenses operating against the well-being of our farmer, we ought to retain all the gains we have accomplished and expand them in order to increase consumption at home. The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] has made a contribution by referring to the progress which has been made in soil productivity. Along that line I wish to add that, in addition to the increase in soil productivity, there has been an increase in the productivity of the labor on the soil from two to threefold in the last score of years. In the field of agrobiology there is a store of information and knowledge which can increase soil productivity threefold within a few years if it is allowed to proceed.

It is because of these overwhelming conditions, storing up devastating surplus upon devastating surplus, that we should follow the lead of the Senator from Wisconsin and not only retain this beneficial agency but expand it and increase it with all the power and resources at our command.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I very much appreciate what the Senator from New York has said. I also appreciate the interruption of the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE]. I do not desire at this time to debate the broader questions raised by the statements of the Senators from New York and Washington. I hope at some time in the future, before this Congress adjourns, to be able to submit to the Senate some observations on the alarming situation which I think confronts agriculture in this country, and, as I believe I shall be able to demonstrate, the unmistakable signs that unless we adopt comprehensive measures to remedy the situation confronting the farmer, within the foreseeable future we shall be confronted with practically a complete disappearance from the American economic scene of the individually owned, home-operated farm as a way of life. When that time comes, Mr. President, if it does—and I hope to God it will not—the entire character of our economy will have been fundamentally altered.

In addition to the problems suggested by the two Senators who have interrupted me, we have the problem of farm debt, which is another factor grinding away upon the farmer today. To meet this phase of the problem, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and I have introduced a bill now pending in the Senate Banking and Currency Committee.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I wish to submit a suggestion for the consideration of the able Senator from Wisconsin. In the Senator's address on this subject he has demonstrated—as he always does—that he has given the matter very careful consideration. Some Senators—I am one of them—are in a dilemma. I am of the opinion that the ruling of the Chair is correct. Much as I desire to help accomplish what the able Senator from Wisconsin seeks, I could not vote to override the ruling of the Chair, because in my judgment the Chair followed the rule.

I submit for the consideration of the able Senator from Wisconsin the suggestion that he might move to suspend the rule. I should gladly follow his leadership in that direction and should vote to suspend the rule, whereas I doubt if I could vote to override the ruling of the Chair without violating my own feelings. In this posture of affairs, in view of the arguments of the Senator and the indisputable facts, I believe he could secure a two-thirds vote on the suspension of the rule, so that the main question would be properly before us. Not a few Senators agree in toto with the arguments of the able Senator from Wisconsin; but, as I say, they hesitate to override the ruling of the Chair when they feel that the Chair has made a ruling which is correct and in accordance with the precedents.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I should be the last to wish to cause the able Senator from Arizona any intellectual discomfort. However, if I desired to take the time of the Senate I believe it is no exaggeration to say that I could cite at least 100 instances in which the very thing I am appealing for has been done. We all know, Mr. President, that in many instances when the Senate is impressed with the urgency and the necessity of action the Senate, by a majority vote, has placed a liberal interpretation upon the rules. I appreciate everything the Senator from Arizona has said about my ability to persuade the Senate; but I am convinced that there is no prospect of obtaining a two-thirds vote in favor of suspending the rule.

Mr. President, I was about to discuss the stamp plan. Studies show that persons receiving public assistance spend an average of a dollar a week a person for food. That amounts to 5 cents a meal. I wonder if Senators appreciate what that means. Under the stamp plan, on a voluntary basis, such persons as have been certified by the public authorities as being eligible in designated cities and areas may buy a minimum of one dollar's worth of orange stamps a week for each member of the family. The orange stamps are good at any and all grocery stores for any and all products which the purchaser of the book desires to buy.

Those who buy the orange stamps receive free half again as much in value of blue stamps. The blue stamps are in lieu of the surplus commodities previously distributed directly by the relief authorities through food depots in the designated cities where the plan is in operation, the relief authorities having received the surplus from the Surplus Commodities Corporation. The blue stamps are good in any grocery store in the community, but they may be utilized only to purchase the commodities which have been designated by the Secretary of Agriculture to be surplus commodities and placed upon the eligible list to be purchased with the blue stamps.

The grocers paste the stamps on cards which hold $5 of the stamps after they have been utilized for purchases in their stores. The grocers redeem the stamps through the banks, through the wholesalers, or directly through the Surplus Commodities Corporation itself.

The blue stamps are paid for by the funds which we provide under section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act and any money which may be appropriated to augment that fund.

The result is that such persons have 7½ cents a person a meal instead of 5 cents. The commodities which have been listed for purchase have been changed from time to time, as the surplus or the price of the commodity seemed in the eyes of the Secretary of Agriculture, after investigation, to justify placing the commodity upon the surplus list or removing it therefrom. I wish to emphasize, Mr. President, that while the program is of benefit to the recipients of the stamps in the designated cities, because it tends to lift their already meager budgetary allowance for family food, it has been operated from the beginning, primarily as a means of meeting the surplus problem of the American farmer; and I am confident it will be so operated so long as it remains in existence.

The first list made eligible for purchase of blue stamps contained butter, eggs, white and graham flour, cornmeal, dried prunes, oranges, grapefruit, and dried beans.

On July 16, oranges and grapefruit were dropped, and rice, fresh peaches, fresh pears, cabbages, peas, tomatoes, and onions were added.

On October 1, peaches, cabbages, pears, tomatoes, and rice were dropped, and raisins, apples, snap beans for the month of October and pork lard were added.

On December 15, pork meats, rice, hominy grits, oranges, and grapefruit were added.

Senators will notice that some of these commodities went on and off the list as time went on. I cite that fact simply to show that the Department has been conscientiously gearing this program, in the light of the amount of production and the price, to meet the most serious situations which confronted the producers of farm products, and that the list has not been made up from the standpoint of providing commodities which might be in demand by the users of the stamps.

Mr. President, by July 1 of this year the plan will be in operation in approximately 100 cities in the United States. I think all those who have made any study of the situation are impressed with the fact that Mr. Perkins and those associated with him in the administration of the plan have moved cautiously. At the outset they moved only into experimental cities, in order that they might have experience with the operation of the plan before it was further extended. In other words, the plan has received a very conservative, businesslike administration, and has not been permitted to have any mushroom growth which might have destroyed its effectiveness.

Furthermore, Mr. President, I think it should be emphasized that this plan is not put into operation until the communities desiring to have the plan designated have indicated by a widespread representation of the various aspects of the community life that they desire to see the plan inaugurated. Usually the plan is initiated by farmers desiring to have their primary or principal marketing area designated. Then the matter is later taken up by the city authorities or the governmental authorities in the area, because it is necessary for them to take action in order to provide an initial revolving fund to finance the plan. Then, usually, various other public-spirited organizations in the community come in and help to inaugurate the plan.

By July 1 between three and four million persons will be within the purview of this program in the approximately 100 designated cities.

I also wish to emphasize that in the operation of this plan all commodities are handled through regular commercial channels. There is no intervention of the Government as a purchaser at any point. Therefore all the machinery necessary for the distribution of food commodities already in existence as a result of the normal channels of wholesale and retail distribution is utilized for this purpose.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. BAILEY. I am very much interested in the Senator's description of the plan, but I am still without adequate information as to how it operates. Last week some merchants from North Carolina came to see me about the plan. They are very much in earnest for the plan.

Let me ask the Senator a question. Assume that the authorities in the administration find that there is a surplus, say, of oranges. Then they authorize the merchants to deliver so many oranges to a person with a blue slip upon his purchase of a certain amount of goods. Is that correct? They do not give out the oranges independently of a purchase, as I understand. A person with a blue slip comes to buy something and he gets, extra, something else?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, in the first place, the plan is entirely voluntary, insofar as any persons desiring to make use of it are concerned.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. However, if I were on relief, or were designated as eligible for this plan in Madison, Wis., and if that city were designated, as it happens to be, it then would be possible for me to go to a designated place in the city, and I could buy a dollar's worth of orange stamps in cash.

Mr. BAILEY. Where does the Senator get the money with which to buy the dollar's worth of orange stamps?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I get that money either from the relief agency, or if I am on W. P. A., from it, or from any other source if I am certified. In some communities even persons who are receiving a small pension, insufficient to sustain the family, might be designated.

Mr. BAILEY. Suppose the Senator made a dollar.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is all done by the local relief authorities. They are the ones who make up the eligible list.

Mr. BAILEY. The first point is, the purchaser must have something in order to get the blue slip. He has a dollar, say.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then he may get a dollar's worth of orange stamps.

Mr. BAILEY. If he had a dollar that he made himself, or a dollar that the local charitable authorities gave him, he has a dollar, and he puts up a dollar, and then he gets a blue stamp?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. He gets 50 cents' worth of blue stamps if he buys a dollar's worth of orange stamps; but the Surplus Commodities Corporation does not pay any attention to and does not have the responsibility of designating the persons who are eligible.

Mr. BAILEY. Who does designate them?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The local relief authorities, just as they would for the W. P. A., or just as they would make them eligible for direct relief.

Mr. BAILEY. Is that a matter of public record?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is a matter of public record, I think. I know that in the stamp offices they have the cards of the persons who have been designated by the duly constituted relief authorities of the community, and who have declared that Jones, and Smith, and Brown, and the rest are eligible.

Mr. BAILEY. I get the idea now. I am designated by the local relief authority as a person who is entitled to some assistance.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is correct.

Mr. BAILEY. I have a dollar of my own, or the local relief authorities give me a dollar, or the church, or my friends give me a dollar. I take that dollar to the merchant, and I may buy what I please with it; may I not?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator takes the dollar first to the stamp office and buys a stamp book. The stamps are put up in books, and look a good deal like the books of postage stamps that we buy. They are put up in the same form. The first part of the book contains the dollar's worth of orange stamps, and the back of the book contains the 50 cents' worth of blue stamps.

Mr. BAILEY. That is the point. I get a dollar's worth of orange stamps, and I may buy any sort of food I please?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Anything the Senator wants to buy.

Mr. BAILEY. Exactly; but when I buy, I also get 50 cents' worth of blue stamps, and those blue stamps must be used for the purchase of some designated surplus. Is that correct?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is correct—something on the list; but within the list, Mr. President, the recipient has free choice. That, in my opinion, is the thing which has made the stamp plan so much more acceptable and work so much better than previous plans.

Under the plan which has been used heretofore, and which is still used in communities where the stamp plan has not been put into operation, there may be a surplus of cabbages, and a carload of cabbages will be shipped into a city, and then the local relief authorities have to get that car unloaded; they have to take it over to the food depot; and whoever has been certified under the stamp plan as being eligible may go down there and get his share of cabbages. But under the stamp plan the eligible persons have a list of commodities which they can go into stores and buy in accordance with the desire of the family and the housewife.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand the Senator. I may take the blue slip, which is 50 percent in value of the orange or pink slip, whatever it is called, and I get free certain commodities which are designated as surplus commodities by the authorities here. That is the bonus I get. That is a free distribution of those articles upon the purchase of certain other articles. That is what that is.

Now, the Government pays for these surplus commodities.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. It redeems the blue slips at par?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is correct. It redeems them out of the same fund with which it would purchase and does now purchase directly surplus commodities, and distribute them in carload or part-carload lots over the country.

Mr. BAILEY. That is intended, on the one hand, to help the farmer get rid of his surpluses, particularly the food-producing farmer. It is intended, on the other hand, to help the man in necessitous circumstances to get something extra. He really gets $1.50 worth of commodities for $1. Is that correct? That is what he gets. It is a gift from the Government.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is correct; but I desire again to emphasize that the stamp plan, as I see it, is simply a workable device for the economical distribution of these commodities which the Government has been buying under section 32 of the act of 1935, when they have been designated as surpluses, ever since that section was put into the law.

Mr. BAILEY. That is my next point. Does a merchant get the commodities which are to be purchased with the blue slip from the Government or does he get them in the open market?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. He gets them in the regular channels. In other words, we have eliminated for the cities that have been designated all this business of the Surplus Commodities Corporation going out and buying Florida oranges, or grapefruit, or whatever it is that has been declared surplus, and then putting them into cars and shipping them around the country, and then turning them over to the relief authorities and having them give them away to persons in the communities who have been designated as eligible for relief.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator will agree with me that we cannot justly confine a plan of that sort to any 1 or any 100 or any 1,000 communities. We live under the doctrine of equal protection of the laws and equal rights to all. If we have that plan in one city in my State, we ought to have it in all cities and towns and in all country places where persons buy goods. Is not that true? It ought to be made available to everybody.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I think that in this situation, as in many others, we can only be governed by what is possible and what is reasonable. The Surplus Commodities Corporation has to be governed by the amount of funds available for this purpose. For example, if the committee amendment should be all that was provided, as I have figured it, the plan would have only about a 20-percent expansion, in comparison with what will have been done in the year ending July 1, 1940.

Mr. BAILEY. I agree with the Senator that the Surplus Commodities Corporation is limited by the funds it receives from Congress, but I will also assert that Congress is not limited as to funds, at least theoretically speaking. True, we do not know how much we may be able to borrow, or how far we may go. I was speaking from the standpoint of Congress. If we institute a plan of this sort, is it not predicated on the assumption that it must be universal in its application?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is not the way government works. Perhaps that is the theoretical way it should work, but that is not the way it works. The executive branch of the Federal Government announced, at the time when assistance for direct relief from the Government was abandoned, that it was going to take care of all the employables who were unemployed. It has never come within shouting distance of doing that. There are thousands and thousands and thousands of people today who are certified by the local authorities as being eligible for W. P. A. employment who cannot obtain it because there is not enough W. P. A. employment provided to give them jobs. As I see it, we have to be governed by the exigencies of the situation, and I should not be deterred, so far as I am personally concerned, from supporting an appropriation to take care of persons who were employable and who were out of work merely because we could not take care of everyone.

Mr. BAILEY. I am not taking that view; I am not saying we should not do anything because we cannot do all things. I agree that it is the obligation of the Federal Government, having undertaken to obtain parity prices for cotton and tobacco, to apply that principle to the producers of all farm products. We cannot make distinctions. Having undertaken to provide for the old people who are in need, we must provide for all who are within the limits, every one in his class. Having undertaken to provide for the employment of the unemployed, we cannot stop short of providing for all. The Government cannot make distinctions. The administration can, because they are limited by the money, but Congress is not limited in the matter of money, and if it were the obligation of the Congress, there should be an equal distribution. It would not be a matter of selection as to who should be aided and who should not. There should be so much aid to every man who has a clear need.

What I wanted to get at was how far this would go. I am satisfied that I have learned a great deal, but there is something more I wish to learn. The proposal is limited to food altogether, is it not?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It has been announced that an experimental plan will be inaugurated for the distribution of surplus cotton in the form of manufactured cotton commodities. I do not believe that plan has yet gone into operation, but it is now in the mill.

Mr. BAILEY. North Carolina—and I am thinking about my State—produces cotton to the extent of about 500,000 bales. The production has been very greatly reduced. We are producing tobacco at the rate of five or six hundred million pounds, and we are trying to reduce from 700,000,000. There is no provision made for tobacco, I take it. The Senator has agreed that there is none for the tobacco farmer.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not say that this program takes care of every commodity. I say—and I think, if I may be allowed to proceed, I shall be able to prove—that it is being very helpful in the case of many of the commodities.

The Senator need not argue with me about equality of opportunity or equality of the law. I am as firm an advocate of that as is the Senator from North Carolina or any other Senator, but I wish to say that the theoretical operation of Government activities is often, if not always, impinged upon by the practical and obtainable considerations. Again and again, as I have said with regard to W. P. A. employment, we have provided sums of money which at the time a majority of Congress knew were not sufficient to provide W. P. A. employment to all those who had been placed in the category of being eligible by their local relief authorities. Again and again we are confronted with a situation where we can go only so far as a majority of the Congress is willing to go. I do not think it is any argument that because we would extend this plan we are committed thereby to extend it to every area in the United States, much as I should like to see it so extended, any more than we are committed, having made W. P. A. appropriations to continue W. P. A. At any time when a majority of Congress wishes to abandon it they can do so, and they are under no legal or theoretical command to continue it. In the first place, one Congress, as the Senator well knows, cannot presume to bind another.

All I am saying is that here is a program which has worked well, which has received almost the unanimous endorsement of people in every walk of life in every community where it has been inaugurated. It is one of the New Deal programs which has unanimous support in the communities where it is going forward. I say that in view of the emergency character of the situation which confronts the farmers in this country it is no argument to say that because we have extended this plan to a hundred cities, if we extend it to 60 more of the same size, or to more cities of lesser size, in the coming year, we are thereby committing ourselves to extend it to every village and hamlet in the United States.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I wish to assure the distinguished Senator that I was not undertaking to make an argument. I was making an inquiry, with a view to ascertaining the fair implications of the program. I am satisfied with the answers, but I have one more question.

I understood the Senator from Wyoming to say, in his colloquy with the Senator from Wisconsin, that the number of people in need or likely to be certified as in need was about 14,000,000. Is that correct?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator's figure may be correct. I think there are at least 14,000,000 people who have been certified by local relief authorities as being eligible for some kind of relief in their communities.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In order that I may make that matter clear, I will say that I stated to the Senator from Wisconsin when I interrupted him that Mr. Milo R. Perkins, who is the head of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, in testifying before the Senate Committee on Appropriations, in response to an inquiry which I directed to him, stated that approximately 14,000,000 persons in the United States have already been certified as eligible to take advantage of the stamp plan.

Mr. BAILEY. That takes in men, women, and children?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is the total number of persons who are eligible to receive the relief, I should think. That, of course, would mean that if the head of a family were certified as eligible, the members of the family would not be computed in this number, but 14,000,000 persons are authorized to go out and buy the stamps.

Mr. BAILEY. That would be 14,000,000 adults, or people somewhere in the neighborhood of adult age. Is that what the Senator understands?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is my understanding.

Mr. BAILEY. I wonder whether that includes the people who are already being provided for after our manner—I do not say satisfactorily, by any means—under what we call the W. P. A. Are they included? I wish to get the facts, to see how far the thing goes and how much it will cost. I am not arguing against it.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Just a moment. Let us have an understanding of what the situation is.

The Surplus Commodities Corporation has been for several years buying farm commodities designated by the Secretary of Agriculture as being surplus commodities, and has been actually distributing those commodities to the localities where they are turned over to the local relief agencies, and they in turn distribute the actual commodities to those who are certified as being eligible to receive relief. The stamp plan is merely an efficient device for carrying out the same purpose; but later on I shall show that it accomplishes even more than that. I am going to show the effect of it in the communities where it is in operation over and above the actual increased buying provided under this method.

Mr. BAILEY. Before the Senator goes to that——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Just a moment. I should like to get along a little in my own time. There are not 14,000,000 persons in the United States who have been designated by the local relief authorities as being eligible for the stamp plan. There are 14,000,000 persons in the United States who have been designated as being eligible to receive relief. That is all the Surplus Commodities Corporation needs to know. If in Grand Rapids, Mich., a citizen has been designated as eligible to receive W. P. A., or to receive direct relief, or in some cases if he has a pension and it is inadequate to support him and his family, he may be added to the list. That is the responsibility of the local authority. Then when they put the stamp plan into Grand Rapids, as they are now doing, any person on the list certified by the local relief authorities can go to the stamp-plan window in Grand Rapids, spend a dollar of money out of his own pocket, and buy a dollar's worth of orange stamps. In the book he will find 50 cents' worth of blue stamps, for which he has not paid anything. Incidentally, he can buy a book for each member of his family. He then takes the book and goes to the grocery store. When he gets into the grocery store he uses the orange stamps just as he would money out of his pocket. He can buy anything the grocer has to sell, because he bought the book himself with his own money.

In order to provide a more efficient means of distributing these surplus commodities, which has been done for several years, he has in the back of the book of stamps a blue stamp, and in the same grocery store, or in some other, or at any place where he desires to go, he can buy any of the commodities designated by the Secretary of Agriculture as being, at the time he makes his purchases, on the surplus-commodities list. He can exercise his own judgment, or the housewife can exercise her own judgment, as to how many different surplus commodities he or she will buy, or whether to use up all the stamps in the purchase of one such commodity.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. How much of the increase from $87,000,000 to $212,000,000 would be used to finance the stamp plan?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I shall try to answer that question as best I can. I cannot give a definite answer to it, nor can Mr. Perkins give a definite answer; but we can arrive at an approximation of the amount.

Senators must understand that the Surplus Commodities Corporation is charged with carrying out a number of different programs. It is not charged merely with carrying out the surplus disposal program; it is charged, under section 32, with the responsibility of inaugurating, under the Secretary of Agriculture, export-bounty plans, if we may call them that. They had a plan as to cotton in 1939. They had one as to wheat. There are other things involved in this language. If the amendment becomes eligible to be considered by the Senate, of course, it must be by a reversal of the decision of the Chair, the $113,000,000, which is the amount suggested in the amendment I offer, and which would be in lieu of the $85,000,000 which the committee recommended, would be added to $101,000,000 now available under section 32. There will be an extension of the plan during the next fiscal year. Mr. Perkins, who is a very able citizen and an efficient administrator, is convinced that if this amendment of mine is attached to the bill and remains in the bill through the conference it can be estimated that there will be about 60 percent extension of the plan from July 1, 1940, to July 1, 1941, as compared with what was done during this fiscal year, which will end next July 1.

In other words, by the 1st of next July about 100 cities will be on the list. Sixty more cities will be put on the list of approximately the same size as these 100 cities. But if there were smaller cities designated—and as the plan extends they will be smaller—there will be more than 60. So the best I can say to the Senator is that if this amendment should prevail we would have about a 60-percent extension of the plan next fiscal year as compared with last fiscal year.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I think the Senator has answered the question, and I want to say that basically I am sympathetic about this plan, because I think it deals with relief and the agricultural problem at one and the same time and is one of the most intelligent approaches to the problem. Whether it stands unmodified by time or not, it is a step in the right direction to distribute the surplus, while helping the unemployed.

One reason I asked the Senator the question was that we will shortly be providing money for relief, and it seems to me that money spent this way would require less relief money than if we did not enlarge this plan. Is that assumption correct?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am happy to make the best answer I can to the Senator's suggestion. Every effort has been made by the Surplus Commodities Corporation to assure that persons who come into this plan shall have additional purchasing power, not have it taken away from them, and every community where this plan has been established has agreed that it will not reduce its present relief budget or enable the families to make up their budget needs by what they get out of the blue stamps, because primarily this is a farm program, and primarily the desire is to increase the total purchasing power. It is made a relief program if we begin giving out blue stamps in lieu of wages or in lieu of direct relief.

Mr. TYDINGS. So my assumption that both problems are dealt with at the same time is an inaccurate one?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator is usually accurate. It is not inaccurate in this sense, that with respect to the people who come under this plan the net effect is to increase their average expenditure a person a meal from 5 cents a meal to 7½ cents a meal. It improves their diet to that extent.

Mr. TYDINGS. And the more that is improved, of course, the less need there is for other relief?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. We need not worry about that yet. Five cents a meal a person raised to 7½ cents a meal does not allow for any reduction of relief or W. P. A. I would not be willing to increase the food budget to 7½ cents a meal and then reduce relief so people were put back to 5 cents again; that is what would happen if the stamp plan was made available in lieu of relief.

Mr. TYDINGS. The closer we raise them up to what might be called normal decent subsistence level by this plan, the less money we would have to contribute to any other plan to accomplish that end.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is true, but I think we are a long way away from it if in these 100 cities we raise the family food budget by the stamp plan to 7½ cents a person a meal. I personally would hate to think what would happen to my wife and to myself and to my two little children if all that I could afford to spend on each one of us a day for a meal was 7½ cents for those sitting around our table.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator likewise knows, of course, that the benefit payments to farmers in the general bill apply only to five products.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. Take my own State, for example, where there are many poultry raisers and truck farmers and orchardists, and so forth; the only hope that they would have their problem met at all—which is left out of the main bill—would be through an effort of the kind proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator has anticipated one of my appeals, which I hope to make to every Senator who is aware of the problem confronting the States in which farmers produce commodities that are not the five designated basic commodities.

Mr. BONE. How far does this problem apply to W. P. A. work?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It applies to anyone who is eligible for relief. If anyone is certified in the Senator's community for W. P. A. or for direct relief, he can buy one dollar's worth of orange stamps, and can get one-half as much in blue stamps. That is a relief program. It is not regular employment.

Mr. President, I wish to call attention of the Senate to some very interesting facts, and at this time I wish to say that I have drawn very heavily upon facts furnished by Mr. Perkins, both in his speech delivered to the Fourth Annual National Farm Institute at Des Moines, Iowa, on Saturday morning, February 24, 1940, entitled "The Challenge of Underconsumption," and his testimony before both the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations. Mr. President, I quote:

> Although the stamp plan has not been in operation long enough to measure the ultimate economic effects accurately or to come to final conclusions, we have been maintaining current information to guide us in our operations. This has been made possible through the cooperation of wholesale and retail merchants in a number of cities, including Des Moines. These businessmen have devoted considerable time to giving us accurate reports. The stores have been selected on a basis which would assure a representative sample of low-, upper-, and intermediate-income areas in each city. The cooperation that these merchants have shown is extremely helpful. I should like to take this occasion to thank them. It is very important to all of us that they continue to give us the basic information that we need. They are making a real contribution to the general welfare which is deeply appreciated.
> What are our low-income consumers buying with their surplus stamps? Preliminary figures now available are of great interest to every farmer in America. First of all, we can see how persons getting public aid are using their blue stamps on a wholly voluntary basis. We can tell which agricultural products are most popular and what percentage of the blue surplus stamps is going for each one on the list. The next table brings this out in great detail for three periods when different surplus commodities were available. Many of you who live in Des Moines will be particularly interested in the way in which surplus commodities have been selected here in one of the early test cities. You may want to compare those selections with the ones made in the other experimental areas. I am sure that the farmers of Iowa will be glad to learn that 31 percent of the blue stamps were used for pork meats and lard during the last month for which our records are available. Heavy blue-stamp purchases of butter and eggs have been made throughout the program. The table which follows gives the latest current information on how the blue-stamp expenditures have been divided as between the various surplus commodities which were available.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this table may be inserted at the close of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I continue to quote from Mr. Perkins:

With changes in the list on December 16, there were indications of some marked changes in blue-stamp purchases. The period is too short, however, for any final conclusion and should be interpreted in terms of possible tendencies rather than of stable averages. Pork meats were placed on the list for the first time. They were very popular. From 20 to 25 percent of the increased purchasing power was used to buy these products.

Mr. President, with hogs in Chicago around $5 and a little more I think this situation should be of interest to every Senator who has a hog producer within his State.

From 20 to 25 percent of the increased purchasing power was used to buy these products.

That is, pork meats.

Another 6 percent was used for pork lard. The demand for butter and eggs decreased somewhat, though each accounted for 17 percent of the surplus buying.

Were the stamp plan operating nationally, this would be a very healthy situation from an agricultural viewpoint. Prior to the addition of pork meats to the surplus list on December 15, butter and eggs were taking about 25 percent each of the blue-stamp purchasing power. This meant that there was a potential new market each year under a national food stamp plan for over 300,000,000 pounds of butter and over 300,000,000 dozen eggs. That was about 12 percent to 13 percent more of each of these products than the country consumed annually during the previous 10-year period. Had it been possible to establish the stamp plan throughout the country overnight, prices of butter and eggs would have shot through the ceiling under such an increased demand. A more healthy price situation would obtain, of course, if the new demand for butter and eggs represented only 4 percent or 5 percent of former domestic consumption. The balance of the blue-stamp purchasing power would then be available to help lift other farm prices. We are very glad, therefore, to see this shift to the purchase of surplus pork products. If the stamp program were operating on a national basis today, farmers in the Corn Belt would be getting a much better price for their hogs than they are today.

This was February 24, and hogs have gone down since then.

Fortunately, we'll have a chance to learn a lot more about supply and demand conditions for these surplus products before it will be possible to expand this program to cover the country.

We are vitally interested in the net increases in sales of agricultural commodities that result from our food stamp program, and are conducting studies in several cities. Here the analysis is much more difficult. It involves consideration of seasonal and other trend factors. Studies of this subject are under way, but only preliminary data are available. We have some information as a result of the figures supplied by Des Moines stores, however, in which you may be particularly interested.

FOOD PURCHASES IN DES MOINES

The stamp plan began in Des Moines on August 23. In the 12 weeks which followed there was a business pick-up in the food trades amounting to 5 percent, as compared with sales in the 6-week period before the program started. Sales in stores in low-income areas of the city, however, where most of the surplus blue stamps are used, increased by 16 percent the first 12 weeks of the program. Even after allowance is made for general business improvement in the food industry of 5 percent, such stores had a net increase in business of 11 percent. One of the very striking facts is that about one-half of this net increase apparently was due to the amount of stamps received, and another half was due to other factors. We hope that this means that many low-income families, other than the ones receiving direct assistance through the stamp plan, were spending more for agricultural products. Our preliminary information indicates that this was true for some commodities. The aggressive merchandising methods of the food trades are certainly responsible for part of this very favorable showing.

Mr. President, I digress at this point long enough to say that in the cities where the stamp plan is designated, when the surplus commodities are listed, all the grocery stores in the city begin advertising the fact that surplus commodities are for sale. The data indicate—and I think it is reasonable to assume that the stamp plan is the cause of it—that persons other than those possessing blue stamps buy farm surplus commodities through the regular channels of trade, thus helping to remove the surplus, to the advantage of the farmer so far as his price is concerned.

In terms of individual commodities, the preliminary information is very impressive. The most substantial increases in sales are for butter, eggs, and most of the fruits and vegetables. Butter sales in terms of pounds of butter in low-income area stores increased about 41 percent above the preprogram level. In upper- and intermediate-income area stores, they increased 8 percent. Allowing for seasonal and trend factors, our preliminary information indicates that total butter sales in low-income area stores increased not only by the full amount of the blue-stamp expenditure, but by 28 percent more.

Mr. President, this program benefits the farmer. It benefits the person who receives the commodities, and in addition it results in increased purchases of the price-depressing surplus of farm commodities by persons who are not participating in the plan.

In other words, for every Government dollar spent to move butter under the stamp plan through such stores, $1.28 worth of butter was actually sold.

In other words, as a result of the program, taking butter as one example, for every dollar of blue stamps spent for butter, 28 cents was spent by someone else in cash for butter; and the data indicate that such is the tendency and the trend in other communities. In other words, from the standpoint of the farmer, we are obtaining more in this program than the actual dollars being put into it.

Because the prices of so many dairy products are geared to the price of butter, this means a lot to dairy farmers in this section of the country.

Egg sales increased 52 percent in low-income area stores, while in upper- and intermediate-income area stores there was a slight decrease. Here, too, and to even a higher degree, even after the blue stamps are excluded, low-income area stores sales increased very substantially above the preprogram level, and above the relatively stable level for upper- and intermediate-income areas. For every Government dollar spent to move eggs under the stamp plan through low-income area stores, $1.40 worth of eggs was actually sold. Were the stamp plan going nationally we feel sure we could maintain a much better price level for eggs.

Mr. President, one of the well-known poultry journals in this country, the Poultry Tribune, in its issue of March 1940, made a study in Springfield, Ill., where the stamp plan was put into use on October 19, 1939. This is not Mr. Perkins talking. This is not the Senator from Wisconsin offering information. These facts were obtained by personal interviews by representatives of the poultry journal with the persons receiving the stamps to ascertain what was happening.

The question which interested the magazine was:

Would low-income families use more eggs if, in a changing economic world, they suddenly should be placed in a higher-income level?

This is the result, as stated by the Poultry Tribune:

The answer of the 50 families interviewed was an overwhelming "Yes." They said they used an average of 1.1 eggs per person each week, or 57 eggs per year, before stamps were made available, but now use an average of 6.2 eggs per person, or approximately 323 per person annually. This is an increase of 560 percent.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. DOWNEY. I am tremendously impressed by the argument of the Senator, and I am very much in favor of what he is advocating; but I must admit that my mental processes do not follow the reasoning of the article which he has read. Where does all the extra purchasing power come from to permit the purchase of additional eggs? I am unable to follow the Senator.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. When families on the bottom rung of the ladder are receiving only 5 cents a meal a person, if the amount is stepped up to seven and a half cents by giving them blue stamps free, they will step up from a bare-necessity diet, which may produce malnutrition in the family, and begin to buy commodities which are designated as surplus and which increase the health-building elements which they and their children need in their diets. The examples I have cited show the effectiveness of the program, if only we have the courage to enlarge it.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. DOWNEY. I again comment that I am absolutely with the Senator in his conclusion. He has made an eloquent argument. However, if I correctly understand the figures, they indicate that the diet allowance was raised 50 percent, or from 5 cents a person a meal to seven and a half cents a person a meal, while the egg purchase was increased from one egg a week to about seven a week. I cannot follow those figures. Where did the money to purchase the additional eggs come from?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It came in the form of blue stamps.

Mr. DOWNEY. The blue stamps increased the purchasing power from 5 cents to 7½ cents.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is correct.

Mr. DOWNEY. That is 50 percent.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But they may use the blue stamps only for the purchase of the surplus commodities designated. Eggs are one of the surplus commodities designated. Therefore the housewife seeking to obtain a better and more nearly balanced diet, with even this pittance of increase in purchasing power, bought more eggs for the family, just as she bought more butter, and just as she bought more pork products when they were put on the list of surplus commodities.

In other words, when the additional purchasing power made available raised the family above a very low standard diet and gave the family the opportunity to purchase eggs as one of the surplus commodities, eggs were purchased in increasing amounts with the increased purchasing power.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIS. As I understand, when a person purchases a dollar's worth of orange-colored stamps he receives 50 cents' worth of blue stamps free.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is correct.

Mr. DAVIS. That is, he pays a dollar for the orange stamps and receives 50 cents' worth of blue stamps free.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. The blue stamps increased the purchasing power from 5 cents to 7½ cents a person a meal.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is correct, and because the Surplus Commodities Corporation wanted to make certain that this would be a farm program, and that the additional purchasing power would be used to help the farmer to move his surplus and obtain a better price, it entered into an iron-clad agreement with the communities which entered into the plan, that they must not lower their then existing standards of relief. That is why the 50 cents' worth of blue stamps for every dollar's worth of orange stamps had such a surprising and very important effect upon the surplus commodities.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is there any problem of retail profiteering involved at any point?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. So far as I can ascertain, there is not. I think Mr. Perkins, after a careful check and investigation, is certain that there is not, for the simple reason that the authorities do not designate certain grocery stores. They designate them all. The old principle of competition prevents any pyramiding of prices. I think in only three instances in all the cities in which the plan has been in operation has it been necessary for the Surplus Commodities Corporation to bring an action against grocers who have "chiseled" or violated the rules and regulations. The thing about which some persons were apprehensive did happen, but only in a very few instances. When the commodities themselves were being distributed a few persons took the commodities and traded them for something else. That happened in two or three instances. Some grocers began to trade the blue stamps for something that was not on the list. But this is a self-policing mechanism because all the other grocers in town soon became aware of the fact that the one who was "chiseling" was getting all the business, and turned the information over to the Government. The practice has been stopped.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the grocer receive the same sales profit from a stamp sale as he would receive from a cash sale?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Exactly; not only does he receive the same profit but he also gets the advantage of the increased volume of business which inevitably results, and which I have just been trying to point out. I think that is a perfectly legitimate advantage for the wholesaler and the grocer to receive because they are performing the service of distribution. They are not charging the Government any more than they would charge anyone else, and they are not asking any more for that service than they would otherwise make. The plan eliminates all the complications incident to the Government buying the commodities in carload lots and, for example, shipping a carload of cabbages to some community and having the relief authorities distribute it from a food depot to people who come to take it away in baskets, which is a very inefficient and costly plan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Are there any figures as to the percentage of the average retail price which goes into retail profit in return for this service of distribution?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I shall have to confess to the Senator that that is one figure that I have not here. I do know, however, that as compared with the other program which the Government is operating directly, the stamp plan is infinitely less expensive. The Government spent about $19,000,000 in distributing these products in wholesale lots to relief authorities.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Before I take up the matter about which I wish to ask the Senator, I might add that there is one thing the Senator could have answered to the Senator from Michigan, and that is that Mr. Perkins can always refuse to support the market once he has brought prices back, so that the price of butter, for instance, may be low, and yet there may be no particular surplus of it. In other words, he may then go in and build the price up to some reasonable percentage of parity, and then step out of the market; so it would seem to me that that is the best check.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is the basic and fundamental check, of course, because there are two objectives in the surplus commodity removal program: First, that there is an actual surplus; second, that the price has been so depressed as to become alarming for the farmer. Once that has been taken care of, of course, the commodity goes off the list, as I have shown earlier in my remarks. The authorities are continually putting them on and taking them off as the situation changes itself.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. What I am concerned about, if the Senator will bear with me, is this: We are now considering, in the Senator's argument, the matter of an appeal from the ruling of the Chair which had to do with an amendment which would increase the allotment from $85,000,000 to $113,000,000. Mr. Perkins testified before the Senate committee that he must achieve domestic distribution through the stamp plan, or through direct purchases, or through a school-lunch program; and the amount for each lies within his discretion. Those of us who are very much interested in the stamp plan—and I am one who is very sympathetic with it; I think it is an admirable thing—want to know what limitation there is in the amendment pending on page 83 to demand and require that if we should vote for the $113,000,000 it will be devoted to the stamp plan.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, there is nothing in the amendment and there is nothing in the law which limits the activity of the Surplus Commodities Corporation under section 32. As I stated awhile ago, there are a number of different programs that Congress authorized the Secretary of Agriculture, in his discretion, to inaugurate. There are export programs; there are surplus-removal and distribution programs; there are the other programs the Senator has mentioned. I will say, however, that insofar as anybody can give information under a situation of that kind, at my request Mr. Perkins has furnished me with the information that it is his best judgment, taking into consideration all the factors he now knows, that if this amendment should prevail and become law there could be a 60-percent expansion of last year's stamp-plan program for the year July 1, 1940, to July 1, 1941. I can give the Senator no further assurance than that; and I personally, knowing Mr. Perkins, do not require any further assurance; and, in view of the different programs which are set up under section 32, I do not see how the Congress could intelligently say that X amount of money shall be used for this part of the program and Y amount of money shall be used for that part of it, because we must remember that this situation constantly changes. As I pointed out earlier, they had a cotton-export subsidy program. It has moved a large number of bales of cotton. It has now been discontinued; but neither Mr. Perkins nor the Secretary of Agriculture nor anyone else could say now whether a program for the export of cotton or of wheat should be continued in the fiscal year 1940–41 or whether it should be abandoned. It all depends on the situation; and there will not be any more discretion with regard to the additional $28,000,000 I am pleading for than there is in regard to the $85,000,000 the committee is recommending.

I want to say to the Senator from Connecticut—although I know it does not satisfy his point, which I have discussed with him before—that I am so impressed with Mr. Perkins' integrity and his efficiency and his ability that, so far as I am concerned, I am satisfied that he has given us the most straightforward and the most explicit answer in response to my request for information that he could possibly give; and I should not want to undertake the responsibility of saying that X amount of money shall be used for this, that, or the other of these commodity programs.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one further question?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. Perkins testified in the committee that he expects that the situation with reference to farm surplus exports this year will be worse instead of better. It is reasonable to think so. If we want to support a stamp plan and find that we are going to vote for export subsidies, we certainly are in a curious predicament in view of the way this language is written. Can we not therefore properly say that not less than 90 percent or not less than 85 percent of the total so voted shall be used in furtherance of the stamp plan?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Of course, if the Senate should decide that the decision of the Chair should not stand, such a limitation would be in order when the amendment is under consideration; or, in my view, the Senator could offer such a limitation, if he desired, with regard to the $85,000,000 in case the majority of the Senate should be against me on this proposition. That is a proposition which would come up in any event simply on an amendment to limit the use for which the expenditure could be made; and that would be in order even on the $85,000,000, in my opinion, for whatever it is worth, or upon the $113,000,000.

Mr. DANAHER. But the Senator does not think it should be done?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I should not want to take the responsibility. I know that, for example, the wheat farmers have been very well satisfied with the export program on wheat. They think it has helped them a great deal, at least so far as I have been able to ascertain their attitude; and I should not want to say that they should not have a dime of this money if they wanted to continue that program or even thought it was necessary to augment it. I feel convinced, however, that, insofar as it is humanly possible, if this sum of money is added we shall get a 60-percent increase in the program for the stamp plan. I personally would like to provide a greater sum, but I tried to be reasonable about this matter, though some Senators may think I have not been. But this program is working; it has the unanimous support of every community in which it is operating; and it is doing such a tremendous amount of good that I feel very strongly that it ought to be extended.

Mr. DANAHER. Let me thank the Senator very much.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I always appreciate the very cogent observations and remarks of the Senator from Connecticut.

Now, just a bit more from this article, and then I shall conclude.

> Even though these families presumably were receiving relief in the form of W. P. A. work or in other forms before the stamp plan was inaugurated, 25 of the families said they were not using any eggs before the blue stamps were made available.

Returning to Mr. Perkins' address:

> For some products, of course, all of the sales increase was not a net increase in demand associated with the stamp plan. For instance, a very substantial part of the increase in demand for prunes, white flour, cornmeal, rice, and peaches, was seasonal. In the case of some of these commodities, our information indicates that part of the blue stamps was being used in the place of cash which would have been used in the absence of a stamp program. This was true in the case of prunes, cornmeal, and rice, and to a lesser extent in the case of white flour. Very substantial net increases in sales, over and above the volume of blue stamps, and after considering seasonal factors, were noted for peaches, cabbages, peas, onions, tomatoes, and pears. For other commodities, it is still too early to come to even preliminary conclusions. The material is being studied carefully and we hope to present the information from time to time as it becomes available. So far as Des Moines is concerned, however, we feel certain that more than a dollar's worth of food was moved for every Government dollar spent to redeem blue stamps. That's one great advantage of utilizing normal trade channels.

Mr. President, in conclusion I wish to say that I believe that Congress must take effective action in view of the alarming situation that is developing so far as the control of export trade by the belligerent and neutral nations abroad is concerned, and its adverse effect upon the normal peacetime exportations of both farm products and nonmilitary manufactured products. I suggested that I shall debate this question at more length and in greater detail when the bill for the extension of the reciprocal-trade agreements is under consideration; but there is a second device which we can employ to cushion this shock upon the American farmer and to help him retain his meager share of the national income, and that is by augmenting the stamp plan.

I realize that some Senators are disturbed by the fact that to make this amendment eligible for consideration requires a reversal of a decision made by the able junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] when he was in the chair. I have not taken occasion to do so, but I know that I could furnish to the Senate instance after instance, if it would make any difference to it, showing that again and again the Senate has reversed the decision of the Chair in order to permit amendments to be considered.

So far as I am concerned, I do not think this is a dangerous precedent. The Committee on Appropriations has seen fit to initiate this appropriation of $85,000,000 for this purpose. All that the Senate will be doing, if it reverses the ruling of the Chair will be to establish a precedent—which may or may not be followed in the future, as the Senate pleases—which will permit the Senate to exercise its own good judgment, once the Appropriations Committee has decided that it is going to initiate an appropriation. In other words, a strict interpretation of this rule places us in the ridiculous position that an amendment could be offered to reduce this appropriation, the Senate committee having inaugurated it, but the Senate is powerless to increase it, no matter how strongly it may believe that more money is needed than the Senate committee has seen fit to provide.

Mr. President, I hope the decision of the Chair will not stand as the decision of the Senate; and upon this question I hope to have the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I desire to address myself very briefly to the parliamentary question presented by the appeal of the Senator from Wisconsin.

In the long and very illuminating remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin he touched only briefly, if at all, upon the parliamentary question involved in the point of order made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], and sustained by the temporary occupant of the chair yesterday. That is in the nature of things, because the Senator from Wisconsin, one of the most able and expert parliamentarians in this body, and as high-minded and honorable a citizen as lives in the United States of America, I am certain would not have pretended for a moment that the point of order was not well taken under the rules of the Senate.

The question is presented upon the naked proposition as to whether or not the Senate of the United States desires at will to set aside a rule because it does not happen to like the application of it in a particular instance, without conforming to the procedure set up by the rules of the Senate themselves for setting aside rules upon occasion, which is the rule providing for suspension of the rules.

Mr. President, in the argument yesterday attention was particularly directed to the first and second paragraphs of rule XVI. It seems to me that the matter should be considered in connection with the third section of rule XVI, because to my mind that is absolutely explicit and mandatory upon the question. Section 1 of rule XVI provides—

> All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate submitted in accordance with law.

Section 2 provides—

> The Committee on Appropriations shall not report an appropriation bill containing amendments proposing new or general legislation, and if an appropriation bill is reported to the Senate containing amendments proposing new or general legislation, a point of order may be made against the bill, and if the point is sustained, the bill shall be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. President, it seems to me that in the section to which I am coming, section 3 of rule XVI, there is an absolute, specific, and mandatory prohibition against the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, because section 3 provides—and I have read the preceding sections merely because of the reference in section 3 to the provisions of section 1—

> All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add new items of appropriation, shall, at least 1 day before they are considered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

In this case the matter was before the Committee on Appropriations, and the amendment was itself reported by the Committee on Appropriations considerably more than 1 day before its consideration actually came before the Senate.

And when actually proposed to the bill no amendment proposing to increase the amount stated in such amendment shall be received.

There is more in the rule, but it is not necessary to refer to the rest of it.

It seems to me that no sound argument or serious argument can be made on the question of whether or not under the rules of the Senate this amendment is subject to a point of order. The point of order was duly made yesterday by the Senator from Georgia and was duly sustained by the Chair, and, as I see it, the whole question now is whether the Senate intends, because a majority does not at a particular moment like a particular application of a standing rule of the Senate, to set the rule aside, not by the method provided, but by the devious method of having a majority overrule a proper decision of the Chair under the rules of the Senate.

I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin that it has been done in the Senate in some instances in the past. I think it was bad practice when it was done, and I think that every time the Senate follows that practice again it prostitutes its own rules. If the Senate does not wish to be bound by rules, it should not have the rules adopted in the first place.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to take the Senator back to the first part of rule XVI, which he read. I understand that those who contend that this amendment is in order claim that it is authorized by law and that the objection to the amendment is that it is not authorized by law. Is that a correct statement?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is not a correct statement. As I understood the point of order made by the Senator from Georgia yesterday—and he can restate his own point of order better than I can state it—my understanding was that the committee amendment itself, the whole committee amendment, providing for an appropriation under section 32 of the act of 1935 in the amount of $87,000,000, would itself have not been subject to a point of order under the provisions of the first section of rule XVI because of the fact that it had been considered and reported by a standing committee of the Senate—to wit, the Committee on Appropriations—and under the rule an increase in that amount reported by the standing committee of the Senate—to wit, the Appropriations Committee—was itself within the purview of the rules.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator contends that if the amendment in question had not been offered at least a day before it was taken up here, it would itself have been subject to a point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think that is true.

Mr. NORRIS. When an amendment is subject to a point of order, and yet is considered, is not an amendment to that amendment subject to a point of order?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The trouble with the Senator's position is this: I will agree entirely with the Senator that if an amendment which is subject to a point of order were offered on the floor of the Senate, and the point of order were not made, or on appeal the point of order was overruled, then the amendment would be subject to any other amendment. But in this case the standing rules of the Senate have specifically laid down the procedure. They provide that on the recommendation or by the direction of a standing committee of the Senate an amendment may be offered which is otherwise obnoxious to the rule. And the rules of the Senate further provide that when such an amendment is offered an amendment to increase the amount provided in that amendment shall not be in order.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator assumes that this increase sought to be brought about by the committee amendment is obnoxious under the rule, and that Senate rule XVI applies to that amendment in the same way that it would if the item were in the bill as it came from the House?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think that is the effect of rule XVI.

Mr. NORRIS. Then we agree on that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that is fair. Now, I want to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri, whose ability as a parliamentarian is well known by everyone and respected by all, to this proposition. I have perhaps been laboring under a misapprehension. Although the Senator does not agree with me, I thought the point of order was made because this particular amendment was not authorized by law. There are several exceptions to the rule, and only under one exception, as I see it, could this amendment by any possibility be declared proper.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Of course, if the amount had been authorized by law, then the provisions of rule XVI would not have applied to the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator from Georgia in his point of order negatived the application of the exception to this particular case.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the way I understood it. Now, is the proposal authorized by law? It is contended that it is not. The Chair has to pass on the record like a judge would have to pass on a demurrer on the record before him. Was there anything before the Chair when he made the decision, or has anything been offered to the Senate since which shows that the proposal is not authorized by law?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, the burden will be on the proponent of the amendment to show that it is authorized by law, and the Senator from Georgia did quote on yesterday the provision of the statute showing the manner in which the matter is authorized by law, which is to say 30 percent of the customs duties collected for the previous calendar year, and unless it comes within the exception of a particular authorization of law it is unquestionably within the purview of the rule.

Mr. NORRIS. Congress has passed the law—it is a general law—making appropriation of 30 percent of the customs receipts to be used under the provisions of section 32. Have I presented that correctly?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I shall be glad to have the Senator from Georgia state his own point of order which he made.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator is familiar with the provision of section 32 of the act of 1935?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. Under that provision of the act 30 percent of the customs duties collected the previous calendar year are to be used for the purpose in question.

Mr. NORRIS. That is my understanding. Then if that be true, up to 30 percent of the customs receipts are authorized by that law.

Mr. RUSSELL. That amount is automatically appropriated.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly. But we are appropriating in this bill the money that had already been appropriated.

Mr. RUSSELL. Oh, no.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator cannot tell what 30 percent of the customs receipts is going to amount to for the current year?

Mr. RUSSELL. The receipts for the last preceding year are the receipts in question.

Mr. NORRIS. We have not collected all of them yet.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; this does not relate to the fiscal year. It relates to the preceding calendar year. I tried to make that point clear yesterday.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I did not understand.

Mr. RUSSELL. The 30-percent allocation refers to the customs receipts which come into the Treasury for the preceding calendar year. The total amount of the customs receipts for the calendar year 1939 was $338,938,730.12. According to the computation I have, 30 percent of that would be $101,681,619.03.

Mr. NORRIS. In the bill there is carried $87,000,000.

Mr. RUSSELL. Eighty-five million dollars.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator concede now that an amendment would be in order under rule XVI if it carried $101,000,000, or exactly one-third?

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not; because the $101,000,000 is already appropriated, and the $85,000,000 is in addition to the $101,000,000, making a total of $186,681,619.

Mr. NORRIS. I may be wrong about it, but, as I understand, the $85,000,000 is a part of the 30 percent of the customs receipts?

Mr. RUSSELL. No.

Mr. NORRIS. Then I am wrong.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator is in error. This is the first time I have ever seen the Senator from Nebraska misunderstand anything relating to pending legislation. But there is $101,000,000 already available to the Secretary of Agriculture, if the Congress did not even convene this year. It is a permanent allocation, and it is available to him, and is paid out of the Treasury without any further action by the Congress.

Mr. NORRIS. With the Senator's explanation, I concede I was wrong. I was under the impression that this appropriation contained in the amendment offered by the committee to the bill was a part of the 30 percent of the customs collected.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is in addition to that amount.

Mr. NORRIS. Then I was wrong.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Will the Senator discuss the question from this point of view? It is clear that the proposal is for an amount in excess of the amount authorized by law; but there are many precedents, as I understand, with respect to what seems to me to be fairly analogous situations, going back to Vice President Marshall's time, who as presiding officer of the Senate held that when the House opened the door on appropriations and put legislation on appropriation bills, the rule of the Senate did not apply.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, that is undoubtedly a sound parliamentary view, but in this case, rule XVI, so far as the first three sections are concerned, is in flat derogation of the general parliamentary rule. There is an exception by which an increase may be offered, which is on the direction of a standing committee, which has been approved by the Committee on Appropriations. In this case it was not necessary, because the standing committee which authorized the amendment in the first place was the Appropriations Committee itself. But there is also a limitation set out in the body of the rule as specifically as it is possible for the English language to do, which says that when such an amendment is presented to the Senate for consideration, it shall not be subject to an increase; and the point of order made by the Senator from Georgia yesterday was specifically in accordance with section 3 of rule XVI.

With respect to the point which the Senator from Washington just presented of questions between the Houses, when one side has opened up the door, and the right of the other body to put on any amendment that it may see fit, as a matter of general parliamentary law that may be true in some cases, but we are restricted by the specific provisions of rule XVI in this particular case.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. But we have another more or less analogous situation. On one occasion a motion was made to suspend the rules——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, evidently the Senator from Washington did not hear what I said a while ago. This is a method for evading the provision of the rule of the Senate, which authorizes a suspension of the rule. The provision for the suspension of the rule requires a two-thirds majority, and requires that notice be given 24 hours in advance. This proposal is to suspend the rule in one particular case by a majority vote without notice, on an appeal from the decision of the Chair. We have that very proposition presented here in this bill. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] has presented an amendment which he recognizes as being clearly subject to a point of order. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] has another amendment which he recognizes as being clearly subject to a point of order. Realizing that under the rules of the Appropriations Committee the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the bill is necessarily bound to make the point of order, they presented notice in due form of a motion to suspend the rule to make the particular proposition in order, and that motion can be adopted by two-thirds of the vote of the Senate.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. If that is done, and the door is opened, can anything be added to it?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. I do not think the Senator understands the question. If due notice is given to suspend the rule, and the rule is suspended, the Senator from Washington inquires whether it opens it up to other matters, or is it not solely confined to the matter set forth in the notice to suspend the rules?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is confined to the matter referred to in the language of the notice of intention to suspend the rule.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I called attention to the fact that last summer notice of a motion to suspend the rule was given by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] in connection with the work relief bill. If the rule had been suspended, the Senator from Nevada could then have offered his amendment to the bill, even if the doors were not opened up?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am not familiar with that situation. The only thing I can say, Mr. President, is that so far as the pending appeal is concerned, by the specific terms of rule XVI, the ruling of the Chair on yesterday was correct.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I venture to interrupt the Senator because the same question which appears to be in the mind of the Senator from Washington was in my mind this morning when I read the RECORD. I was not present in the Senate yesterday when the point of order was raised. I have resolved the doubt in my mind, and I am quite satisfied now that the Chair was correct in his ruling. I venture to interrupt the Senator in the belief that by merely alluding to the processes by which I reached the conclusion I may clear up the doubt in the mind of the Senator from Washington.

As I read the first paragraph of rule XVI, it provides for three limitations upon amendments which may be offered.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. All of which are in derogation of the general parliamentary law.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes. Those three limitations are that an amendment shall not be received, first, unless it is to carry out provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation; second, or an act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during the session; and, third, unless it be moved by direction of a standing or select committee.

Paragraph 3 of rule XVI is a limitation upon that third limitation in paragraph 1.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is entirely correct.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. And it provides that when a standing committee has brought in such an amendment which otherwise would have been out of order it shall not be increased upon the floor of the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, the Senator has correctly stated my view of the matter.

Since I am on my feet, and since I do not wish to be in the attitude of hiding behind a parliamentary position in the matter, I wish to state my own position with regard to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. I shall do so in a few sentences.

I am very much in favor of the fullest appropriations under section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. I have contributed, so far as my ability permits, to bringing about appropriations under that section. I realize the force of what has been said by the Senator from Wisconsin, and I realize that the money spent under section 32 is probably as valuable an investment as the Government of the United States is making at the present time. Nevertheless, Mr. President, I have long been an adherent of the theory that part of something is much better than all of nothing.

We held meetings on this matter, trying to determine the amount which could be asked for in this body by the friends of parity payments and of surplus disposition under section 32, and which would in all probability be able to stand the twin ordeals of passage by the House of Representatives and signature by the President of the United States.

At the meeting which I attended, at which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] were present, being particularly interested in the matter of surplus appropriations under section 32, the sums carried in the bill were suggested. There was much discussion about the matter. I do not think there was any difference in purpose among those attending the meeting. We were trying to get all that we legitimately could for these very necessary purposes of the Government.

I know that the Senator from Wisconsin did not feel bound by the discussion that day. As we all know, he is one of the most honorable and high-minded men in the United States. However, Mr. President, I must say that, so far as I am concerned, with my very deep interest in appropriations under section 32, when I left that meeting, which was held in the office of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], I felt that I was bound to cooperate with whatever was the final decision of the Subcommittee on Appropriations on the question of inserting into the House bill very extensive appropriations not carried by the House bill for these very laudable and justifiable purposes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I shall be glad to yield in just a moment.

It was for that reason that yesterday I voted against the amendment for full parity payments. It is for that reason that if the appeal by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] from the decision of the Chair shall be sustained and the amendment shall be voted upon, I shall feel constrained to vote against it, much as I am in sympathy with the purposes which actuated the Senator from Wisconsin. I now yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I merely wish to keep the record straight. Every Senator who was in the meeting to which the Senator refers, and the only one to which I was invited——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is the only one at which I was present.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Every Senator who was present at that meeting will remember that from the beginning to the end of the meeting I argued against any cuts being made in either parity-payment appropriations or section 32 appropriations.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think that is entirely true.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. When the meeting broke up, my recollection is that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] intended to wait upon the majority leader to ascertain the prospect of taking up the agricultural appropriation bill, and that in the event he should be successful in bringing it up a subsequent meeting would be called further to discuss the matter.

So far as I am concerned, that is all I know about the matter; but I do know that I consistently maintained that, in view of the economic situation, both at home and abroad, it would be a tragic mistake for the Congress to reduce the agricultural appropriations, either for parity payments or for section 32 appropriations, below the total of appropriations which had been made out of the Treasury for those purposes during the preceding year.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin is entirely correct. I wish to reiterate that I know that the Senator from Wisconsin does not have the same feeling I have with regard to the effect of that meeting. Otherwise he would not have offered this amendment. I again express my deepest sympathy for the purposes of the amendment, but I also repeat that it is better to get part of something than all of nothing.

CENSUS OF 1940

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I desire to present to the Senate some facts about the census and Senate Resolution 231.

In the Senate recently I asked the majority leader to allow the census resolution to be voted on by the Senate this week, but he refused, saying that the bill to extend the reciprocal-trade agreements would be taken up next.

I pointed out that time was of the essence regarding the census resolution, because 130,000 census takers will begin work on April 2, whereas the act to extend the reciprocal-trade agreements cannot take effect until June 12; but the determination of the administration leaders to stifle Senate action on the census resolution remained unchanged.

I have received more than 15,000 letters written by citizens from all walks of life, and no one who has read those letters could fail to share my determination to act to relieve the people from the hardship which is imposed by the Government regarding the personal questions contained in the questionnaire and the threat of imprisonment for refusal to answer.

Time after time in the past few weeks the Census Director has emphasized that no man has ever been put in jail for refusal to answer census questions. Several days ago I received a call from a man who told me that a friend of his, at the time of the taking of the last decennial census, refused to answer certain census questions, was put in jail, subjected to the third degree, and driven insane, and is now in an institution for the insane. I have had a search made of the police-court and jail records in his case, and the records verify that this man was sent to jail for refusal to answer census questions. He was kept there several days, until he reached such a frenzied state that, upon medical examination, he was found to have become insane and was committed to an institution for the insane. This man before the time of his arrest was an outstanding citizen in his community and enjoyed a good reputation.

My point is this: No action that could be taken by the Congress or by the Secretary of Commerce or anyone else could reestablish him in his community with the reputation and standing which he enjoyed before he was jailed for refusal to answer the census questions, but we can take action to insure that in the future no such high-handed and cruel practices will be permitted.

My position is that it is un-American to force the people of this free country to submit to such a personal inquisition under threat of imprisonment. We may send men to prison for deliberate acts of dishonesty, for thefts, for assaults, and other criminal offenses, but not decent American citizens merely for refusing to divulge personal information to their neighbor-enumerators.

I feel that it is my duty to mention another false assurance that has been given to the American people; and this is important. Time and again we have heard from the President, from Mr. Hopkins, and from Mr. Austin, of the Census Bureau, that the information which is given to the Census Bureau will be kept in strictest confidence.

Speaking over a national radio hook-up on February 5, Director Austin said:

> You also have a right to know that your reports to us remain confidential for all time. No Government bureau or agency can look into our files to find out about you. No person or bureau can get our files for any purpose—taxation or criminal investigation or anything.

That is an important assurance, and we have a right to rely upon it, but listen to the facts.

I have been advised by census employees of facts which have been corroborated by others. Businessmen have been obliged in the recent business and manufacturing censuses to fill out detailed schedules, giving intimate secrets of their affairs, secrets which they would never divulge to their rivals. If they knew of the subterfuge which is practiced by the Census Bureau, whereby private concerns are given access to such so-called confidential information, there would be an uprising in America which would make the revolt against the income questions seem insignificant.

At the head of every census schedule the following is set forth in bold type:

> Confidential census report. This report is required by act of Congress. This act also makes it unlawful for the Bureau to disclose facts, including names or identity, from your census reports. Only sworn census employees will see your statements. Your census reports cannot be used for purposes of taxation, regulation, or investigation.

I have confirmed from sources in the Census Bureau that for many weeks representatives of the T. N. E. C., an outside agency, have been searching census records in connection with the monopoly investigation, and have had access to individual schedules of businessmen.

Moreover, outside business concerns are being allowed to send their representatives to the Census Bureau to be sworn in as temporary census employees, in order to technically come within the law which prohibits anyone but census employees from seeing the census records. A regular census employee made the following statement to me:

> These outside individuals take the oath and become a so-called census employee, but they never do a tap of work, so far as the census is concerned. They simply come down here and take the oath, which doesn't mean much to some people, and they have full access to the census records anywhere they want to go and search with a fine-tooth comb. Before they can take away this information, they are referred to a certain office, for approval, but they are sharp enough not to include anything that wouldn't be passed; but in the weeks they are working here, they could take out anything they want to in the form of small memoranda. In those confidential files they could get information about any individual or concern. They are sworn in as census employees, but they are not census employees in truth, because they do not work on the census, they work for their own use.

What an opportunity for unscrupulous business concerns to get confidential information about their business rivals.

In 1935 the Secretary of Commerce gained adoption by the Congress of an act, which, in the light of the revelations I have just made, provides an effective means by which secret and confidential data in the Census Bureau can be revealed to private business concerns or individuals. By this act the Department of Commerce is given blanket discretion, at the request of any person, firm, or corporation, to secure special services of persons who are neither officials nor employees of the United States. The money to pay these men is furnished by the person, firm, or corporation and used, "in the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce and notwithstanding any other provision of law," to employ outsiders and thereby give them access to confidential census files.

I have an affidavit stating that an agent of the F. B. I. approached a certain woman and threatened that if she refused to give him certain information as to the lives, marriages, and so forth, of her family, he would get it after the census was taken and he had talked with the census man. She said she would tell them where she was born, and so forth, and that was all; and the agent said, "You had better answer all the questions they want to ask. If you do not, you will be locked up."

I naturally dislike to present this picture, but in the choice between protecting the Census Bureau by concealing the facts and protecting the public interest by revealing the facts, my duty is clear; I have no alternative.

In my radio talk last week I spoke as follows:

> If you stand upon your constitutional rights and refuse to answer the questions which violate your right of privacy as guaranteed under the Constitution, you will have plenty of company.

Soon after the President, through his secretary, charged that I had openly advised the American people to violate the law. My answer is that an unconstitutional question or a question never authorized by Congress does not come within the law; and so I replied to the White House, "What law, Mr. President?" But he did not and could not answer that.

The President's attack comes with poor taste from the man who, in 1935, wrote to the chairman of a House committee urging passage of one of his "must" bills. He ended his letter with these words:

> I hope your committee will not permit doubts as to constitutionality, however reasonable, to block the suggested legislation.

The Chief Executive lightly brushed aside the Constitution, and asked the Congress to join him in such disregard. The Supreme Court later declared the bill unconstitutional. This action of the President brought to my mind vividly the picture of Lincoln in the White House in 1861, when a group from Congress called on him to secure his support for a bill which they said was unconstitutional, but which they wanted passed, and Lincoln replied:

> Gentlemen, it was in the oath that I took that I would to the best of my ability preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution. I could not take the office without taking the oath. It is not in me to take the oath to get the power and then break the oath in using the power.

A far cry from 1861 to 1935.

The Senate Committee on Commerce has officially reported that the claim of the Department that the income questions are legal is inconsistent with the restrictions expressed by Congress. It is not correct to contend that an unauthorized ruling of a departmental bureau constitutes a law of the United States. It is time to call a halt to attempts of departments to arrogate to themselves the functions of a legislative body, especially in matters which threaten the people with imprisonment for not bowing to the will of a bureau head.

Mr. President, I now wish to point out a statement appearing on page 163 of the hearings on Senate Resolution 231, in the testimony of the Director of the Census, Mr. Austin. He made a radio address to the American people to which I have hitherto referred. In that radio address he said to the people of the country, trying to have them possess their minds in patience, and attempting to calm down righteous indignation, and I quote him directly:

> In the first place, the questions we will ask you are not our questions, but they are your questions.

I asked Mr. Austin, "Do you think that is a fair statement—that those are the people's questions?" He answered, "I think that statement is exaggerated"; and, of course, it is exaggerated. The American people never asked for those questions. Certain research organizations and large business organizations did, for their own selfish purposes—not pro bono publico, for the good of the common man—and I say again on the Senate floor that in my honest judgment there is an ulterior purpose behind some of these intimate personal questions in the census questionnaires.

More of that later. Some day the scales will fall from the eyes of the American people, they will see these things in their true light, and they will cry out, as Macbeth did to Macduff:

> Lay on, Macduff;
> And damn'd be him that first cries, "Hold, enough!"

And God pity the man who gets in the way of that righteous indignation.

Mr. President, I hold before me a volume entitled "Sixteenth Decennial Census of the United States. Instructions to Enumerators. Population and Agriculture." I refer to that volume specifically. Herein, sir, if you please, is a total of 79 pages of small type giving instructions to those who are going to make the population census enumeration, all of whom are to be partisan, politically appointed enumerators, most of whom are going to be your neighbors, if you please, some of whom may be your enemies, some of whom may be your creditors, who are going to come in this snooping investigation and ask these intimate, personal, obnoxious questions. So we have before us 79 pages of instructions, and a school for enumerators is being held of 4 days' duration, and unless they get a group of men and women in this country who have more than average intelligence, I defy them to go out on the highways and byways of the hinterland of America and ask with any coordination of mind and common sense these questions in an orderly and a sane way.

I want to read you some of these instructions. Let us have a little conversation here together. I read now from page 3 of these questionnaire instructions, under the heading "Enumerator's rights." This is addressed to the enumerator, and the instructions say, under paragraph 17:

You have the right of admission to all dwellings * * * within your territory for the purpose of obtaining information required by the Bureau of the Census.

I cite that because the census group in Washington decried me because I said, "On April 2 an army of 130,000 individuals will invade your homes." I stick by my guns. They are going to invade them, and there is their authority for it:

You have the right of admission to all dwellings * * * within your territory for the purpose of obtaining information required by the Bureau of the Census.

Now go to the bottom of page 3, under the heading "Refusals to answer":

In case your authority is disputed—

I am reading from paragraph 18 of the instructions—

show your certificate of appointment, which you must carry with you at all times. It is of the utmost importance that your manner should, under all circumstances, be courteous and conciliatory.

Good!

In no instance should you lose your temper or indulge in disputes or threats. * * * After all other means have failed, call the attention of the person to the penalty provided in section 9 of the Census Act for refusal to give the information requested—

Fine and jail sentence.

In other words, do not threaten the housewife; just tell her she will go to jail if she does not answer.

Now, if you please, under "Untruthful replies," listen to this:

You have a right not only to an answer, but to a truthful answer. Do not accept any statement that you believe to be false.

Listen to this:

Where you know that the answer is incorrect—

The instructions say, "Where you know." That is a figment of the imagination of the census enumerator. He is to be the sole judge whether it is correct or not. If he is your enemy or your creditor he may purposely, according to the dictates of human nature, which is frail in all of us, say, "That is not correct," and put down what his sweet will dictates.

Here are the instructions:

Where you know that the answer is incorrect, enter upon the schedule the correct answer as nearly as you can ascertain it.

Out of his own mind he may put down what he thinks is the truth, regardless of what you say to him.

I come down now to the next paragraph, 21:

Be particularly careful when enumerating a household that no person is reading the entries you are making or the entries you have made for other households. You are not permitted to show anyone, other than authorized census employees, the schedules that you have filled out, or to retain copies of the schedules or of any parts of them.

So the questioned housewife will not be allowed to check as to the correctness of the answers as written down by the enumerator.

Now read with that paragraph 28:

You must not permit anyone to accompany or assist you in the performance of your duties * * *. This does not prevent you, however, from receiving the unpaid assistance of individuals, when necessary, in order to obtain information concerning persons who do not speak English, or concerning absent households or members of a household as provided in paragraphs 45, 305, 372a, and 387.

The application of that is this: If I am a census enumerator and go into parts of a city where there are, say, a large section of Greek, or Finnish, or Polish people, and I do not speak their language, I may call in anybody I want to—say the political boss of that group. He does not have to be sworn in. He is not an employee of the Government. He does not work for pay; but I may give him the privilege of cross-examining these people and learning the inmost secrets of a foreign group anywhere in America for political purposes if he desires to use the information.

Along this line I called on the telephone the other day the second gentleman in charge of the Census Bureau. There was apprehension in my heart regarding much of this census procedure. I said to him, "Sir, I raise a question with you. Your census enumerators over the United States, 130,000 of them, will go out on April 2. You will get this intimate personal evidence of debts, of mortgages, of age, of divorce, and many other questions. You will compile it in schedules. When your census enumerator goes home at night, what becomes of the schedules containing intimate personal data about the people he has questioned all day long? It may be open to inspection by Enumerator Tom, Dick, or Harry's family or associates. So I asked the Census Bureau, What becomes of the schedule at the close of day?" And the answer glibly came back, and it was a false answer, "Why, he returns those schedules every night to the district supervisor of his district."

I questioned this statement, as I should, and I said, "Do you mean to tell me that the enumerator in a country town in New Hampshire or in Missouri is going to travel several hundred miles to his district supervisor, who may live that far away, to turn each day's work into his hands? It is physically impossible." He said, "Wait a minute"; and he went out and got his instructions from somebody else, and returned and said, "Oh, no; I am wrong. The enumerator keeps them in his own possession until the census is concluded, a matter of 4 weeks or so." So now we find that Tom, Dick, or Harry, the census enumerators, keep these schedules of the citizens throughout the country which deal with their intimate personal affairs on the mantelpiece, perhaps, or in their pockets, or in their bureau drawers, or on the family table for 4 weeks, open to anybody's scrutiny, before they are turned in to the headquarters of the district supervisor. What a travesty on privacy and keeping this personal information confidential.

So much for some of the doubts and weaknesses and camouflage of the census enumerating.

I read you now a letter. Here is one I have received, 1 of 15,000. If this does not touch something down deep in your hearts, there is something wrong with you. I say it very frankly. It did in my case. This is not a single instance, but it is one of many; and I want to inject something right here, Mr. President.

It is a great thing for you and me, in our intercourse with our fellow Senators here, to have their good will and camaraderie and esteem and regard and affection, if we can gain them and are worthy of them, and, of course, we all desire them; but if any Senator in this Chamber wants those things so much that he sacrifices something more important, then he is not measuring up to the goal he ought to achieve. We need to look beyond the confines of this rectangular Chamber, and beyond our friends in the galleries, out over this country, North, South, East, and West, and see 130,000,000 people, men and women, your and my brothers and sisters in the last analysis, working in the shops, in the factories, in the homes. Those who sent us here and who are sovereign over us. We need to keep faith with them; and the tragic part of America today is that all over this country, regardless of party, so many men and women have lost faith in government, for this reason: They have sometimes come to the conclusion, and it is almost justified, that we who may be in the Senate or in the House or in places of authority in government do not give a damn about them except at election times, to get their votes. That is a deep-seated conviction in many hearts, and sometimes it may seem to be almost justified. That is the reason today why our Government has not the confidence of a large part of our citizenry. The one thing my party and your party have to do is to look over this Nation fore and aft, and by our works and by our utterances and by our actions revive faith of the common people in the institution of government.

I now read this letter to you with that preface. It is from a woman:

Three years ago I purchased a home for myself and little son. When the neighbors were curious about my affairs I merely told them that I was a widow. Senator TOBEY, my marriage was an unfortunate mistake. My husband, a lawyer, deserted me when my little boy was less than 1 year old, as he did not want children. I managed to keep the baby with me and make a living. A year ago

I quietly got a divorce from my husband, whom I have not seen for over 11 years.

My son is now 12 years old, and I do not wish him to know I am divorced until he is a little older and understands more about life, and I wish to tell him myself. This matter is something that concerns only his life and mine. I understand the census taker for here is likely to be a member of one of the most inquisitive and gossiping families in the neighborhood. If I am forced to answer these census questions my whole private affairs will be the property of the neighborhood and my son will be told his private personal affairs by his schoolmates and neighbors. What am I to do?

If I refuse to tell my most intimate and private personal affairs to this inquisitive neighbor and go to jail, which, believe me, I prefer doing to telling what I have now told you, I have no one to take care of my son and my home, and what effect would it have on his outlook on life and on our lives here? I know it would forever after be thrown up to him at school that his mother did a jail term. I consider if one is not a lawbreaker one's private life is a matter solely between God and oneself. What can I do? Please, Senator TOBEY, do find time to answer this letter, as I am a good citizen and have a real problem, and if someone in Washington can't help me I will have no one to turn to.

That letter, Mr. President, is but one of many from women throughout the Nation who are seriously troubled by the inquisition of the census schedules.

Mr. President, I revert to the instructions to enumerators and turn to page 28, instruction 372," Procedure for absent households":

Households in your district whose members will be away from their place of residence during the entire period of the canvass are to be handled as outlined below.

And this is the outlined program, section 372a:

Try to obtain the desired information from neighbors or from some other person who may be able to furnish it.

Try and visualize such a situation, Mr. President. Back in my town of Temple, or out in Wisconsin, or up in Vermont or Massachusetts, the enumerator would go to the door and rap, and when the housewife came he would ask her, "What can you tell me about your neighbors, Mary Smith and her husband? Have they a mortgage on their house? What is the amount of same? Frequency and amount of regular payments? Is she divorced? At what age was she first married?"

Mr. President, that is the instruction to the enumerators. When you put the microscope on these enumeration questions, and then give consideration to the rights of the American people, who are guaranteed an inherent right to privacy under the Constitution, you cry out, "Shame on the American Government for such inquisitorial methods."

Now I close, and I desire in closing to read something to the Senate. This is not CHARLES TOBEY speaking, but I am speaking for one who has a great place in the hearts and intellects of all America, who 100 years from now will be quoted by American high-school and college students. He is one of the great Americans of all time, one of the greatest liberals alive today. I refer to former Justice Brandeis, of our Supreme Court, from my native State of Massachusetts. Listen to Louis Brandeis speaking to the people of America. This is his statement, made in 1927, and what he said is as true today as it was then. It will be true a hundred years from now, please God, if we bring this Nation back to the principles of liberty and freedom on which it was founded:

Experience should teach us to be most on our guard to protect liberty when the Government's purposes are beneficent. Men born to freedom are naturally alert to repel invasion of their liberty by evil-minded rulers. The greatest dangers to liberty lurk in insidious encroachment by men of zeal, well-meaning but without understanding.

I continue to quote from Mr. Justice Brandeis:

The makers of our Constitution undertook to secure conditions favorable to the pursuit of happiness. They recognized the significance of man's spiritual nature, of his feelings, and of his intellect. They knew that only a part of the pain, pleasure, and satisfaction of life are to be found in material things. They sought to protect Americans in their beliefs, their thoughts, their emotions, and their sensations. They conferred, as against the Government, the right to be let alone—the most comprehensive of rights and the right most valued by civilized man. To protect that right, every unjustifiable intrusion by the Government upon the privacy of the individual, whatever the means employed, must be deemed a violation of the fourth amendment.

God bless Louis Brandeis and may he live among us many more years as a citizen of the Republic; and all down through the decades, after he has passed on and gone to his reward, the spirit and the truth of those words should be an inspiration to America and an inspiration to every man to carry on, not primarily to please his fellows but to keep faith with the American people, true to the best traditions of our country, whose we are and whom we serve.

Mr. President, I ask that there be printed in the RECORD an editorial on the subject I am discussing, from the Hartford Courant of March 18, 1940.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Hartford Courant of March 18, 1940]

THE PRESIDENT AGAINST SENATOR TOBEY

The President, through one of his secretaries, again takes sharp issue with those Members of Congress who are demanding the deletion of certain questions that the Census Bureau has prepared for the 130,000 politically appointed enumerators to ask when they begin taking next month the Sixteenth Census of population. He particularly attacks a Senator who, in a recent national broadcast, urged his listeners not to answer inquiries about their incomes. That Senator is none other than CHARLES W. TOBEY, of New Hampshire, who introduced the resolution declaring it "to be the sense of the Senate" that the Director of the Census and the Secretary of Commerce should immediately cause to be deleted from the questionnaire these two items: "(32) Amount of money, wages, or salary received (including commissions) in 1939; (33) Did this person receive income of $50 or more from sources other than money, wages, or salary?" He is the first Senator, Mr. Roosevelt says, who, to his knowledge, has "openly advised the American people to violate the law."

Senator TOBEY is not in the least disturbed by that indictment. On the contrary, he turns it back against the President by asking him if it is his position that "an unauthorized ruling of a departmental bureau constitutes a law of the United States." He reminds him that the Senate Committee on Commerce holds that the income questions are illegal and were never authorized by Congress. Furthermore, he says that these questions are a clear infringement of article IV of the Bill of Rights, and he quotes the Supreme Court as saying that the principles of that article "embody the essence of constitutional liberty" and forbid "all invasions on the part of the Government and its employees of the sanctity of a man's home and the privacy of his life."

It is not Senator TOBEY's view alone or that of the Senate Commerce Committee or that of any number of Senators and Representatives that the Census Bureau has no constitutional or legal right to ask these Paul Pry questions, and under penalty of fine or imprisonment, or both, to compel their answer. It is also the view of distinguished authorities entirely outside of Congress; for example, Dr. William Starr Myers, professor of politics at Princeton University, who says that the questions are "a direct violation of the Bill of Rights in the United States Constitution, and totally unwarranted as an infringement of private rights and individual liberties."

So it seems that Senator TOBEY, in asking his radio listeners to stand with him in refusing to tell the census takers about their income, was in effect advising them to maintain their constitutional rights. The rules of bureaucrats may have a high rating with this administration, they may be regarded as having the full force of law, but there is a higher law than theirs, and it is laid down in the fundamental law of the land.

How shaky is the ground on which the administration, the Department of Commerce, and the Census Bureau stands with respect to these obnoxious questions is revealed by the action of Secretary Hopkins in ruling that reply may be made anonymously on a blank that the census taker will supply and mail to the Census Bureau. Yet only the other day Secretary Hopkins was standing squarely by the Census Bureau's schedule of questions, declaring that they must be answered in every particular and citing the penalties that would be incurred for noncompliance.

From this it would seem that the rulings of the Census Bureau are not quite the equivalent of either a constitutional provision or a specific enactment by Congress. Is it any worse for Senator TOBEY to tell his radio listeners what he did than it is for the Secretary of Commerce to make one law today, repeal it tomorrow, and then for the President to censure the Senator for publicly advocating the violation of law?

Congress does not appear to be impressed with the sanctity of Census Bureau law, and despite all the pressure that the administration may be able to bring it is predicted that the Tobey resolution will be adopted, if for no other reason than to give Senators an opportunity to express their approval of the popular resentment. But because the census questions have already been printed, it is proposed that the whole matter might be resolved by abolishing the penalties for not answering them. Such a proceeding might easily render the whole enumeration nearly useless. All that is seemingly required is to instruct the census takers not to ask questions 32 and 33, even if they must still ask the householder whether he owns his own home, whether it is mortgaged and, if so, for what amount, and how regularly he is meeting his debt payments; also, whether he has a flush toilet and, if so, whether it is used by his family exclusively or is shared with others, and whether the bathtub, if any, is restricted to the uses of the family.

This will not be the first time that census takers have asked questions that the average citizen thinks are none of the Government's business, but it is the first time that the privacy of the citizen has been invaded to any such extent. It savors more of the practices of totalitarian countries than of the free representative democracy of the United States.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I now address the majority leader of this body. The majority leader and I talked this matter over before, and I am coming to him in all sincerity and good faith to make a proposition to him. He knows how anxious I am that Senate Resolution 231, reported favorably by the Committee on Commerce, with a splendid report back of it, should receive consideration and be voted upon in the Senate. I now say to the majority leader that, with between one and two million people behind this proposal, representing an outraged public opinion, the Senate and its leadership, in my honest judgment, and with all due respect, have no right to put obstacles on the track of progress and not permit a vote. So I ask the majority leader what his plans are, if he can tell me now, as to what he will suggest at the end of today's session. Does he plan to move that the Senate adjourn, or recess, and when?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not think I am called upon to reveal to the Senator from New Hampshire whether it is my plan to move that the Senate recess or adjourn. I will say to the Senator that, so far as I know now, the motion will be to recess.

Mr. TOBEY. If I may make a request of the Senator at this time, I now request, before my colleagues in this body and before the American people, that instead of recessing the Senator move that the Senate adjourn at the close of today's business, for the express purpose—and I put the cards on the table, I want to be frank with the Senator—of having a new session tomorrow morning, and at that new session that we go ahead with the morning session and have the calendar called, and I pledge my word that we can dispose of this whole matter by 2 o'clock. I now ask the Senator to join me and the people of America.

Mr. BARKLEY. Whether I move that the Senate adjourn or recess may depend on how much time is wasted on extraneous "bunk" instead of considering the bill which is now before the Senate.

Mr. TOBEY. I may say to the majority leader that he has the same germ in his system other Senators have. He is trying to laugh this thing off, but I look beyond the majority leader, I am speaking for 130,000,000 people. The majority leader cannot laugh it off any more than the Senator from Oklahoma did.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not trying to laugh it off. I think that if the Senator from New Hampshire were left to his own devices he would probably accomplish that for himself. But I stated day before yesterday, in all sincerity, what the plan was, so far as I could control it. The Senate can vote down any motion I make or that any other Senator makes. I told the Senator a day or so ago that we planned to take up the trade-agreements bill when the pending bill was out of the way. That is still the plan. When the consideration of the pending bill is concluded today, or when it is concluded, if it ever is, which I hope will be today, it is planned to move to proceed to the consideration of the trade-agreements bill. If the Senator from New Hampshire can obtain enough votes to defeat that motion, and can be recognized by the Chair, it would be in order for him to move to take up his resolution. But, I say in all frankness and sincerity, and not in any desire to be captious or carping with the Senator from New Hampshire, that that is the program. It has been the program for weeks, and I see no reason to deviate from it, if the Senate is willing to adopt the motion which will be made at the conclusion of the consideration of the pending bill.

Mr. TOBEY. Let me point out to the Senator again what I pointed out a few days ago. The reciprocal-trade agreements now in force will not expire until June 12. The census enumerators will start taking the census on April 1. I believe that anyone with any perspicacity at all will readily see that this census matter should have a prior claim on the Senate's attention, having such a great degree of public interest behind it, and especially because of the time element involved. Why not join me in this and give the people a chance to express themselves in the Senate, instead of holding it back?

Mr. BARKLEY. I have made my position known.

Mr. TOBEY. I was asking about the discrepancy in the dates.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not agree with the Senator from New Hampshire in his premise in the first place, and I do not wish to take the time now, which should be devoted to the consideration of the pending bill, to go into a discussion of the Senator's census resolution. When the time comes, if it is before us on its merits, I may discuss it; but I do not care to consume the time of the Senate now in a discussion of it.

Mr. TOBEY. Let me put a hypothetical case. Suppose the majority leader did agree to an adjournment this afternoon and did agree to have a session tomorrow, and I made the proposition that by 2 o'clock we would have this resolution out of the way. How would that interfere with the reciprocal trade agreements measure?

Mr. BARKLEY. In the first place, I do not think the Senator could get any such agreement as that. In the next place, I do not intend to consent to the displacement or postponement of the trade-agreements bill. Of course, the Senate can do that if it wishes.

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator from New Hampshire recognizes the great leadership of the Senator from Kentucky and his great influence, and he wants him as an ally and friend in this matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the Senator probably overestimates my influence.

Mr. TOBEY. No; I do not. That is my best judgment.

Mr. President, I rest my case.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8202) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROWN in the chair). The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, if the Senate does not object to reverting to the agricultural appropriation bill——

Mr. BARKLEY. If it takes unanimous consent to get back to the pending business, perhaps the Senator will make the request.

Mr. RUSSELL. Instead of asking unanimous consent, I shall address myself to the agricultural appropriation bill, despite the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky that it is not before the Senate.

Mr. President, I wish to make only a very brief statement with reference to the parliamentary situation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Caraway	Gillette	Johnson, Colo.
Ashurst	Chandler	Glass	La Follette
Austin	Chavez	Green	Lee
Bailey	Clark, Idaho	Guffey	Lodge
Bankhead	Clark, Mo.	Gurney	Lucas

Pepper	Sheppard	Thomas, Okla.	Wagner
Pittman	Shipstead	Thomas, Utah	Walsh
Reed	Slattery	Tobey	White
Reynolds	Smathers	Townsend	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I am very happy that the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has discussed in some detail the parliamentary question which the Senate will soon determine. Before my service in this body, I had had the honor of serving as the speaker of the lower house of the legislature of my State, and thought I knew something about parliamentary law.

The legislature of my State, in common with most of those in this country, used the rules of the National House of Representatives; and when I came to this body I saw the difference in the rules of the House of Representatives and the rules of the Senate, and found that all the study I had made theretofore of parliamentary procedure was a detriment rather than an aid to me in understanding the Senate rules.

But there must be very little question, Mr. President, if the Senate rules are to be observed, that the point of order against the proposition of the Senator from Wisconsin is well taken. It has been stated that the effect of the rule is to make the Committee on Appropriations superior to the Senate in the consideration of increases to appropriation bills in excess of the authorization of the basic law which limits the amount of such appropriations. I wish to point out to the Members of the Senate that this rule was not written by the Committee on Appropriations. Instead of being a rule of the Committee on Appropriations for the Senate, it is a rule of the Senate for the conduct and guidance of the Committee on Appropriations.

As has been well stated here, under the first article of rule XVI there are only three exceptions to the rule which prevents the offering of such amendments to appropriation measures. One is to carry out a treaty stipulation, or some existing law or a resolution previously passed, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate submitted in accordance with law, which, of course, means a Budget estimate or is moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate.

It has been said that if a standing committee of the Senate moves to increase the estimates, that such motion, or such an amendment, is then subject to amendment. But as has been well pointed out here, under the provisions of section 3 of rule XVI, in the event the standing committee moves such an increase above the legislative authorization, no amendment shall be proposed to increase the amount stated in such amendment.

The language "no amendment proposing to increase the amount stated in such amendment" is taken directly from the body of the rules that have been compiled for the guidance of the Senate.

There is a substantial reason for this rule, Mr. President. I do not know its history or how it originated, but there is substantial reason for a rule which would prevent amendments from being offered from the floor of the Senate to increase the appropriations suggested by committees of the Senate that are already in excess of the authorizations of law.

So, Mr. President, I hope that if the Senate proposes to be bound by the rules which have been adopted by this body, that the ruling of the Chair will be sustained. Otherwise, as has been well stated by the Senator from Missouri, the Senate should in all frankness repeal all its rules and not have them printed and consume time of the Senate in undertaking to follow them.

Now, Mr. President, I shall advert very briefly to the merits of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I wish to say to the Senator from Georgia, and also to the Chair, that yesterday the Senator from Texas made an asseveration regarding rule XVI, but all of rule XVI was not presented to the Senate either by the Chair, by Senators familiar with parliamentary rules, or by the parliamentary clerk. I desire to say that I find that my position is not tenable, because part of section 3, in referring to amendments proposed by the committee, uses this language:

> And when actually proposed to the bill, no amendment proposing to increase the amount stated in such amendment shall be received.

That further language seems to place the amendment not in order. I want to say in justice to myself that I cannot vote to overrule the Chair when I see that the rule is so plain.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Texas is always candid and frank, and by the statement he has just made he measures up to the high opinion all of us have always entertained for the Senator, that he is one Member of this body who is big enough to admit it when he is in error.

Mr. CONNALLY. May I add further that I thank the Senator for his very generous and liberal compliment. I think the decision of the Chair is like some decisions of courts. They probably make a correct decision, but for the wrong reason. They do not find the real authority for the decision.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I wish to discuss the merits of this amendment only briefly. No Member of this body who has investigated the work that has been done by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, or who is familiar with the fine possibilities of the so-called stamp plan—no Senator who has a clear understanding of those matters fails to approve adequate appropriations to carry on this plan. The Committee on Appropriations in considering the bill was confronted with reductions which had been made all down the line through practically every one of the hundreds of items contained in the measure. In attempting to restore these appropriations we undertook to do so on a reasonable basis, not restoring all the appropriations to the amount contained in the bill for the current year but making reductions throughout the bill which would enable us to bring this bill back to the Senate with reductions in line with the economy move, and yet reductions not so drastic as to imperil or to paralyze any of the activities of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. President, I wish to point out that, for instance, if the decision of the Chair shall be overruled, and if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] shall prevail, this item will be the only item in this bill that will be materially increased above the amount of the appropriations for the year 1940. The parity appropriations have been reduced by $13,000,000. Items throughout this bill have been reduced in similar amounts. I do not think that there is any increase in this bill in all its 104 pages amounting to more than $100,000 over the appropriations for the fiscal year 1940; and yet, if the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin should prevail, it would mean that the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation would have available for expenditure in the year 1941 in excess of $10,000,000 more than was available for that Corporation for expenditure in the year 1940.

I submit that we cannot say to the farmers who receive parity: "By our action you have been compelled to take a reduction in your parity payments, but we have found money here to increase other items."

We cannot say to those who are interested in the efficient operation of the Food and Drug Administration, under the all-embracing legislation enacted by this body several years ago, "You are compelled to take a reduction in your Budget estimates for the operation of the Food and Drugs Bureau, but we have been able to find increased appropriations to carry on the work of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation." Throughout the bill the same argument might be applied.

Mr. President, I wish to say that due to the fact that the war in Europe has closed France and England to the importation of many agricultural commodities which they had heretofore purchased in this country, the stamp plan and the domestic distribution of surplus commodities will have much more money next year than they have during the current year, even under the terms of the Senate amendment.

If Senators will refer to page 46 of the Senate committee hearings on this measure, they will see a break-down of how the Corporation intends to divide these funds. They will find that all the reductions under the Budget estimates would apply to the export subsidies which they anticipated would be greatly decreased next year. The amount of money which will be available for the stamp plan for the next year will be $133,000,000 as compared with $119,000,000 for the current year. By the 1st of July this system of distribution of surpluses will have been instituted in over 100 cities in the United States.

Under the committee appropriation it can be expanded to some 30 or 40 cities of like size during the coming year.

There are over 700 applications that have been filed for this plan by that number of municipalities in the United States. The evidence submitted to the committee shows that it would require an appropriation of $360,000,000 to put this plan in operation all over the United States, and if we are not going to undertake to give this service to every community in the Nation, I submit that there can be no justification for the increase of thirty or forty million dollars proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin, which would make this item of the appropriation out of line with the appropriations that have been made for the other activities of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. President, I hope the decision of the Chair will be sustained.

On the pending question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RUSSELL. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Those who wish to vote to sustain the decision of the Chair will vote "yea"?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. RUSSELL. Those who wish to overrule the decision of the Chair will vote "nay"?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. TAFT. I have a general pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea"; but not being advised how the Senator from Montana would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I do not know how he would vote. I therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia. I am informed that if the senior Senator from Virginia were present, he would vote "yea." If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] are unavoidably detained. I am advised that if present and voting, these Senators would vote "yea."

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are detained on important public business.

The result was announced—yeas 59, nays 18, as follows:

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 83.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I have an amendment which I shall read and then send to the desk and formally offer.

On page 83, line 12, after the figures "$85,000,000", I propose to insert:

Not less than 85 percent of which shall be devoted to a stamp plan for the removal of surplus agricultural commodities.

Mr. President, the way the language of the committee amendment has been drawn there is no requirement in law or in terms that any part of the fund shall be used necessarily for the stamp plan. As one reads the hearings and the testimony of Mr. Perkins, one can see that while at the present time provisions have been made for the expenditure of $72,000,000 for stamp-plan cities, it is his hope that he can expand that program, and he contemplates the addition of a sufficient number of cities to make a total of 100 for the coming year.

However, Mr. President, while he has set aside $80,000,000 for the removal of agricultural surpluses, so far as the future is predictable there is nothing in the situation to indicate that the farm situation will be better. Quite the contrary, it might well be worse. Consequently, export subsidies and removal of agricultural surpluses for domestic use other than through the stamp plan may very easily deplete the available sum, which those of us who have in mind the stamp plan as represented by the committee amendment would most certainly deplore. To date the results under the stamp plan have proved generally satisfactory. I think the hearings and the testimony of Mr. Perkins conclusively demonstrate that the plan is substantially successful.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. How would the Senator's amendment affect those who live in cities in which the stamp plan is not in effect, and in which grave practical difficulties exist in the way of putting it into effect?

Mr. DANAHER. Not only would the amendment not hinder, but it would actually tend to promote an expansion of the stamp plan and, consequently, an extension thereof to the cities which do not now have it.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think I made myself clear. I am talking about cities in which there is no immediate likelihood of the stamp plan being put into effect, but in which commodities are being distributed.

Mr. DANAHER. Commodities could still be distributed, for the simple reason that $101,000,000 of segregated revenues under section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act are now set aside, in addition to which the Administrator has set aside $80,000,000 for that very purpose, according to his testimony at the hearings. Consequently, agricultural surpluses could be distributed out of that sum, as in the past.

Mr. LODGE. In other words, the Senator's allotment of funds to the stamp plan is not proposed to be made at the expense of those living in cities which have no stamp plan?

Mr. DANAHER. Precisely not. Quite the contrary. The reason why I took 85 percent is that, since last year, $72,000,000 was spent under the stamp plan. I simply took $72,000,000 in its relationship to $85,000,000, represented by the committee amendment. The percentage is roughly 85 percent. Therefore, I say that not less than a fixed minimum of 85 percent shall be allocable for the continuation of the stamp plan.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I encouraged my colleague in the amendment which he offered. The question raised by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] excites some fear on my part, and I should like to have some reassurance. I respectfully ask my colleague whether or not stating his amendment in another way, and providing that not more than 15 percent of the moneys be used for export bounty payments, would better protect the kind of communities to which the Senator from Massachusetts refers?

Mr. DANAHER. It may be that the choice of verbiage should determine our attitude. I am not certain. However, I do not want to be confronted with a point of order, such as was raised against the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. If we could have ascertained beforehand that out of the appropriation comprehended by the committee amendment we could be certain that the stamp plan would be continued—and, I hope, expanded—I should have voted to sustain the position of the Senator from Wisconsin. This morning I asked him with reference to it; but, as he himself has said, he did not want to assume responsibility for saying that a given amount should be allocable to the stamp plan. I do. He said that if I wanted to accept the responsibility I could do so by an amendment. I do, and that is why I offer the amendment providing, not that there shall be a limitation on the maximum, but that there shall be a minimum that shall be expended for the stamp plan.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I think my colleague is entirely correct. I am certain he is right in what he is endeavoring to do. However, the question raised by the Senator from Massachusetts gives me some reason for doubt. Will the Senator try to explain to me how the community without a stamp plan would be protected insofar as surplus commodities are concerned?

Mr. DANAHER. Of course, my colleague will understand that personally I have had no administrative experience with that sort of thing, and must therefore depend upon the hearings and the evidence for my information. The hearings indicate, according to Mr. Perkins, that $80,000,000 has been set aside this year. I read from page 359. Mr. Perkins said:

> Mr. PERKINS. This year we set aside $80,000,000; my estimate is that with the change in the wheat situation, we will probably not spend over sixty or sixty-five million on straight export subsidy programs this fiscal year.
> Senator MCNARY. Then you are buying surpluses in various regions of the country?
> Mr. PERKINS. We don't have any notion of abandoning that.

So, Mr. President, since Mr. Perkins himself says he has no notion of abandoning the program, I accept his statement.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. In terms of population, what percentage of cities in the United States now have the stamp plan?

Mr. DANAHER. I have no idea of the percentage of cities in the United States.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator mentioned 85 percent. That leaves only 15 percent for cities where there is no stamp plan; is not that correct?

Mr. DANAHER. No. Let me make myself clear to the Senator from Massachusetts. As Mr. Perkins testified, and as we all know, the plan was first commenced in a few cities in an experimental way. Finally it reached the point where he included 50 typical cities throughout the United States as the beneficiaries of the stamp plan. In the course of administration of the plan during the past year some $72,000,000 was expended with great benefit. It is Mr. Perkins' plan this year to extend the program; and he says, in effect, that he hopes this year to add another 50 cities, bringing the total to 100.

Consequently, if he hopes to do it, and we do not make it mandatory at a time when we are considering adding $85,000,000 to the bill, it seems to me that at the very least we should make absolutely certain that the cities which heretofore have been led to believe that they can count on the program, and which are now the beneficiaries of it, will continue to receive the benefit of it. Therefore the $72,000,000, comprising, as it does, 85 percent of $85,000,000, necessarily will have that minimum effect.

Mr. LODGE. Is not the Senator giving Mr. Perkins much more than he needs for that purpose?

Mr. DANAHER. I am giving him only what he spent for that number of cities in the past year.

Mr. LODGE. Was $72,000,000 the amount spent on the stamp plan last year?

Mr. DANAHER. Yes. That is what the hearings indicate.

Mr. LODGE. How does that relate to the question of surplus commodities?

Mr. DANAHER. Of course, the Senator will remember that under section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, $101,000,000 has already been set aside from customs receipts. If we now add $83,000,000 to that, we shall have a total of $184,000,000 for the purposes contemplated by section 32, as amended.

Mr. LODGE. Is it the Senator's understanding that this is in addition to the amount from the customs receipts?

Mr. DANAHER. Definitely.

Mr. LODGE. I still should like to be enlightened as to this matter: If $85,000,000 is available for the distribution of surplus commodities, and about 30 percent of the total is allocated to the stamp-plan cities, that leaves 70 percent for all other purposes?

Mr. DANAHER. For all other purposes contemplated by section 32. That includes export subsidies on cotton, if you choose, and on four other agricultural commodities.

Mr. LODGE. And the Senator's figure is based on what Mr. Perkins developed in the testimony?

Mr. DANAHER. That is correct. I take the very minimum that he gave as the maximum for this year.

Mr. President, I said I would yield to the Senator from Georgia. Has he a question?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I will make a brief statement in my own time.

Mr. DANAHER. Then, Mr. President, I will briefly conclude that I am thoroughly convinced that the stamp plan ought to be extended rather than minimized. I am perfectly willing to vote for additional assistance to make it absolutely certain that the comprehensive program of the Administrator, Mr. Perkins, shall be put into effect this year. I certainly do not want to see it curtailed, however, at the expense of the cities whose only possible advantage out of the $85,000,000 is going to come from the stamp plan; and at the same time, as the Senator from Wisconsin pointed out, we do assist the farmer whose agricultural surplus is moved in general commerce; we do assist the businessman who participates on a stamp basis just as much as on a dollar basis in every sale that is made.

I therefore urge the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I cannot conceive of anything that would be more disruptive of the program of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation than for the Senate to adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut. The Senator proposes to earmark 85 percent of the appropriation, as I understand, for the so-called stamp plan in the distribution of surplus commodities.

Mr. President, it so happens that there are about 100 cities in the United States that have the stamp plan, or will have by the 1st of July; and that program will be extended to from 30 to 50 additional cities—of course, depending upon their size—during the coming year. That means that by the first of the fiscal year 1940, unless other appropriations be made for this purpose, 150 cities in the United States will have the stamp plan. There are over 3,000 counties in the United States and hundreds of cities in the United States that are receiving surplus commodities which are purchased in bulk by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, to be distributed to those on the relief rolls. If this amendment be adopted, it will mean that the 150 cities will have the stamp plan, but that all the money will have to be devoted to the stamp plan, and that the poorer people out in the smaller communities will have taken away from them even their present little hand-out of grapefruit, or raisins, or dates, or potatoes, or butter, which in many cases is the only direct relief those communities have received.

We have here a program which is going into all the counties of the United States, into every city of the United States where there are those on the relief rolls; and the Senator from Connecticut proposes that we should now wipe out all of that, and draw in 85 percent of all the appropriation, and devote it to the large cities where the stamp plan is in effect. This will help the stamp plan, to be sure, but it will absolutely be disruptive of the only relief that many people in the poorer communities have.

I hope the Senate will reject the amendment.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DANAHER. Will the Senator assist me? I know we all want to clarify this matter. Am I not correct in understanding that the stamp plan during the past year spent $72,000,000?

Mr. RUSSELL. I think it spent more than that.

Mr. DANAHER. All right. That is the minimum, then, anyway.

Mr. RUSSELL. I might say that if the Senator is afraid of anybody coming in and disturbing the stamp plan he is just conjuring up ghosts to shy from. The committee wrote into this bill, as the Senator will see if he will read all the amendment from line 18 on down through and including line 25, at the request of the Corporation, a provision which lifted the 25 percent limitation on any one commodity or activity from its application to the stamp plan, so that the stamp plan could have more than 25 percent of the funds that were appropriated. The Department wants to go ahead with that; but why should we come in here now and seek to say that a certain amount shall be used for the benefit of certain favored cities, which have already been favored by having the stamp plan, when there are 700 other applicants at the office of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation clamoring for the stamp plan, when we know we cannot give it to them?

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator understands, of course, that the amendment I have offered does not in any way refer to the funds already set aside under section 32. The Senator knows that?

Mr. RUSSELL. No; I did not know that.

Mr. DANAHER. It applies only to the $85,000,000 mentioned here.

Mr. RUSSELL. Why is the Senator offering it, then?

Mr. DANAHER. For the simple reason that I want to make it certain that in the very cities the Senator talks about the stamp plan will be continued this year. Without the amendment, as the Administrator pointed out in his testimony, in the exercise of his discretion he could cut one city off, and add one of the other 700 cities that the Senator talks about.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, he could do that under the Senator's amendment, if he wanted to cut off the stamp plan in one city and reestablish it in another. It would not make any difference so long as he maintained the 85-percent ratio. So that argument has absolutely no potency. He could swap from city to city within the 85-percent limitation if he saw fit to do so.

Here we have a situation in which the Department say they wish to expand the stamp plan. We have 700 cities all interested in the stamp plan, with the Senators and the Representatives from the States and the districts in which these cities are located urging that the stamp plan be put into effect in their cities. We have the Department asking the committee to give them legislation which will make more money available so that the stamp plan may be expanded. The committee brings in a provision which removes any doubt as to whether or not the 25-percent limitation applies to the stamp plan. Everybody is saying that the stamp plan will be expanded; but the Senator from Connecticut sees in that situation the possibility of someone, in the stillness of the night, slipping in and wiping out, at one fell swoop, the entire stamp plan.

If the amendment applies to the entire amount the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation will have available for expenditure, I think it will destroy the relief aspect of the program, and result in thousands of people in the poorer communities of the country going hungry, because they cannot get any direct relief. If it applies only to the $85,000,000, it is a futile and useless gesture with which the Senate certainly should not concern itself.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator assist me further?

Mr. RUSSELL. If I may.

Mr. DANAHER. As the Senator has already stated, during the past year the stamp plan spent at least $72,000,000. Does not the Senator think we ought to guarantee a minimum amount equal to $72,000,000 for this year?

Mr. RUSSELL. No; I do not, because I know that more than that amount is going to be expended, and then this money is used in other ways than the stamp plan. It so happens that we have gone into hundreds of communities and are furnishing school lunches to the underprivileged children who are not able to get lunches anywhere else. That has become quite a large part of the activities of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation—disposing of these surpluses by distributing them to the underprivileged children in lunches. Quite a great amount of money has been expended on that; I think something like $2,000,000, and the Department intends to expand that service considerably to other communities of the country. If, however, the Senator's limitation should be adopted, and should apply to the entire fund, it would mean that this free-lunch program for poor children could not be expanded into any more communities, because we should have to pour all of the money either into administrative expense or into the hungry maw of the expanding stamp plan.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is admitted by all that the Department has made a wonderful success of this project. It has worked it out well. Under this authority it is using the stamp plan as it thinks best. That is one of the plans that has helped the work along. I am very much for the stamp plan. I think it has done probably better than any other; but, at the same time, why should the Senate undertake to limit this Department, which has done such a good work?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator, not only from that standpoint, but from the standpoint of permitting the program to operate in a free and unhampered manner. If this were a strictly relief program, there might be some reason for the Senate to say that so much should be used for the stamp plan, and so much should be used for school lunches, and so much should be used for the distribution of surplus commodities that have been acquired; but this is supposed to be fundamentally an agricultural program. Suppose we had a large accumulation of surplus, as happened in the case of butter and dairy products only a few years ago, and the Department stepped in and bought up some fifteen or twenty million dollars' worth of dairy products and stored it for some time, until it could be distributed through the country to the recipients of direct relief in the several communities of the States. If the Senator's amendment should prevail, the Department could not bring a service like that to the dairy industry of the country, because they would have to approach the problem through the stamp plan in 100 or more cities where they would just be nibbling away at the surplus, and would not really accomplish anything.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Does the Senator remember that last year, in July, we took a million and a half dollars out of this fund, which is supposed to help agriculture, and used it to buy fish?

Mr. RUSSELL. I do.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator certainly does not consider fish an agricultural product?

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not, and I voted against the provision. I think the Senator from Connecticut supported it, but I voted against it.

Mr. DANAHER. Does not the Senator understand that this year it is contemplated to add finished textile cotton goods?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, that is done under the existing appropriation, and it is going to be handled solely through the stamp plan. Not one dime's worth of textiles will be handled other than through the stamp plan.

Mr. DANAHER. Who decides that matter, please?

Mr. RUSSELL. It is decided because that is the only way in which it can be handled.

Mr. DANAHER. I say, Who decides it?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation.

Mr. DANAHER. Then I submit that the Congress ought to decide these things. I want to see that the stamp plan is kept at a minimum that will make it workable. There is not any limitation in my amendment, let me say to the Senator from Tennessee; quite the contrary. It is to guarantee the continued existence of the stamp plan.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, if the Senator thinks he can bind this Congress until adjournment by the adoption of this amendment in such a way that we cannot pass additional legislation to use any of this money for fish, I have no further statement to make. Every other Member of this body knows that whether we adopt this amendment or not, the Congress could subsequently pass a bill taking some of this money to buy fish, if the Congress saw fit to do it. At the last session of Congress I did not think we should purchase any fish with these funds, and I voted against it. As I recall, the Senator from Connecticut was one of those who voted to buy fish.

Mr. DANAHER. No, Mr. President; the Senator is incorrect.

Mr. RUSSELL. I may be in error as to that; but it was not at my behest or my doing that any of this money was used for fish, and I hope it will not happen again. But certainly the Senator cannot tie up the fish advocates by putting in this bill a limitation that Congress could repeal tomorrow.

I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut will be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 83. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote whereby the committee amendment on page 83, with regard to the distribution of surplus commodities, was adopted, in order that I may ask for a record vote upon it. I am making this request in order that this amendment may have a record vote, just as the parity amendment has had, for the purpose of showing the attitude of the Senate with regard to it on a record vote.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have no objection. I suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin, however, that he include in his unanimous-consent request a provision that the yeas and nays be considered ordered, and that the Senate proceed to vote on the amendment without further debate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to do that, and will so modify my request. My sole purpose is to obtain a record vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin, as modified? The Chair hears none. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. This is a record vote on the so-called surplus commodities distribution amendment?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 83. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. TAFT (when his name was called). I am advised that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], with whom I have a general pair, would, if present, vote as I intend to vote. I am therefore at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TYDINGS. My colleague [Mr. RADCLIFFE] is detained from the Senate. He is unable to obtain a pair. If he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. My colleague [Mr. TRUMAN] is unavoidably detained from the Senate on official business. If he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] are detained in committee meetings.

I am advised that if present and voting the Senator from Louisiana, the Senator from Nebraska, the Senator from North Carolina, the Senator from Montana, the Senator from South Carolina, the Senator from Georgia, the Senator from Rhode Island, the Senator from Delaware, the Senator from Illinois, and the Senator from New Jersey would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 79, nays none, as follows:

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will be stated.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Farm Tenant Act," on page 85, after line 7, to insert:

FARM TENANCY

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, approved July 22, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1000–1006), as follows:

Salaries and expenses: For administrative expenses in connection with the making of loans under title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, approved July 22, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1000–1006), and the collection of moneys due the United States on account of loans heretofore made under the provisions of said act, including the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, exclusive of printing and binding as authorized by said act, $2,500,000, together with the unexpended balance of such part of the appropriation made under said act for the fiscal year 1940 (53 Stat. 976) available for such administrative expenses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 86, line 20, after the word "Act", to strike out "$3,600,000" and insert "$6,100,000", so as to read:

Total, Farm Tenant Act, $6,100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 86, after line 20, to insert:

WATER FACILITIES, ARID AND SEMIARID AREAS

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act entitled "An act to promote conservation in the arid and semiarid areas of the United States by aiding in the development of facilities for water storage and utilization, and for other purposes", approved August 28, 1937 (16 U. S. C. 590r–590x), including the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; printing and binding; the purchase, exchange, operation, and maintenance of passenger-carrying vehicles; and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, $500,000, of which not to exceed $25,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia: Provided, That not to exceed $50,000 of this appropriation shall be available for expenditure for any one project designed in whole or in part to benefit lands by the irrigation thereof, and all project facilities and appurtenances which depend for their utility in whole or in part upon each other or upon any common facility shall be deemed one project, and the authority contained in said act shall not be deemed to authorize the construction of any project not in accord with this limitation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Cooperative farm forestry", on page 88, line 10, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$400,000" and insert "$477,898", so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the Cooperative Farm Forestry Act approved May 18, 1937 (16 U. S. C. 568b) (not to exceed $300,000), and the provisions of sections 4 (not to exceed $100,000) and 5 (not to exceed $77,898) of the act entitled "An act to provide for the protection of forest lands, for the reforestation of denuded areas, for the extension of national forests, and for other purposes, in order to promote the continuous production of timber on lands chiefly suitable therefor", approved June 7, 1924 (16 U. S. C. 567–568), and acts supplementary thereto, including the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; printing and binding; not to exceed $7,700 for the purchase of passenger-carrying vehicles; the purchase of reference books and technical journals; not to exceed $30,000 for the construction or purchase of necessary buildings, and other improvements; in all, not to exceed $477,898:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Rural Electrification Administration", on page 89, line 15, after the word "Provided", to strike out "That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay the salary of any person who received as many as three steps of administrative within-grade promotion in all positions occupied by such person during the fiscal year 1939, at a rate of pay in excess of the salary resulting from the first two steps of such promotion; but this proviso shall not preclude the payment of the minimum salary of the grade to any person transferred, under standard regulations, to such grade: Provided further", so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the Rural Electrification Act of 1936, approved May 20, 1936, as amended (7 U. S. C. 901–914), as follows:

Salaries and expenses: For administrative expenses and expenses of studies, investigations, publications, and reports, including the salary of the Administrator, Rural Electrification Administration, and other personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; rentals, including buildings and parts of buildings and garages, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; purchase and exchange of books, law books, books of reference, directories, and periodicals; not to exceed $200 for newspapers and press clippings; financial and credit reports; and all other expenses necessary to administer said act, $3,075,000, of which amount not to exceed $1,350 shall be available for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles necessary in the conduct of work in the District of Columbia and elsewhere: Provided, That section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5) shall not be construed to apply to any purchase or service rendered for the Rural Electrification Administration when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed $100: Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture may make allotments from this appropriation, subject to the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, to the offices and divisions of the office of the Secretary for the performance of departmental services for the Rural Electrification Administration.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 90, after line 7, to strike out:

Loans: For loans in accordance with sections 3, 4, and 5, and the purchase of property in accordance with section 7 of the Rural Electrification Act of May 20, 1936, as amended (7 U. S. C. 901–914), $40,000,000.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I address myself particularly to the able Senator having the bill in charge. I notice from the purported action of the committee that the sum of $40,000,000 has been stricken from the bill, notwithstanding the fact that when the R. E. A. program was laid out there was within contemplation an annual authorization and appropriation of $40,000,000. I am informed indirectly that it is within the contemplation of the committee that R. E. A. will get these funds from the R. F. C. Is that correct?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Connecticut is correct. The President in his Budget message transmitting this item suggested that this program be financed by loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, rather than by direct outlays from the Treasury. It violates no precedent. The original R. E. A. Act, as sponsored by the able Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], provided that the original funds should come from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and we are merely returning to the original program.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Senator has referred to the President's Budget message, I read from page 49 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 4, 1940, this sentence:

On the basis of preliminary studies, I estimate that it will prove feasible to reduce the capital funds of some of these corporations by an aggregate figure of $700,000,000, without in any way impeding their operations.

Mr. Jesse Jones testified before the Committee on Banking and Currency that he expected to return $200,000,000 from R. F. C. funds toward the aggregate of $700,000,000 therein referred to. Of that $200,000,000 we already have set aside $100,000,000 to the Export-Import Bank in the measure recently passed, and $40,000,000 more is to go in this fashion and not through appropriations, and $40,000,000 more are to go, I am informed, to the farm-tenant program.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the Senator from Connecticut misunderstood the testimony of Mr. Jones on that subject. It is true that he testified that of the $700,000,000 contemplated to be returned to the Treasury out of the capital stock of these various corporations $200,000,000 would be returned out of the capital stock of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. At the same time he testified that that would have no effect whatever on the hundred million dollars by which we increased the capital stock of the Export-Import Bank, because that is not taken from the capital stock of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; it is obtained by the sale of the obligations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. Jones stated that they could even return to the Treasury $300,000,000 of the original $500,000,000 capital without in any way impairing the ability of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to finance its operations. The same is true of the $40,000,000.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation will not take the $40,000,000 out of its capital stock; it will take it out of funds which it raises by the sale of its own obligations, which it has done frequently in obtaining the funds which it has loaned to various private institutions throughout the United States. So that the Senator need not worry that this $40,000,000, or the $200,000,000, or whatever is used either to return to the Treasury or to finance these operations, will in any way cripple the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator from Kentucky, but I should like to know why we should not continue through our own channels to control the appropriations for the R. E. A., which is a very fine administration and which is achieving a worthy object. I certainly do not like to see it placed in such a position that any agency of the Government can say that a particular extension is not to be made because it is not a worth-while one, or something of that sort. Why can we not appropriate for it?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, these funds which are allocated to R. E. A. are loans; they are not grants. If the appropriation comes out of the Treasury, of course, it comes out of money which is put there through taxation. If it is furnished by the R. F. C. through the sale of its own obligations, it is only a method by which the public itself invests in the lending of the money to the R. E. A., and therefore it does not in any way impinge upon the money in the Treasury which is raised by taxation. The object is to provide money to extend rural electrification, for which I have always fought, and it will not in any way interfere with that. It is merely a means by which the public will invest its own funds in R. E. A. developments.

Mr. DANAHER. We never did it before, did we; certainly not with the R. E. A.?

Mr. RUSSELL. Oh, yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. At the beginning all the money furnished to the R. E. A. was furnished by the R. F. C. It was only 3 years ago when we developed a 10-year program for appropriations at the rate of $40,000,000 a year——

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order made by the Senator from Vermont is well taken. The Senate will please be in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. It was only when we adopted the 10-year program for appropriations at the rate of $40,000,000 a year that we authorized an appropriation out of the Treasury of that amount for this purpose, and for the last 3 years it has been appropriated directly out of the Treasury. This proposal takes us back to the origin of the R. E. A., when the R. F. C. furnished the money with which to develop these rural-electrification projects.

Mr. DANAHER. Will the Senator enlighten me just one step further? Is it not now under the law in the power of the R. F. C. to say whether it will or will not make these loans to the R. E. A.?

Mr. BARKLEY. Theoretically, I suppose it might be said that it is, although there has never been an instance in which the R. F. C. declined or hesitated to make such a loan.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. DANAHER. I welcome any help from the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Georgia. If the pending amendment of the committee shall be agreed to, I may say to the Senator from Connecticut that, as I understand, another amendment will be offered by the Senator from Georgia which will perfect the proposal which has been discussed, and provide for obtaining this money. It will provide not only that the R. F. C. may lend the money, as I understand the amendment—it was submitted to me, and I am stating it from memory only—but they would be directed to lend the money.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator knows that the R. E. A. at this time must get new power before it can borrow this money?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know as to that.

Mr. DANAHER. An effort was made in the House of Representatives, and the RECORD indicates that the amendment went out on a point of order in the House when an effort was made to qualify R. E. A. to borrow this money. Am I correct in that, I ask the Senator?

Mr. RUSSELL. There was so much disorder that I could not hear all that was said, but if I understood the Senator's question it was as to whether or not the House committee had proposed to follow the President's Budget and have the funds come from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. DANAHER. No. On a point of order in the House, did not the language authorizing the R. E. A. to borrow money go out of the bill?

Mr. RUSSELL. It did. It was very clearly legislation. The committee of the House, as I understand, reported it unanimously, but there is no way in the House to avoid points of order being made from the floor.

In the effort that was being made by some of those opposing the bill and opposing the agricultural appropriations to make the totals of the bill appear larger than they really were, one of the Members of the House made the point of order, which, under the rules, he was entitled to make, against the legislative provisions and thereby struck out the authority to borrow from the R. F. C., and made it appear that the increase in the appropriations in the bill amounted to $40,000,000.

The Senate committee is undertaking to follow a precedent that was fixed in an act of 1936, in which the R. E. A. was directed to borrow from the R. F. C., and which was suggested in the present budget this year. Mr. President, I might say that these R. E. A. loans are good loans, and in most instances they will be fully repaid 100 percent, and there is no more reason why the R. E. A. should not come to the R. F. C. for money than that the railroads and big banks and commercial interests should come to the R. F. C. for funds.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia whether he has a statement of a single rural cooperative which shows that it has, in the past year, earned the interest and retirement charges on its loans?

Mr. RUSSELL. No, Mr. President, I do not have a statement that they did or that they did not.

Mr. TAFT. I asked for such a statement last year from the Work Projects Administration. They promised to furnish it, but they never furnished it. So far as I know there is not a single R. E. A. project which, today, is earning its expenses and the interest on its loans. They have kept up with the repayments, because the repayments are made out of the loans they made to the various cooperatives. I think it is an excellent thing, but I think it is an appropriation. I doubt very much if we shall ever get back more than one-half of what we actually advance to these R. E. A. projects. In other words, it is a spending project and not a lending project. In my opinion it ought to be treated as such, and it ought to be carried as an appropriation in this bill.

If the Senator from Georgia can produce the financial statement of a single rural cooperative showing that it has earned the interest on its indebtedness, I think it ought to be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio if he can produce a single record at this moment showing that any bank or trust company or railroad has ever repaid $1 of its obligations to the R. F. C.

Mr. TAFT. Yes, Mr. President; I happen to know one in my own State; the Cincinnati Union Terminal Co. repaid every cent of a loan made to it by the R. F. C.

Mr. RUSSELL. Where is the Senator's record?

Mr. TAFT. I will put it in the RECORD.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator asked me for records pertaining to loans made to R. E. A. projects. Of course, I do not carry such records with me. I have been burdened down like a pack mule for the last several days with information relating to the agricultural appropriation bill. Certainly of all unreasonable requests made on the floor of this body is the request of the Senator from Ohio for original records of repayment of individual loans made by rural cooperatives.

Mr. TAFT. No, Mr. President——

Mr. RUSSELL. Let me complete my statement. It happened that the Farm Security Administration had made thousands of loans to farmers to enable them to make crops. The Farm Credit Administration has made millions of dollars of loans to farmers to enable them to save their farms. Certainly the Senator from Georgia could not be expected to carry around the records of all the loans made to the various farm cooperatives and the collections thereon.

Mr. TAFT. No; but I think the Senator is proposing a change in policy—that it be made on a lending basis.

Mr. RUSSELL. No. I read from the original act creating the Rural Electrification Administration. It is section 903 of the Code of Laws of the United States and reads as follows:

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed to make loans to the Administrator—

That is the Administrator of the Rural Electrification Administration—upon his request approved by the President, not exceeding in aggregate amount $50,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and $100,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, with interest at 3 percent per annum upon the security of the obligations of borrowers from the Administrator appointed pursuant to the provisions of this chapter or from the Administrator of the Rural Electrification Administration established by Executive Order No. 7037: Provided, That no such loan shall be in an amount exceeding 85 percent of the principal amount outstanding of the obligations constituting the security therefor; and Provided further, That such obligations incurred for the purpose of financing the construction and operation of generating plants, electric transmission and distribution lines, or systems shall be fully amortized over a period not to exceed 25 years, and that the maturity of such obligations incurred for the purpose of financing the wiring of premises and the acquisition and installation of electrical and plumbing appliances and equipment shall not exceed two-thirds of the assured life thereof and not more than 5 years. The Administrator is hereby authorized to make all such endorsements, to execute all such instruments and to do all such acts and things as shall be necessary to effect the valid transfer and assignment to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of all such obligations.

Now there is a case where back in 1936 the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was directed to make these loans, and the amendment which I shall propose, and which has been printed, and which has been on the clerk's desk for more than 2 weeks, makes a specific reference to the provisions of this section, and provides that these loans shall be made in the same manner as they were under the provisions of this section.

So the Senator from Ohio was wholly in error.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, since the passage of that law another law has been passed providing for authorizing the annual appropriation of $40,000,000, and that procedure has been followed for the last 3 years, and this year we are proposing to change that procedure. The Senator cannot deny that that is the actual condition today.

Mr. RUSSELL. I was not undertaking to change it. I denied the Senator's original statement that it never had been done this way, and the Senator now makes another statement. I proved that the original statement was unfounded, because it had been done that way through loans.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I did not say that. I said you are proposing a change of policy, and it is a change of policy over what we did last year and the year before that and the year before that.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is not. If the Senator had listened to the reading of the law, he would have seen that it appears that the $50,000,000 loans were for the fiscal year ending June 1937, and $100,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, which was last year. Yet the Senator said there was a change last year and the year before that and the year before that. We are merely returning to the policy that was instituted in 1935, and from which we should never have departed to make these loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation just as loans were made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the railroads and big financial concerns.

Mr. TAFT. We are returning to the policy; therefore it is a change of policy we are propcsing. I say that change of policy should be supported by some evidence——

Mr. RUSSELL. If the Senator desires to split hairs in regard to the matter——

Mr. TAFT. That the loans purporting to be made are really good loans. I have been trying for over a year to get a statement from the R. E. A. showing the actual operating expenses and income of the various rural cooperatives. There may be some that make money. I do not know. I do know that the representatives and the counsel of the R. E. A. testified before the Ohio Tax Commission that they had not made their interest, and that they would not for many years to come. That is in last year's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. That is one I happen to know about. It seems to me that before such change of policy is made we ought to know that such loans are really good loans, and have the figures to support that thesis.

The fact that some of them have been paid back, which was referred to yesterday, it seems to me, makes no difference. I regard the R. E. A. to be just like the R. F. D. Just as we gradually extend rural free delivery to farmers, I think we are justified in extending rural free electric service, but we ought to recoginze that it is a spending policy and not a lending policy.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator contends, as he did a moment ago, that no more than one-half of the loans made to R. E. A. cooperatives will ever be paid back, what difference does it make whether the loan is made by the R. F. C. and is not repaid to it, or whether it is made out of the Treasury and is not repaid to the Treasury? What is the difference in principle?

Mr. TAFT. The difference in principle is that if the Senator's principles are accepted, then the Budget is a fraud.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not accept it. I say if——

Mr. TAFT. In that case the Budget is a fraud, because the expenditures listed in the Budget are not the real expenditures. The expenditures are much greater than they were before.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire to call attention of Senators to the rule providing that they should address the Chair before interrupting one another. The procedure now being followed certainly adds to the confusion of the Chamber, and it is quite impossible for those who are trying to listen to understand the point of the debate.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the criticism is aimed at me, I will say that I thought the Senator from Ohio had the floor, and that I addressed the Chair and asked if he would yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I thought I had the floor. [Laughter.] The Senator from Ohio rose to ask me what I knew about the records, or if I could produce any records in respect to repayments.

Mr. TAFT. Perhaps the Chair will tell us who has the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] had the floor, and during the colloquy between the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Georgia the Senator from Connecticut sat down. So the only thing the Chair could do was to recognize the Senator from Ohio, who was then on his feet, and he addressed a question to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not desire to contribute to this legalistic and hair-splitting discussion——

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I now announce that I desire to yield the floor, if I may.

Mr. RUSSELL. I want a vote on this bill, and I wish to get away from these legalistic discussions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair state the parliamentary situation. The question is on the committee amendment to strike out lines 8 to 11 on page 90.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I understand that when this amendment is agreed to, if it is, and I presume it will be, the Senator from Georgia will then offer an amendment to carry out what must be carried out if we do not appropriate the money to carry on the R. E. A. And if that amendment is not agreed to, then it is the intention of the Senator from Georgia to move immediately a reconsideration of the vote by which this committee amendment is agreed to, and then ask the Senate to reject it. Is that correct?

Mr. RUSSELL. I am not sure that I understood all the Senator's statement. Under the instructions of the Committee on Appropriations, I propose when the committee amendments shall have been concluded in the main body of the bill, to offer this amendment, which has been printed for some days, and which is incorporated in the RECORD in a notice which I filed to suspend the rule, in case a point of order were made against the amendment.

If this amendment proposing that loans shall be made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall be rejected by the Senate, I shall be glad to move a reconsideration of the action of the Senate in adopting the Senate amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Has the Senator already given that notice, and is it printed under the rules?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. So we would not have to adjourn over in order to take it up?

Mr. RUSSELL. No; notice was served 2 weeks ago, and it is on the desk at the present time.

Mr. NORRIS. What I am particularly interested in is that when this bill is finished we shall not find ourselves without any appropriation for the coming fiscal year to carry on the R. E. A. program. If the committee amendment is agreed to, then there is no appropriation in this bill except for administrative purposes only. The R. E. A. would have to stop progress during the coming year because of the want of appropriations. So we ought to have that understood. It seems to me that situation should be known by the Senate.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I take it from what the Senator from Ohio has said that he will make the point of order. Then the Senator from Georgia will move to suspend the rule. If he does not obtain a two-thirds vote to suspend the rule, then his amendment must fail. If we go on debating the bill, it may be that the time for reconsideration of this particular amendment will have expired, and it will be too late to take any action on it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am just as much concerned as is the Senator from Nebraska or anyone else in the appropriaton for the R. E. A. I certainly want nothing done to prevent this matter being considered fully and thoroughly on its merits, both as to the committee amendment to the House bill and the legislative amendment which I have been authorized to offer from the floor. In order that we may make progress, I ask unanimous consent that the Rural Electrification amendments be the last considered of all the committee amendments, in order that I may offer the legislative amendment as a substitute for the language in the bill. That will protect the rights of all those who are interested, either for or against the proposal, and will enable us to make some progress on other committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. Referring to the statement of the Senator from Ohio as to delinquent payments, I call attention to the fact that the House hearings, on page 1126, show that there are only 10 projects which could technically be called delinquent in payments; and on page 1127 there is a statement showing the projects which not only are not delinquent, but have anticipated the payments of interest and principal due as of the date of the hearing. I should like to include as a part of my statement the list showing the projects which have anticipated the payments before the date they were due.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, just a moment before that is agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that a certain statement be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement is as follows:

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. When the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] requested information from the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] as to the projects which were paid up and those which were not, I went to the telephone and called Mr. Slattery, the Director of the Rural Electrification Administration, and he gave me substantially the same information as that given in the House hearings. Virtually all the projects are paid up. There are about 800 in all. The majority of them are paid up, and some of them are paid up in advance.

Mr. TAFT and Mr. RUSSELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield and, if so, to whom?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield first to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the statement inserted in the RECORD by the Senator from South Carolina is exactly the same thing which was given us last year. It does not prove in any way that the projects have earned their interest. It simply proves that they have paid the first installment of interest, or perhaps the second installment of interest, which could have been paid—and, so far as I know, was paid—out of the loans made to them. Last year we requested an operating statement. I did not say that they have not paid the interest. I said that they have not earned the interest; or at least I see no evidence that they have earned the interest. We have yet to obtain a single statement from any rural cooperative showing that during the past year it has earned the interest which it is obliged to pay to the United States.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I wish to express my profound disappointment with my good friend from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], who has read from the House hearings information as to the repayments which have already been made; and with the Senator from Tennessee, who has stated merely what the man in charge of the agency has told him, without bringing in the canceled notes. This will not suffice to contradict the opinion of the Senator from Ohio. There is no way to convince the Senator from Ohio unless the Senator brings in the canceled notes. The printed record and the statement of the man in charge of the Rural Electrification Administration are the only things brought in, and they do not convince the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I make my apologies to the Senator from Georgia, but I asked Mr. Slattery to send that information to the Senate, and when it comes I shall put it in the RECORD so that the Senator from Ohio may read it.

Mr. RUSSELL. That will not suffice, Mr. President. The Senator from Tennessee must go down to the Rural Electrification Administration and obtain the notes, if they have them, from the 800 companies all over the country, and bring them in. Nothing less than that will satisfy the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. McKELLAR. Must I have an affidavit?

Mr. RUSSELL. Nothing less than that will satisfy the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], who has such detailed and intimate information as to the operations of the Rural Electrification Administration.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am interested, as I think all Senators are, in the R. E. A. continuing with its work, which I think so far has been a wonderful success. I do not want any parliamentary situation to arise by which we may find, when we get through with the bill, that we have done nothing to continue the work of the R. E. A. during the next year. I think that the unanimous-consent agreement which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] has obtained practically obviates that danger.

Mr. President, I think there are two sides to the question as to whether we ought to make direct appropriations or whether we ought to borrow the money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to continue the R. E. A. Personally, I have not much choice. However, I understand that the Departments, including the Agricultural Department, of which the R. E. A. is now a part, have all agreed upon the change which the committee has suggested. Personally, if I were compelled to choose between the two methods, I believe I should rather have a direct appropriation, but I am not objecting to the other method if those who are administering the act, and have to do with the bookkeeping, want to do it that way. It seems to me there will be no difference in the end. So, when the Senator offers his amendment to take the place of the language which the committee amendment seeks to strike out, we can fight out that question. I do not care very much which way it goes. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] can then oppose the amendment or make a point of order against it if he so desires—and I think it is subject to a point of order. We can then take up the question of the suspension of the rule, which will make a motion in order. If that fails, then we are to go back to this amendment, with the understanding that we are to reconsider it, and reject it upon reconsideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair wishes to make a suggestion to the Senator from Georgia. The amendment, in lines 8 to 11, on page 90, has been postponed for later consideration. The Chair calls attention to the fact that the next amendment, in lines 12 and 13, should be subject to the same unanimous-consent request.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I so intended. If I did not do so, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments affecting the Rural Electrification Administration be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Georgia, that the committee amendment in lines 12 and 13 be likewise postponed for later consideration, is agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I cannot let this occasion pass without saying something about the financial consideration which has been given to the R. E. A. this afternoon. The Senator from Ohio says that not more than one-half the money loaned to the R. E. A. will ever be repaid, whether to the R. F. C. or to the Treasury, and that so far as he can ascertain none of the projects are now making money.

Of course, when he asks us to present definite evidence on a moment's notice, it cannot be done. I have tried to keep up with the question, and I have a general understanding. I have read many letters and reports from various local associations and cooperative institutions of farmers all over the United States engaged in supplying electricity to themselves and their members. I have received information with respect to many which appeared to me, so far as I was able to determine, to be in fine financial condition. They had paid every debt and met every obligation.

However, many of them do not meet all their obligations to begin with, and do not expect to. No private institution which ever went into the electric business ever intended to meet such obligations in the beginning, and very few of them ever did so. A period of growth is required. There is a time, running from 2 to 3, 4, or 5 years, in which a private company or a public company can be expected to lose money, when it is unable to meet its obligations and amortize its investments.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I shall be glad to yield in just a moment.

Also, as we all know, there are parts of the country in which agriculture has not been prosperous and where farmers are not making money. That situation is true of most parts of the country. Today millions of farmers in the new projects want to take the electricity, but are financially unable to do so. Others do take the electricity, but they take only a minor part of what they will take if they ever get on their feet. If the country fails, and if all our farmers go to the poorhouse, then this institution will fail financially. Otherwise I regard it as the safest investment ever made by public or private investors.

I now yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I am not prepared to answer in detail as to the cooperatives in my State, but I will say to the Senator that because of the hydraulic development on the Colorado River in my State, under Government supervision, great numbers of rural electrical cooperative projects are being put into operation. My general information is that they are meeting their obligations, and that they are welcomed by the people generally as a great forward movement. I think it has been one of the most useful things we have done to take a little comfort and convenience into the rural sections at rates which the people can pay. In my State I believe that, on the whole, these concerns are in sound condition, and that the Government will not lose money by reason of its investment. I wish to congratulate the Senator from Nebraska on his activity and the great labor he has expended in this field.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator from Texas for his contribution.

I have received many letters and reports from the State of Texas, where farmers' cooperatives have been organized for the purpose of distributing electricity to their members.

There is another reason why we have cause to expect and believe that within the next few years there will be greater successes on the part of the cooperative farmer organizations distributing electricity. Many of these organizations are now paying an exorbitant price at wholesale for electricity because they are not always able to buy it from public corporations. They are still subject to the exactions made by private corporations. It is true that many private corporations are much better than they formerly were, and in many cases the service is fine and the rates they are charging are reasonable. As a matter of fact, however, every Senator knows, or would know if he studied the question at all, that for the past 10 or 15 or 20 years the farmers of the country on bended knees have been going to the private owners of electric energy, begging for an opportunity to use electricity in their homes; and they have been met with charges that are insurmountable, that no ordinary farmer could pay, that no one could pay who had not a salary or income outside of his farm itself. To install the electric wires they were usually asked prices that paid for the entire installation, and then the other fellow owned it after that; and they were charged rates that were exorbitant and unreasonable.

To a great extent that has now disappeared. The Government has come in, through this act, and has started a movement in favor of electrifying the farms of America; and that has had a tendency to open the eyes of private investors who heretofore had no interest in trying to furnish electricity to the farms except at prices that the farmer could not pay. The private investors have awakened to a sense of the responsibility that is theirs, and in some instances they are supplying electricity at very fair and reasonable rates; but in other instances, when there is no possibility of getting public service from some public generating plant, they are still holding up prices at an enormous level.

That condition, we hope, will disappear. I have no doubt of it. When it does, more farmers will take electricity, more electric appliances will be used in the farmers' homes. The farmers will begin to buy stoves, they will buy refrigerators, and washing machines, and ironing machines, and all sorts of things that they now cannot afford to pay for. That means, in my judgment, that unless some calamity occurs, the whole scheme of the R. E. A. is going to meet with an impetus and upgrade development that will bring success to practically every one of the projects that have been put in.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to inform the Senator from Nebraska of an experience in Kentucky which I am quite certain will be of great pleasure to him because of his great general interest in this matter.

By negotiations in 1939 we were able to get the power companies in Kentucky to agree to a wholesale rate to rural cooperatives of 1.2 cents per kilowatt-hour. I believe that is one of the lowest rates that has been established for furnishing power wholesale to rural cooperatives. I believe the records will show that, because of that, during 1938 and 1939 the people of Kentucky perhaps made the greatest advance that was made in the United States in obtaining by negotiation electric service to the farmers of the State. I know that the Senator from Nebraska will be very much pleased with the experience of the people of Kentucky during recent years.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator.

The Senator speaks of a rate of 1.2 cents per kilowatt-hour. As rates go now, that is not a bad rate. I should not call it a low rate. There are now many lower rates than that. There are a great many that are higher. Within the next few years, when the country is more completely covered with electric wires, I think a rate of 1 cent per kilowatt-hour, wholesale, will be considered an exorbitant rate. The present T. V. A. wholesale rates are something less than 1 cent. I believe the rate which the Senator from Kentucky has mentioned probably would come close to the average, or perhaps a little lower.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will yield for just a moment, I believe that at the time the rate was obtained it was the lowest in the country.

Mr. NORRIS. It probably was.

In my judgment, Mr. President—and I want to be unprejudiced; I want to be honest about the matter—the Government of the United States never made a loan which on the average was as secure and as safe as the money that has been loaned to furnish R. E. A. electric service to the farmers of America. It is a debt that the farmer is going to pay in preference to any other debt. It is a debt that is going to be met even though the farmer cannot buy gasoline for his Ford. It is being met now in my own State. In a part of the State where there has not been a full crop in 8 years the farmers are now taking electricity where these organizations are successful. If a full crop comes this year, the consumption in the State by the farmer will treble; and do you know what that means in every electric service? Double the service without increasing the transmission lines or the number of customers, just double the service that you have, and you cut in two the price that you can afford to charge the consumer. You have made profit out of what before was a blank failure.

In my judgment, nothing the Government of the United States has ever done in a financial way equals the return that must come from loaning this money. It is not only that the Government is going to get its loans paid. There is no subsidy to the farmer in this loan. I think we would be justified in voting a subsidy to carry electricity to the farming people of America; but it is not being done. They are paying their way, and this is going to be one of the most profitable investments the Government ever made.

But that is not all. There is an obligation on the part of a government that cares anything for its people, a government that has any regard for the happiness of the families that live on the farm, that do the drudgery of the Nation, that produce what keeps us all alive and gives us clothing and food, the very foundation of our civilization. Those people have been held down in poverty because they have lacked the things that bring happiness and comfort to the fireside and to the home.

Those things are coming to the farmer. Furnishing them to him is worth more to the perpetuity of the Nation and the health of civilization than getting back the money we have loaned. The important thing is the good that we are doing. We are affording some comfort and happiness to the distressed housewife who has almost worried her life out over the hot stove in the summer time in trying to take care of the workers on the farm. We are making it unnecessary for her to break her back in washing and ironing the clothing. We are making it unnecessary for her to carry to the house water from the pump that probably came down from her forefathers. We are bringing some comfort, some happiness, to the distressed portion of our people and of our Nation. We can afford to lose all the money for the happiness these loans are going to bring, and they are going to bring it.

I saw Mr. Carmody in my office before he gave up the R. E. A. He came to see me about something, and when we got through with the consideration of the subject he had brought to my attention I said, "Carmody, do you know any instances in which you have installed electricity in farm homes and the farmers got tired of it and made you take it out?" He said, "Yes; we had a case in Minnesota. We started an organization, which went to work and put in the electricity. They got it all started and going and charged, and they had been running for 2 or 3 months when a farmer came into the office in town one day and said, 'I wish you would send a man out to my home to disconnect the electricity and bring in the meter.' They tried their best to talk him out of it. They could not do anything with him; so they said, 'All right, we will send out a man in a few days.'

"In a few days they sent out a man, and the farmer was not there. His wife was there, however; and the man from the company explained to the wife why he had come. She said, 'Oh, no; I do not want the electricity disconnected. I do not think you will do it.' The man said, 'But it is your husband's order.' She said, 'I cannot help that, but I do not think you had better try it'; and she looked so determined and so robust to the young fellow who went out there that he decided not to try it. He went back to town, and the men in the office laughed about the incident when he reported it, and said, 'When the old man comes home she will talk him out of this crazy notion'; but she did not.

"A few days after the farmer returned home he came into the office of the company and brought the meter with him, and said, 'Here is your darned old meter. I don't want it any more. I have disconnected it.' They said, 'What for? What have we done?' 'You have not done anything, but I can't afford electricity. I won't have anything to do with it. I have paid up the bill. I am all clear, but no more electricity for me'; and so he went home. When he got home, however, his wife was not there, and up to this hour she has not returned." [Laughter.]

Mr. President, when electricity is installed in the farmer's home it is necessary to deal with the farmer's wife. It is probably to the farm women that the most happiness is brought by these modern conveniences, and that is where it ought to come. It is necessary to deal with them; and as long as there are rolling pins and fire tongs around the farm home, it will not be safe for anybody to go out there to disconnect the electricity or take away the meter. [Laughter.]

This is a debt that the farm people are going to pay if they ever pay anything. What we ought to do is to devote our energies and our abilities, what little we have, to trying to get the farmers a wholesale rate that is away below the rate they are now paying, and we ought to be able to get appliances to them at half the price they are now paying.

Electricity is different from any other commodity. It is no use and no good unless there are appliances with which to use it. The appliances are just as necessary as the electricity itself; and when the farmers pay an exorbitant price for the appliances it is just the same and just as bad as though they were paying an exorbitant price for the electricity itself.

Everybody knows that the price of appliances is all out of joint with the cost of the appliances. An enormous profit goes into the manufacture and sale of the appliances. The Government has done something with that condition. It has been criticized very severely for doing it. The Government has brought about a great reduction all over the Tennessee Valley, and is now trying to do it all over the United States. It has brought about a reduction in the construction cost of electric lines. It has brought about a reduction in the cost of meters. For instance, now, I think all over the United States, the farmers have a meter, or they can get it—at least, all new projects can get it—that, as I remember now, costs about half or less than half the cost of the ordinary meter, and it is a meter which any of us can read just as easily as we can read the figures on the speedometers of our automobiles.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment. It is not necessary to have an expert to come and read the meter. That expense and that cost have been done away with. The farmer reads the meter and telephones the reading over the country telephone. He can read it just as he can read the figures on the speedometer of his automobile, as I have stated.

About once every 3 months the experts inspect the projects the different farmers are operating and look at the meters. If a farmer has cheated, or if he has been wrong, if he has not given the correct report when he telephoned the reading as to how much had been consumed in February or March, for instance, he is caught. He will not give a false reading, even though he were inclined to do so. He will not be inclined to do so for two reasons: First, because almost all the farmers are like the general class of honest people; they are honest themselves. In the next place, they are members of cooperative institutions, and if a farmer cheats, he cheats himself the same as he cheats his neighbor. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Nebraska, who knows more about this subject, certainly, than any man I have ever known, was just speaking of the reduction in the cost to the farmer due to the R. E. A. As the Senator from Nebraska so well knows, at the time we set up the R. E. A. one of the great costs incident to rural electrification was the cost of the lines. The lines cost the farmer between $1,500 and $1,800 a mile. Today, largely through the R. E. A., that cost has been reduced from between $1,500 and $1,800 to about $800.

Mr. NORRIS. It is less than that. I read a statement of the average today; it is between six and seven hundred dollars.

Mr. HILL. The same reduction which we have witnessed in the cost of the lines has gone down pretty well through the appliances and everything else connected with the system.

Mr. NORRIS. Absolutely.

Mr. HILL. At the very time when we set up the R. E. A., many of the power companies were saying, "It is not economical. You cannot carry these lines out into the rural areas." They are now themselves carrying hundreds of thousands of miles out through the rural areas, the R. E. A. having shown it could be done, and the R. E. A. having served as an impetus, a spur, to get it done. Is not that true?

Mr. NORRIS. That is correct. I want to say just a word more, and then I shall have concluded. The Senator reminds me of another thing. I wish to refer to the reduction not only in the cost of appliances, but in the cost of electricity itself, which is coming. I mentioned one improvement, in the matter of the meter, a meter which anyone can read, which is less than half the price it originally was. The prices of the wires which are to be established, and of the appliances which are to be used, are being cut in two. They are all coming down.

In the end the farmer will be one of the best electric customers in the United States. He is a better customer than the ordinary person in the city, and it is very plain why he is, for to him the use of electricity is comparatively new; in his case it has not gone far enough yet, and improvements and developments are coming every day. The farmer is going to use electricity to improve the production of eggs, and that use is advancing at a wonderful rate. He is going to use it in connection with the raising of chicks, and the raising of little pigs. The use of electricity in the pumping of water, of course, is common, has long been known. The farmer is milking his cows with electricity. There is another thing which is a practical improvement. Instead of building a five-wire fence to confine cattle and pigs, he can put up a two-wire fence, one wire for the cattle and one for the hogs, and electrify them with a very weak current, eight volts, and that is a better means of keeping stock in a field than has ever been before known. When a cow or a hog goes up against that lightly charged electric wire once, it never goes up against it again, and after the farmer has had the fence electrified for a few days, he can turn the electricity off. The animals cannot tell the difference by looking at the fence whether it is electrified or not. All kinds of improvements are being made.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LEE. I understand there are electric voting machines in New York which will elect a candidate and electrocute his opponent with the same shock. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know about that. We are living in an electric age, and we are at the very beginning of a great advance in the use of electrical appliances, with the prospect of affording greater comfort and profit and happiness than ever before known.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. HILL. The Senator expressed a fear, shared by many of us, that if we strike out the language from lines 8 to 13, on page 90, the language which really makes the direct appropriation of $40,000,000, and then afterward add the committee amendment providing for financing the R. E. A. through the R. F. C., if the committee amendment should be voted down, then we would at that moment be in the position of not having anything in the bill except the small amount for administration purposes.

Mr. NORRIS. That would not do any good.

Mr. HILL. No; there would not be anything to administer. What I am wondering is why it would not be in order, instead of striking out the language on lines 8 to 11, page 90, and then offering the amendment in reference to the R. F. C., to offer the amendment providing for the loans through the R. F. C. as a substitute for this language in lines 8 to 11, on page 90. Then, if the substitute fails, the language from lines 8 to 11, making direct appropriations, would remain in the bill. Would that be in order?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, the amendment is legislation, there is no question.

Mr. HILL. I understand that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Therefore it would not be in order as a committee amendment for the reason that one amendment would take a two-thirds vote and the other one a majority vote.

If the Senator will permit, if the situation should arise to which he has referred, the committee amendment being agreed to and then the other amendment failing, of course it would still be in order to move a reconsideration of the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. That is all right if we have an understanding that is going to happen in case the condition arises. The Senator from Georgia has already obtained unanimous consent to defer the consideration of this amendment until everything else in the bill has been acted on. So I do not understand that there will be any trouble on that score.

Mr. President, after we finished the debate in the Senate this afternoon relating to rural electrification, I sent to my office for some statistical information for which I had asked Mr. Slattery—data relating to various subjects connected with the electrification administration. I obtained the information, and I ask to have it printed immediately following the remarks I made this afternoon.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INCREASE IN RURAL ELECTRIFICATION IN THE UNITED STATES

A. GENERAL STATEMENT

1. The percentage of farms in the United States with central-station service increased from 10.9 in January 1935 to about 25 percent in January 1940. In other words, the number of farms with electric service is now about two and one-half times greater than when R. E. A. was established.

2. This rapid increase reflects the work of both R. E. A. and the private industry. The Government's program has stimulated the interests of the private industry in rural electrification—has stimulated the industry to offer more reasonable terms to farmers to build in rural areas where service had previously been denied except at exorbitant rates.

3. However, there remain more than 5,000,000 of our farms without electric service.

GROWTH IN NUMBER OF RURAL CONSUMERS RECEIVING ELECTRIC SERVICE FROM R. E. A. FINANCED SYSTEMS

A. GENERAL STATEMENT

1. By February 1, 1940, there were 462,817 consumers connected and receiving electric service from R. E. A. financed systems. When lines now under construction are completed service will be made available to an additional 400,000 rural residents.

2. Since July 1, 1939, progress in the number of connected consumers has been at an accelerated pace. Of the 462,817 now receiving service, about 200,000 were connected between June 30, 1939, and February 1, 1940, an average of about 28,000 a month. This compares with an increase of 168,000 between July 1, 1938, and July 1, 1939, or an increase of 14,000 a month.

B. STATISTICAL DATA

Connected consumers on Rural Electrification Administration financed lines

ALLOTMENTS

A. GENERAL STATEMENT

1. The growing importance of the Federal rural-electrification program is clearly shown by the amount of allotments made by R. E. A. By February 29, 1940, R. E. A. had made allotments totaling $269,396,793 to 689 borrowers located in 45 States.

2. As shown by the accompanying data, substantially all of the allotments of the present fiscal year were made during the first 6 months. Because of improved methods and procedures, R. E. A. was able to make these allotments as soon as appropriations became available. This has made it possible for borrowers to take advantage of favorable weather conditions of the fall for construction.

3. Of the 689 borrowers, 613 are cooperative associations, 52 are public power districts and other public bodies, and 24 are private companies.

B. STATISTICAL DATA

Allotments and number of borrowers

Date	Allotments	Number of borrowers
June 1936	$15,050,000	66

FUNDS ADVANCED BY THE TREASURY FOR RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

A. GENERAL STATEMENT

1. By February 29, 1940, R. E. A. had advanced funds totaling $197,583,616. This figure compares with advances of $122,338,000 on July 1, 1939, $60,500,000 on July 1, 1938, and $12,401,000 on July 1, 1937.

2. From these figures it may be observed that $75,245,616 was advanced during the 8-month period of July 1, 1939, and February 29, 1940, in comparison with $61,838,000 during the 12-month period July 1, 1938, to July 1, 1939. On a comparative monthly basis, during the 8-month period July 1, 1939, to February 29, 1940, the monthly average of advances was $9,405,000 in contrast to $5,153,000 during the year July 1, 1938, to July 1, 1939.

B. STATISTICAL DATA

Advances by the Treasury Department for rural electrification

June 1936	$823,000
June 1937	12,401,000

PROGRESS IN LINE CONSTRUCTION

A. GENERAL STATEMENT

1. During the 8-month period July 1, 1939, to March 1, 1940, a total of 78,711 miles of line was constructed, an average of 9,838 miles per month. This compares with a total of 75,817 miles constructed during the year July 1, 1938, to July 1, 1939, or an average of 6,318 miles per month.

2. During November and December of 1939 the rate of construction reached an all-time high, averaging slightly over 500 miles of line a day.

B. STATISTICAL DATA

PROGRESS IN REDUCTION OF LINE-CONSTRUCTION COSTS

A. GENERAL STATEMENT

1. One of the outstanding accomplishments of R. E. A. is the substantial reduction in the cost of line construction. Before R. E. A. was established the reported average cost of rural lines ranged from $1,500 to $1,800 a mile. The cost of R. E. A. financed lines averages about $800, or approximately 50 percent of previously reported costs.

2. This reduction has been achieved without any impairment of quality or durability of construction. Today R. E. A. line design is being adopted by private companies.

3. Since 1935 the over-all line costs of R. E. A. borrowers have been declining—from $980 in 1936 to $914 in 1937, to $810 in 1938, and to $754 in 1939. For the last 6 months of 1939 the average construction contract cost was $648 a mile in contrast to $865 in 1937.

DEVELOPMENT OF EQUIPMENT FOR RURAL LINES AND RURAL PEOPLE

A. GENERAL STATEMENT

1. R. E. A. is constantly striving to make rural electric service meet the needs of rural areas and, where necessary, to encourage the development of equipment for this purpose. Two of the outstanding technical developments are a cyclometer-type meter and a small, low-cost transformer.

2. In cooperation with manufacturers, R. E. A. has developed a cyclometer-type meter which permits easy, direct reading and reporting by farmers themselves, and thus reduces the cost of meter reading from about 15 to 3 cents a month per meter. This one development will save consumers on R. E. A. lines many thousands of dollars every year.

3. A second outstanding development is a low-cost, small transformer that will enable farmers of very limited income to enjoy electric lights and small electrical appliances for a minimum bill of $1 a month. This development is an excellent example of the efforts of R. E. A. to make electric service available to all farmers regardless of their income status.

BENEFITS OF FEDERAL RURAL ELECTRIFICATION PROGRAM TO INDUSTRY

A. GENERAL STATEMENT

1. During the present fiscal year it is estimated that R. E. A. borrowers will purchase electric power at wholesale from private utility companies that will total almost $3,000,000. This is new business for the private industry, business for which it did not have to incur any selling or development expense and which results generally in the improvement of their load factor.

2. The Government's rural-electrification program has made a new market for manufacturers of line construction materials. As of June 30, 1939, it is estimated that the Federal funds used for financing line construction, wiring, and plumbing required manufactured products totaling $145,500,000. This was divided among many industries, as shown in the accompanying table.

3. In addition, consumers on R. E. A. lines spent almost $27,000,000 for wiring and plumbing installations and almost $80,000,000 for appliances and other farm electrical equipment.

B. STATISTICAL DATA

Estimated value of construction materials used in R. E. A. program between May 1935 and June 1939

Conductors	$48,500,000
Guys, hardware, insulators, etc	33,500,000
Poles	27,000,000
Transformers	25,000,000
Generating equipment	4,000,000
Meters	5,500,000
Wiring and plumbing	2,000,000

LOAN APPLICATIONS PENDING

A. GENERAL STATEMENT

1. There are definite indications that the desire for electric service by farm people on terms that they can afford to pay is increasing. Loan applications on hand or being prepared in the field totaled $62,761,200 on March 15, 1940.

2. These applications have been submitted by farm groups notwithstanding the discouragement given inquirers when available loan funds are near exhaustion. The amount of $62,761,000 exceeds by $22,761,000 the loan appropriation of $40,000,000 recommended in the Budget for fiscal year 1941.

B. STATISTICAL DATA

Loan applications pending as of March 15, 1940

	Number of applications	Amount
Ready for allotment	51	$6,408,000
Being examined for allotment	182	22,851,500
Known to be in preparation in field	264	33,501,700
Total	497	62,761,200

CONTROL AND SCHEDULING OF R. E. A. ACTIVITIES

1. One of the most important managerial techniques involved in the execution of the rural-electrification program has been the establishment by an experienced management engineer of schedules of performance for each type of activity. Through close adherence to these schedules, the work involved in each operation is coordinated with the previous and succeeding operations so that the program moves forward in an orderly manner, each operation being performed at the right time and in relation to all other operations. As a result of these schedules and the necessary controls to make them effective, many operating economies and increased efficiency have been obtained without impairment of either quality or thoroughness of work. For example, the scheduled period of time elapsing between an allotment of funds and the execution of the construction contract has been reduced from 36 weeks in fiscal 1936 to 22 weeks in fiscal 1937, to 16 weeks in fiscal 1938, and to 12 weeks in fiscal 1939.

2. In consequence of the knowledge of the personnel requirements to execute the program of the Congress as determined by the schedules and controls noted above, R. E. A. is able to develop calculated budgets of its administrative expenses. As a result, the R. E. A. administrative budget is estimated with considerable precision and the Bureau of the Budget can judge the requirements of R. E. A. with more than customary accuracy.

FINANCIAL RESULTS OF R. E. A. PROGRAM

A. GENERAL STATEMENT

1. Notwithstanding the fact that R. E. A. borrowers are new concerns and many of them have been in operation a relatively short time, they as a whole are in excellent condition and show assuring prospects.

2. Thirty percent of the borrowers' systems for which loans have been made are not yet energized. Of the remaining 70 percent, about 30 percent are constructing additions and are not completely energized; i. e., of all R. E. A. borrowers only 20 percent are completed, well rounded out, energized going concerns.

3. The best evidence of the financial results of the R. E. A. program to date is contained in the figures showing the amounts due R. F. C. and the amounts collected to meet these payments. As shown in the following table every payment has been made to R. F. C. and a surplus has been maintained for future payments.

B. STATISTICAL DATA

SIGNIFICANCE OF DISTRIBUTION OF ELECTRICITY IN RURAL AREAS BY COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATIONS AND OTHER PUBLIC BODIES

1. Ownership and control of rural electric distribution systems by associations of citizens of a community point the way toward desirable decentralization and away from the centralized control over community activities of financial centers. It is reviving the interests of citizens in the affairs of their community.

2. The development of rural cooperatives and other nonprofit public bodies for rural electrification is one step toward a true democratic society in which citizens, through their collective efforts, can control their affairs. Such organizations help to educate them in democratic principles and democratic institutions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Beltsville Research Center", on page 90, line 16, after the word "expenses", to strike out "$85,000" and insert "$86,620", so as to read:

For general administrative purposes, including maintenance, operation, repairs, and other expenses, $86,620; and, in addition thereto, this appropriation may be augmented, by transfer of funds or by reimbursement, from applicable appropriations, to cover the cost, including handling and other related charges, of services and supplies, equipment and materials furnished, stores of which may be maintained at the center, and to cover the cost of building construction, alteration, and repair performed by the center in carrying out the purposes of such applicable appropriations, and the applicable appropriations may also be charged their proportionate share of the necessary general expenses of the center not covered by this appropriation.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to the committee amendment on page 33, line 5, which was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Texas withhold his request until we conclude action on the other amendments of the committee? There are but a few of them.

Mr. CONNALLY. In deference to the Senator from Georgia, I withhold the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 90, line 16.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Farm Credit Administration—Salaries and expenses," on page 95, line 10, after the words "in all", to strike out "$3,750,000" and insert "$3,770,000", so as to read:

For salaries and expenses of the Farm Credit Administration in the District of Columbia and the field; traveling expenses of officers and employees including not to exceed $5,000 for travel incurred under proper authority attending meetings or conventions of members of organizations at which matters of importance to the work of the Farm Credit Administration are to be discussed or transacted; printing and binding; contingent and miscellaneous expenses, including law books, books of reference, and not to exceed $1,000 for periodicals, newspapers, and maps; contract stenographic reporting services, and expert services for the preparation of amortization tables; library membership fees or dues in organizations which issue publications to members only or to members at a lower price than to others, payment for which may be made in advance; purchase of manuscripts, data, and special reports by personal service without regard to the provisions of any other act; procurement of supplies and services without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5) when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed $50; purchase, exchange, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and motortrucks to be used only for official purposes; typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices, including their repair and exchange; garage rental in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; payment of actual transportation expenses and not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses of persons serving, while away from their homes, without other compensation from the United States, in an advisory capacity to the Farm Credit Administration; employment of persons, firms, and others for the performance of special services, including legal services, and other miscellaneous expenses; necessary administrative expenses in connection with the making of loans under the provisions of the Act of January 29, 1937 (50 Stat. 5), and the collection of moneys due the United States on account of loans made under the provisions of the acts of March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. 1347), March 20, 1922 (42 Stat. 467), April 26, 1924 (43 Stat. 110), February 28, 1927 (44 Stat. 1251), February 25, 1929 (45 Stat. 1306), as amended May 17, 1929 (46 Stat. 3), March 3, 1930 (46 Stat. 78, 79), December 20, 1930 (46 Stat. 1032), February 14, 1931 (46 Stat. 1160), and February 23, 1931 (46 Stat. 1276), January 22, 1932 (47 Stat. 5), February 4, 1933 (47 Stat. 795), March 4, 1933 (47 Stat. 1547), February 23, 1934 (48 Stat. 354), March 10, 1934 (48 Stat. 402), June 19, 1934 (48 Stat. 1021), February 20, 1935 (49 Stat. 28), March 21, 1935 (49 Stat. 49), April 8, 1935 (49 Stat. 115), January 29, 1937 (50 Stat. 5), February 9, 1937 (50 Stat. 8, 11), February 4, 1938 (52 Stat. 26), and Executive Order No. 7305, dated February 28, 1936; examination of corporations, banks, associations, credit unions, and institutions operated, supervised, or regulated by the Farm Credit Administration: Provided, That the expenses and salaries of employees engaged in such examinations shall be assessed against the said corporations, banks, or institutions in accordance with the provisions of existing laws, in all, $3,770,000, together with not to exceed $3,900,000 from the funds made available to the Farm Credit Administration under the acts of January 29, 1937 (50 Stat. 5), February 9, 1937 (50 Stat. 8, 11), February 4, 1938 (52 Stat. 26), and June 30, 1939 (Public, No. 159).

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment on behalf of the committee. The committee increased the item with respect to the Commodity Exchange Corporation and overlooked increasing the amount in the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 69, line 14, it is proposed to strike out "$198,340" and to insert "$214,050."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, there is a clerical error on page 83, line 3. The figures "1940" should read "1941." I ask unanimous consent that it may be corrected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the correction will be made.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I am instructed by the committee to offer another amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 79, line 8, following the word "materials", it is proposed to insert the words "or any soil-conserving services."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I offer another amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 79, line 14, following the word "materials", it is proposed to insert the words "or any soil-conserving services."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 78, line 9, it is proposed to strike out all after the colon down to and including the colon in line 17, as follows:

Provided further, That such amounts as may be necessary of this appropriation shall be immediately available to reimburse the appropriation under this head for 1940 on account of obligations created against said appropriation in connection with the 1940 grant-of-aid program, advances for the 1940 crop-insurance program, and county-association expenses for the 1940 agricultural conservation program.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, that concludes the amendments to be offered on behalf of the committee, with the exception of one passed over, the rural-electrification amendment, and another legislative amendment. I wish to offer, then, in behalf of the committee, the rural-electrification amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. I dislike to suggest the absence of a quorum. The Senator from Ohio stated he wished to be on the floor when this amendment was considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not suggest the absence of a quorum. I am merely making the statement in order that anyone interested might notify the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the proper place it is proposed to insert the following:

Loans: For loans in accordance with sections 3, 4, and 5, and the purchase of property in accordance with section 7 of the Rural Electrification Act of May 20, 1936, as amended (7 U. S. C. 901–914), $40,000,000, which sum shall be borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in accordance with the provisions of section 3 (a) of said act and shall be considered as made available thereunder; and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized and directed to lend such sum in addition to the amounts heretofore authorized under said section 3 (a) and without regard to the limitation in respect of time contained in section 3 (e) of said act; and the amount of notes, bonds, debentures, and other such obligations which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to issue and to have outstanding at any one time under existing law is hereby increased by an amount sufficient to carry out the provisions hereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the committee amendment is agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, that is a legislative amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, does not the Senator want to make a change in line 12?

Mr. RUSSELL. I did not understand the Senator's comment.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the Senator want to make a change in lines 12 and 13, following the amendment?

Mr. RUSSELL. Since the amendment has been agreed to, the other amendment, on line 13, is now in order, because the amendment adopted provides for a loan from the R. F. C., and this appropriation is for administrative expenses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair suggest that the amendment, on lines 8 to 11 and lines 12 and 13, be disposed of in order to put the bill in proper shape.

Mr. RUSSELL. I understand that the committee amendment, on lines 8 to 11, page 90, has not been agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on lines 8 to 11, page 90.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment presented by the committee.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 90, line 12, it is proposed to strike out "$43,075,000" and to insert "$3,075,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I have a final amendment which I submit, as instructed by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 85, after line 24, it is proposed to insert the following:

Loans: For loans in accordance with title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, approved July 22, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1000–1003), $50,000,000, which sum shall be borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation at an interest rate of 3 percent per annum; and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized and directed to lend such sum to the Secretary of Agriculture, who shall make repayment thereof out of all moneys collected by him representing payments of principal and interest on the loans made out of the funds so borrowed, and the amount of notes, bonds, debentures, and other such obligations which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to issue and to have outstanding at any one time under existing law is hereby increased by an amount sufficient to carry out the provisions hereof: Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, when requested by the Federal Loan Administrator, to pay to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation from funds not otherwise appropriated an amount equal to the unpaid principal amount of the loans made hereunder, together with the interest accrued and unpaid thereon, and thereafter any sums repaid on account of said loans shall forthwith be covered into the general fund of the Treasury.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, this is the legislative provision, which has been discussed earlier in the debate, which transfers the tenant farmer loan program to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 85, after line 24.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, that concludes the committee amendments.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 80, line 8, after the figures "1942", it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Provided further, That notwithstanding any other provision of law, persons who in 1938 and 1939 carried out farming operations as tenants or sharecroppers on cropland owned by the United States Government and who complied with the terms and conditions of the 1938 and 1939 agricultural conservation programs formulated pursuant to sections 7 to 17, inclusive, of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, shall be entitled to apply for and receive payments, or to retain payments heretofore made, for their participation in said program to the same extent as other producers.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, this amendment is subject to a point of order. Because it is subject to a point of order I gave notice a few days ago that it would be offered. I did not offer it in the Appropriations Committee, because I realized it was subject to a point of order.

The purpose of the amendment is to correct a situation which arose out of the leasing of public lands to individuals who are participating in the agricultural program. Individual farmers leased lands from the Forest Service particularly, and believing that they had a right to participate in the benefits of the agricultural program curtailed their acreage, and the Department, believing that they had the right to participate, made benefit payments to them in 1938. In 1939 the same situation existed, and these farmers, encouraged by the local agents to believe that they were entitled to the benefits, participated in the program.

During the year, sometime in the fall, some attorney in the Solicitor's office in the Department of Agriculture concluded that the proper interpretation of the language of the act would preclude the payment of benefits to these farmers who had in 1938 received the benefits, and in 1939 had participated in the program, but had not yet been paid. After considerable discussion between the lawyers—because it was contended that the farmers were entitled to the benefits, and that was my own interpretation of the language when it was called to my attention—the attorney in the Solicitor's office took the position that whereas the original Agricultural Adjustment Act specifically authorized the payment, in the amended or second Agricultural Adjustment Act there was no specific reference to it, and he therefore construed the language which applied to all farmers, to eliminate from the payment of benefits the farmers who had leased lands from the Forest Bureau, because the second act did not contain the specific language contained in the first act.

Consequently the Department suggested the language contained in this amendment. If it is not adopted, then the Department under the interpretation of the law by the Solicitor's office would have to collect the money from the farmers who had received these benefits under the 1938 act. It would mean that they would have to put a stop order against the payment of any funds to these farmers, even if they moved to private lands.

The decision of the Department means that during this year those farmers will not receive benefits. The amendment does not seek to correct that failure of the law to provide for benefits. It seeks only to provide for the payment to those farmers who in 1938 and in 1939 in good faith cooperated and actually were paid.

Mr. RUSSELL. As I understand, the purpose of the amendment is only to correct a situation which would result in an injustice to the farmer by reason of something which he had no knowledge of at the time he leased the land; but it does not extend to the present year, 1940.

Mr. BYRNES. No; it does not. Not only did the farmer have no knowledge of it but the Department of Agriculture had no knowledge of it, and the representatives of the Department had induced the farmer to participate in the program, and actually paid him the money. The purpose of the amendment is to avoid the bringing of suits against the farmers and trying to collect the money in some way out of future benefits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. No; Mr. President, the question is on suspending the rule, because the Senator from Georgia will have to make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; Mr. President, I shall have to make a point of order, because the Senator has moved to suspend the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina to suspend the rule. A two-thirds majority is necessary for a suspension of the rule. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative, the rule is suspended.

The question now reverts to agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I stated a few moments ago, when the R. E. A. amendment was under consideration, that I had talked to Mr. Slattery, the director of that organization, and that he was going to furnish some additional figures. He told me over the telephone that there are 689 borrowers. That 504 of those borrowers have paid interest regularly, and that the amount of that interest on the first day of January 1940 was $2,382,889, which has been paid out of earnings.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, how many borrowers were there?

Mr. McKELLAR. There were 689 borrowers. Five hundred and four had paid their interest in full, and some ahead of time, leaving 185 that had not paid. But it must be remembered that they all had 3 years in which to begin the payment of interest. So, as Director Slattery said, a remarkable record of returns has been made up to date, and he considers these loans of the very finest quality.

Mr. AUSTIN and Mr. CONNALLY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that he promised to recognize the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the Chair put me on the list of those to whom he has made promises of recognition?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Texas that his name already is on that list. [Laughter.]

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am about to offer an amendment which involves a mere change of language, and I believe constitutes the remedy for an oversight in reporting the bill. This amendment relates to the hurricane fire hazard reduction on White Mountain National Forest in New Hampshire.

The First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1939, Public, No. 7, Seventy-sixth Congress, appropriated $500,000 for fire-hazard reduction work and timber salvage on the White Mountain National Forest, N. H., made necessary by the September 1938 hurricane. This money is being expended for additional fireguards, fire-fighting equipment, lookout towers and telephone lines, training fire fighters, and to defray the cost of administering sales of salvaged timber.

If the present hazard-reduction and timber-salvage programs are carried out between now and June 30 there will be no balance on that date. It is essential, however, that the extra effort to protect this public property of more than 700,000 acres should be continued into the next fiscal year. This can be accomplished by a change of language in the bill. This change would not require the appropriation of new money but would authorize a continuation of funds already appropriated. I would accomplish this by the amendment which I now offer and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 40, line 19, it is proposed to strike out the period and insert a colon and add the following:

Provided further, That there is hereby reappropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, for the same purpose as originally appropriated any balance of the appropriation "National Forest Protection and Management" contained in the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1939 (Public, No. 7, 76th Cong.), which remains unobligated on June 30, 1940.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, as was stated by the Senator from Vermont, this amendment does not increase the total of the bill. It is merely an appropriation of funds heretofore made available to deal with the condition in the New England States which grew out of the hurricane there a couple of years ago. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the committee amendment on page 33, line 5, was agreed to be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, this item of $1,350,000 recommended by the committee is for the Bureau of Plant Industry. Its operations include a plant in southern California and another plant in Florida for the study of the development, growth, handling, and so forth, of citrus fruits. Those States have that service now. I have conferred with officials of the Department of Agriculture, who say that with $10,000 additional they can give the service to the Rio Grande Valley in Texas.

I wish to suggest that the extreme weather conditions in that area during the last winter brought on quite distressing conditions there. The trees froze and a great deal of the fruit froze. I hope very much that the Senate will authorize this additional $10,000 for solving the citrus problems in the Rio Grande Valley.

Mr. President, it is one of the great citrus areas of the country. It produces this wonderful pink grapefruit that so many Senators get when they go to free banquets around Washington. [Laughter.]

I hope the Senator from Georgia will at least let this amendment go to conference. If we appropriate money for southern California for this purpose and appropriate money for Florida for the same purpose, I think it only fair that we give some consideration to the Rio Grande Valley.

I offer an amendment to the committee amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 33, line 5, in the committee amendment, it is proposed to strike out "$1,350,000" and insert "$1,360,000."

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I always dislike to disagree with my friend the Senator from Texas. I wish it were possible for me to accept the amendment. I see that we are starting a real economy drive when we object to an item of $10,000 after Senate amendments have been agreed to which involve millions of dollars.

Mr. President, I do not think this amendment can be justified, and I dislike to set a precedent for reopening the bill and all these items to amendment.

This is one of the few items, with the exception of the larger amendments which were adopted by a record vote, with respect to which the Committee on Appropriations went above the Budget estimates. In connection with this item, providing for experimental work all over the United States, the committee went $100,000 above the Budget estimate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. There is no question about what the Senator says. I know that the committee went $100,000 above the House figures, but the Chief of the Bureau told me over the telephone today that this item was in accordance with the Bureau estimate. I do not question what the Senator says, but I wish the Senator to know that I am acting in good faith.

Mr. RUSSELL. I happen to recall this item, because our subcommittee is very fortunate in having as a member an expert on matters pertaining to fruits in the person of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], who is a practical farmer and is familiar with all phases of fruit production.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield to me?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Did the Bureau of the Budget ask for parity payments?

Mr. RUSSELL. No; the Bureau of the Budget did not.

Mr. CONNALLY. I voted with the Senator to exceed the Budget estimates with respect to parity payments. There was nothing sacred about the Budget estimates in that respect.

Mr. RUSSELL. As I was saying, this appropriation is not only above the Budget estimate, but it is above the appropriation for the current year. It is one of the two or three small increases which were allowed by the committee above the appropriation for the current year. If this work is important, and the Senator from Texas insists on it, the Bureau has plenty of money in the bill to do the work in Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Bureau says it has not.

Mr. RUSSELL. O Mr. President, there is not a bureau in Washington which has ever told a Senator as capable of obtaining appropriations as the Senator from Texas that it has enough money.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas does not seem to be very successful in obtaining appropriations when the Senator in charge of the bill turns him down.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, it is not a very pleasant duty. Every Member of the Senate has specific items in which he is interested; and if those who look upon me as being very prodigal in the appropriation of public funds were to talk with some Members of the Senate who are interested in specific items, they would be told that I am very penurious and close. We try to be reasonable about these things. The committee has no detailed information on the subject. We know that this work is now being done in citrus experimental laboratories. If the Senator from Texas will defer his request until the next fiscal year, I do not think the citrus industry in Texas will be ruined.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is very nearly ruined now.

Mr. RUSSELL. Next year we can go into the merits of the question. I cannot accept the amendment at this time, and I hope the Senate will defeat it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. [Putting the question.] In the opinion of the Chair, the "noes" have it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask for a division.

On a division, the "ayes" were 11; the "nces" 30; so the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I call up an amendment which lies on the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 80, line 5, of the subcommittee print, after the words "Agricultural Adjustment Administration", and before the colon, it is proposed to insert the following:

> Except that, within the total of limitations imposed by section 392 (b) of said act for administrative expenses in the District of Columbia, regional offices, and in the several States, such limitations may be interchanged, in whole or in part, during the current fiscal year, between the District of Columbia regional offices and the several States.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Was the committee amendment which was reconsidered agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not know which amendment the Senator refers to.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am referring to the amendment cn page 33, which was reconsidered by unanimous consent at the request of the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the committee amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered is subject to a point of order. However, notice has been given. Notice was given on the day the bill was presented. In fact, the amendment was brought to the attention of the committee. It does not involve any additional expenditure.

This amendment does not increase the appropriation. It grows out of the change in administration of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation. The amendment has been requested by Mr. Perkins. In view of the development of the stamp plan it has become necessary to have a larger force in the District of Columbia than has been necessary heretofore, because the purchases are all made in Washington. The shipments are all arranged for from Washington, and all the work in connection with distribution, the freight items, the destination, and the division of all the commodities sent out to the different States under the stamp plan, is done in Washington. The present law provides for a 3-percent expenditure for administration, but allocates only 1 percent to the District of Columbia, and 2 percent to the field.

My amendment simply permits, for the next fiscal year only, an interchange without increasing the amount. If more than 1 percent is needed in Washington, the Corporation will be authorized to use it without increasing the amount of the appropriation. Mr. Perkins states that it is important in the proper administration of the new program to have this flexibility and latitude. As I have indicated, the amendment is only for 1 fiscal year. The Senator in charge of the bill, Mr. RUSSELL, is familiar with the subject, and, as I understand, does not object to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I must make the point of order, so that the question will be on the motion to suspend the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has not heard such a motion.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the motion has been filed. I now make the motion to suspend the rule. The motion has been on file for 10 days.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] to suspend the rule. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. RUSSELL. What is the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alabama to suspend the rule.

Mr. RUSSELL. Is the question on suspension of the rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to suspend the rule.

Those favoring suspension of the rule will please rise and remain standing until counted. [A pause.]

Those opposed will please rise and remain standing until counted. [A pause.] In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of the Senators present have voted in favor of a suspension of the rule; and the rule is suspended.

The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, my colleague the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], who is ill, has asked me to offer an amendment in his behalf, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] on behalf of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 64, line 14, after the numerals "$1,130,000", it is proposed to insert a comma and the following:

Of which $5,000 shall be available for the maintenance of a market news service at New Orleans, La.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, as I have said, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] is detained at his home on account of illness. He has asked me to offer this amendment. It does not increase the total appropriation. It merely provides for a continuation of the market news service which is now in operation at New Orleans. I understand that the Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. RUSSELL] does not object to the amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] was very much concerned about the closing of the market news service at New Orleans and discussed the matter before he was taken from the Senate by illness. The amendment does not increase the total amount of the appropriation, and I have no objection to taking it to conference to see what can be done with it, inasmuch as it does not increase the total appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I send to the desk two amendments, which I ask to have stated at this time for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 62, line 13, it is proposed to strike out "$725,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$825,000"; and on page 64, line 14, it is proposed to strike out "$1,130,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,205,000."

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, when I discussed the relative merits of these two amendments during the early period of the debate on the bill I emphasized the fact that both amendments are very necessary as a result of the increased volume of production of fruits and vegetables.

They are also necessary because of the added volume of fruits and vegetables marketed by truck. One of the amendments relates to the appropriation for marketing news service affecting the truck shipments of fruits and vegetables. The other amendment relates to the crop estimates of fruits and vegetables.

Mr. President, the increase in volume of fruits and vegetables in every State in the United States in the past 20 years makes it essential that these two services be expanded. In the past 20 years the supply of fruits in the United States has increased from 196 pounds per capita to 226 pounds per capita, while the vegetable production has increased twofold. More marketing information is therefore necessary, and better and more complete crop estimates are essential to agricultural prosperity; and, above all, more frequent news services are required.

As I stated during the debates yesterday, for a period last summer and fall the market reporters for the New York market agreed to put in extra time in order to issue a 6 a. m. market report on fruits and vegetables. The men reached the market about 4 o'clock in the morning, and released their report at 6 o'clock in the morning. Radio stations willingly cooperated with the program, with the result that farmers sitting down to their breakfasts had a report on the New York market as it had developed up to within a few minutes before they received it. It is safe to say that this proved to be one of the most popular services we have had in a long time.

For several months the reporters on the New York market put in 10 or 12 hours a day just to try out the plan, and, of course, a great deal of credit is due to them. It is obviously unfair to request them to continue this service on such a schedule, and therefore an added appropriation in each of these items is necessary.

At a national conference of fruit and vegetable producers called by the American Farm Bureau Federation in New Orleans on December 12, 1938, this subject was very thoroughly gone into. A committee was appointed to investigate the needs and the services that were rendered at that time; and the report of that committee, made to the directors of the American Farm Bureau Federation, called for additional appropriations for the crop-reporting service and for the market-news service, as well as for the development of a reporting system for truck shipments and arrivals, and also for studies of grades best adapted to meet consumer demand.

The report says, in part:

Regarding the resolution of the American Farm Bureau Federation recommending an increase of $150,000 in the funds of the Department of Agriculture for crop-reporting service, we find upon inquiry of the Department that estimates are made of the acreage, yield, production, and farm price of principal commercial fruit and truck crops. Criticisms have been received by the federation from time to time that some of the reports issued by the Department are not in enough detail, issued often enough, or promptly enough to be of most use. For example, the estimates of truck crops do not include the so-called market garden areas adjacent to large cities which have a bearing upon market supplies, nor do the reports provide prompt information on the respective volume of shipments from competing areas during the shipping season. Estimates of production have for the most part been issued monthly. With the necessity for rapid marketing of these highly perishable crops a more frequent service in this respect is needed. A weekly report covering important areas of production would help the producer materially to secure fairer prices for his crop. The Department has been unable to make a separate estimate of the acreage and production of vegetables used for quick freezing, which is rapidly expanding. More information is needed on farm and local stocks of such products as potatoes, onions, and cabbage. The reports now issued by the Department are limited to these three crops and are issued only once a year. More frequent and more prompt reports are needed.

* * * * * * *

The federation endorsed a resolution to request $250,000 to expand the market news service on fruits and vegetables of the Department of Agriculture, including more adequate reports on the movement of fruits and vegetables by motor truck. For years the Department has had the cooperation of the railroads in reporting the number of carloads shipped each day and the number arriving in some of the principal markets. These figures, while still valuable, no longer adequately represent the day-to-day market situation because of the increasing quantities being shipped by motor truck. The lack of adequate reports of market supplies moving by motor truck is the dark spot in the daily market reports issued by the Department. Funds should be provided to obtain reports of arrivals by motor truck in many more markets, and to develop ways and means of reporting shipments from important producing districts.

The market news service conducted by the Department is the only comprehensive service farmers have to keep them advised of day-to-day changes in the markets. Its value to farmers and distributors has been firmly established. Instead of expanding to include more detailed information on prices paid for varieties, sizes, and containers, the service has actually been reduced in recent years. The Department once had offices in such important markets as Buffalo, Des Moines, New Orleans, Memphis, and Omaha, which afford outlets for producers all over the country. Such markets as Indianapolis, Louisville, and Columbus, Ohio, are not equipped with market reporters. Important producing sections in Texas, Florida, Michigan, Maine, and other States have expressed the need for more service. The resolution endorsed by the federation would provide for the reestablishment of the service at some of the important markets and provide much more complete market information for important shipping areas.

Mr. President, I have actually cut these items in two, and I have taken only two of the four items recommended by the American Farm Bureau Federation. In view of the vast increase in fruit and vegetable production in this country, in view of the impoverished condition—growing progressively worse each year—of the fruit and vegetable producers, and because of this new element in the delivery and transportation of fruits and vegetables—namely, the trucking industry—and also because of the very large areas adjacent to industrial centers which are devoted to the production of fruits and vegetables not now receiving the attention of the Department, I really believe that the two modest items included in the amendments I have sent to the desk should be included in the bill. One of them calls for an appropriation of $75,000, the other for an appropriation of $100,000. Both are recommended by the farmers of the country, and both I know are essentially necessary to the orderly marketing of these two very important crops.

Every one of the 48 States that make up the Union is now engaged in some degree in the production of fruits and vegetables, and they are all vitally interested in the expansion of these two services. A few years ago these services were curtailed in a number of important cities in the Nation, including my own home city. It occurs to me that instead of curtailing these services, as a result of the increased production of these two commodities we ought to be expanding the services.

I hope the two amendments I have sent to the desk will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the reconsideration of the vote by which the committee amendment on page 62, line 13, was adopted?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I regret to feel constrained to object to the request. The amendments proposed by the Senator from New York come in the category of very desirable services in which many persons are interested, but which I do not feel that I should accept.

The appropriation proposed in the amendments offered by the Senator from New York did not have any Budget estimate; and while the committee did hear some witnesses who testified to the importance of increasing these items, the committee did not feel justified in presenting the increases to the Senate in view of the substantial increases made in other items.

As to the second amendment proposed by the Senator from New York, on page 64, line 14, I feel that that amendment possesses more merit than does the one on page 62. About the first of this year the Interstate Commerce Commission allowed a 50-percent increase in the telegraph tolls paid by the Government to the great telegraph companies. Practically all this item of the Market News Service, or a great deal of it, is used for telegraph charges to transmit the information from one section of the country to the other. This increase of 50 percent has the effect of automatically making available for the coming fiscal year $22,000 less than the Market News Service had available this year. I should be willing to accept the amendment if the Senator from New York saw fit to reduce the amount on page 64 from $100,000 to $25,000. Otherwise, I hope the Senate will reject the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard to the reconsideration of the amendment on page 62. The Chair will advise the Senator from New York that he may move to reconsider if he so desires.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I have no desire to move to reconsider, and when I began to discuss the agricultural appropriation bill shortly after it was reported I explained that I thought that the chairman of the subcommittee had treated the subject generally very liberally. I stated that there were just one or two amendments about which I differed with the judgment of the committee, but, as a whole, I felt that we were all obligated to the chairman of the subcommittee and to the members of the subcommittee for the very liberal and the very careful consideration they gave to the entire subject. I realize that a reconsideration would not be possible under such conditions, and I shall be very glad to accept the suggestion made by the chairman of the subcommittee for reconsideration of the vote by which the second amendment was agreed to, and have the amount increased according to the figures which he has just explained. I therefore modify my amendment accordingly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the committee amendment, on page 64, line 14, was agreed to is reconsidered, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York to increase the figure from $1,130,000 to $1,155,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, which I ask to have stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 31, line 12, it is proposed to strike out "$400,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$408,345."

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, this particular item is one which represents a decrease from the 1940 appropriation by $24,385. Even if my amendment should be accepted, so that it would go to conference, it would still leave this item $16,040 less than was available in the 1940 law.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, as I understand the amendment, it merely restores part of a reduction made by the Bureau of the Budget in the item, and if that reduction is enforced it will be necessary to discontinue important experimental work which is now under way in New Mexico, Arizona, and Arkansas.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is correct.

Mr. RUSSELL. As a small amount of money is involved, and it represents the restoration of a part of the current appropriation, I shall urge no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I present an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 88, line 16, after the colon, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That any part of this appropriation allocated for the production or procurement of nursery stock by any Federal agency, or funds appropriated to any Federal agency for allocation to cooperating States for the production or procurement of nursery stock, shall remain available for expenditure for not more than 3 fiscal years.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the Senate has already agreed to a committee amendment to this same effect as applied to nurseries operated by the Soil Conservation Service, and inasmuch as that provision has been accepted, it seems to me it should also apply to the cooperative farm forestry nursery, and I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. GURNEY. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

WEATHER BUREAU OFFICE AT BOSTON

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, my colleague, the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and myself have received requests from one of the Massachusetts Representatives, Mr. MCCORMACK, asking us to support an amendment to the bill providing for an appropriation of $25,000 for a weather-forcasting station in Boston. The telegram is as follows:

BOSTON, MASS., March 21, 1940.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Senate Office:

The establishment of a regional weather bureau office in Boston is of great importance. Interest here is intense. Reports for New England have been very uncertain bringing about disturbed results. Boston once had such an office. Several exist now in different parts of country. Secretary Wallace informed me recently "Need for specialized forecast in New England area is recognized but regret lack of funds and shortage of expert forecast personnel in this country make it impossible to establish separate district for New England at present." Amount $25,000. We will never develop expert forecasts unless way is paved. This appropriation will pave way and give New England what is badly needed. Respectfully urge you try to add $25,000 on appropriation bill now in Senate so that this item will be in conference, in which event I will do all I can to convince House conferees to accept.

JOHN W. MCCORMACK,
Member of Congress.

Both my colleague and myself feel that we cannot ignore the request regardless of the parliamentary situation, and that it is our duty to offer the amendment as requested. In consultation with the Parliamentarian I am informed that in his opinion a point of order could be raised against the amendment.

I know that the Senator from Georgia has stated repeatedly on the floor that his instruction from the committee is that he must raise points of order against any and all amendments in the way of legislation. For the RECORD I should like to have a statement from the Senator, as to what his attitude would be if such an amendment were proposed.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I have no option in the matter. However unpleasant it might be, I have not only an instruction from the committee, but I am compelled under rule XVI of the Senate to interpose a point of order if the Senator from Massachusetts offers the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in order that the Representative sending the telegram may know that my colleague and I have responded to his request, I ask that the statement of the Parliamentarian be printed in the RECORD, the telegram already having been read by me. In due course, legislation authorizing this Weather Bureau office will be sought, so that later an appropriation may be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OPINION BY CHARLES L. WATKINS, PARLIAMENTARIAN OF THE SENATE

An amendment to the Agricultural Department appropriation bill appropriating $25,000, or any other sum, for the establishment of a regional Weather Bureau office in Boston, would not be in order under rule XVI, paragraph 1, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, for the reason that:

(1) There is no specific law authorizing the establishment of such an office;

(2) It has not been reported by a standing committee of the Senate; and

(3) It has not been estimated for by the Bureau of the Budget.

In other words, the amendment would not fall within any of the classes which make amendments offered by a Senator from the floor in order, and a point of order would accordingly lie against the amendment if proposed.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to associate myself with the statement my colleague has made. I believe the proposal of the Representative would be a step in the right direction, and I would be happy to see the step taken at the proper time. I understand completely the procedure which makes favorable action on a matter which has not been approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, or by the House of Representatives, extremely problematical. But I did want the RECORD to show my interest.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, at the appropriate place, under the heading "Bureau of Agricultural Chemistry and Engineering," I offer an amendment to add the following:

For Winterhaven, Fla., laboratory, $13,200.

I will make a brief statement, and if the Senator in charge of the bill wants to have the amendment go over until tomorrow, I shall be glad to have it go over.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not think it would be in accordance with the usual legislative custom to place in the bill the purpose for which the amendment would be offered. There is an item on page 50 of the bill which authorizes the work of this laboratory, and the general item of appropriation is found on line 9, page 50.

The Senator from Florida, of course, is advised that the Bureau of the Budget sends in the estimates for this purpose, which are set up in the Budget. The committee did not allow all the Budget estimates on this item, but inasmuch as there is a Budget estimate I have no objection to taking the matter to conference and seeing what can be worked out for it. But I think the proper form of the amendment would be to increase the amount in line 19, page 48, by $13,200 rather than saying anything about Winterhaven Laboratory.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator very much for his suggestion.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment in the form in which it is offered and reoffer the amendment, on page 48, line 19, to strike out "$379,606" and to insert "$392,806."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has that right.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 80, line 4, before the period, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Provided further, That no payment under the Sugar Act of 1937 with respect to the 1940 crop shall be withheld from any producer in the mainland cane-sugar area, because of the marketing (or processing) of sugarcane in excess of the proportionate share for the farm, if the acreage of sugarcane grown on the farm and marketed (or processed) for sugar in the crop year 1940 is not in excess of the acreage of sugarcane for sugar planted prior to January 1, 1940: Provided, however, That payments shall be made only with respect to the proportionate share acreage established for the farm under the provisions of such act, and the following deductions shall be made from such payments on account of the excess of the acreage of sugarcane grown on the farm and marketed (or processed) for sugar in the crop year 1940 over the proportionate share for the farm. For so much of such excess as does not exceed 25 acres, no deduction; for so much of such excess as exceeds 25 acres but does not exceed 125 acres, a deduction of $5 per acre; for so much of such excess as exceeds 125 acres but does not exceed 625 acres, a reduction of $10 per acre; for so much of such excess as exceed 625 acres but does not exceed 1,125 acres, a deduction of $15 per acre; for so much of excess as exceeds 1,125 acres, a deduction of $20 per acre.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, under the rule that has been applied here so often, I must make a point of order against that amendment as a legislative provision on an appropriation bill.

Mr. ELLENDER. I anticipated that the Senator from Georgia would make a point of order, because when I introduced the amendment I felt that it was subject to a point of order. In anticipation of the point of order being made, I gave notice on March 13 that I would move to suspend the rule so as to permit me to offer this amendment, and I now move to suspend the rule so that this amendment may be considered.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish to make the inquiry as to whether or not it is proposed to take up this matter today, as there will be considerable discussion concerning it.

Mr. ELLENDER. I defer to the majority leader.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I was going to suggest that, inasmuch as this matter involves some discussion, we cannot dispose of it today, and that it go over as the pending amendment to the bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am very anxious to conclude consideration of the bill today, but it seems it is impossible to do so. Therefore I have no objection to the majority leader moving a recess at this time.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Since the consideration of the pending bill will go over until tomorrow, is it possible that a unanimous agreement be entered into by which a time shall be fixed for a vote on the pending bill? I do not wish to preclude anyone from reasonable discussion of the bill. I was very hopeful that we could take up consideration of the reciprocal trade agreements bill sometime tomorrow. Is it the purpose to have the session begin at 11 o'clock tomorrow?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Could we not agree that at a certain time tomorrow a vote shall be taken on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana and his amendment, and on the bill itself?

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I have no objection to the proposal made by the Senator from Mississippi. I believe I can make the proper presentation to the Senate of my amendment within 30 or 35 minutes or, at the most, 40 minutes.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I simply wanted to advise the Senator from Mississippi that if the rule is suspended and the amendment is submitted, there will be further amendments offered to the amendment which will involve a very extended discussion of the whole sugar situation.

Mr. HARRISON. So I presume there is no hope of obtaining a unanimous agreement with respect to a vote.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] was called away from the floor this afternoon and desired that notice be given that he proposes to offer an amendment to the pending bill. I will read the body of the amendment, and then send it to the desk for consideration tomorrow. The Senator from Pennsylvania proposes on page 42, after line 23, to insert the following:

For a survey of forest influences in the Middle Atlantic States, to be used by the Allegheny Research Station, Department of Agriculture, $35,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported favorably the nomination of Miss Mary S. Anderson, of Illinois, to be Administrator of the National Youth Administration for Illinois.

He also, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROWN in the chair). If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask that the first nomination on the Executive Calendar, that of Dorothy B. Keeling, to be postmaster at Camp Taylor, Ky., be passed over, and that the remaining nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters on the calendar, with the exception of the one requested to be passed over, are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, March 22, 1940, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, MARCH 21, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our heavenly Father, we would tarry at the altar of prayer in the serenity of Christian faith and with imperishable hope. As the night of Calvary will soon wear its robe of darkness, pierce it with a star which gives us visions of earth's darkness and heaven's light being dissolved into the radiance of eternity. Blessed Lord, the world has grown weary of its long, long tramp down the reaches of time. O let humanity forget its forced marches, its smiting aches, and gnawing despairs by remembering Him who opened the House of God for the parliament of man. We pray Thee to take us into the lonely garden of spiritual aspiration, to those Gethsemanes where the world will be behind us; there, beyond the city wall, reveal to us the imponderable things which enrich the soul and there inspire us to live lives that will last forever. O bring to our minds the agony of the cross, unveil it before our waiting eyes; may we feel our fragile might and our gross unworthiness. O come like a holy benediction, walking through the quiet chapels of our souls; hear our prayer amid the falling shadows and give us peace. We pray in His holy name whose pardon we seek and whose guidance we beseech. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 4126) entitled "An act for the relief of Warren Zimmerman," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and appoints Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. SCHWARTZ, and Mr. CAPPER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 3481) entitled "An act for the relief of C. Z. Bush and W. D. Kennedy," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and appoints Mr. BROWN, Mr. SCHWARTZ, and Mr. CAPPER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

ELMA S. MOULTON

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 430

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Elma S. Moulton, widow of Hosea B. Moulton, late an employee of the House, an amount equal to 6 months' salary compensation, and an additional amount, not to exceed $250, to defray funeral expenses of the said Hosea B. Moulton.

The resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. CRAVENS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be granted leave of absence for 2 days on account of official business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein certain tables and other excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein the address of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] at the Fifth North American Wildlife Conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I asked for this time in order to say that the Securities and Exchange Commission, as now functioning, is rapidly falling to the low level of the National Labor Relations Board, and unless the Commission quickly improves its behavior it is headed for the same kind of washout that awaits the Board. The high reputation set by the Commission under the chairmanship of Joe Kennedy will not save it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. HORTON] may be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD on two subjects and include in each extension articles from the press.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day, and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

TRUCE OF GOD

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANLEY. In view of the protestations emanating from belligerent countries concerning their reverence for religion and their dedication to lofty religious ideals, they might take a passage from history and emulate the Truce of God of the Middle Ages.

The original Truce of God or Truega Die, to give its Latin name, was one of the outstanding contributions of the church to civil life and practices. It was a successful attempt of the Christian Church to mitigate the practices of war and war's horrors.

It started with the Synod Elne in 1027 when that body decreed that warfare was illegal and suspended from noon on Saturday until prime on Monday . It was later extended from Wednesday evening to Monday morning every week, and in addition it is said to have lasted during the season of Lent and Advent, the three great feasts and vigils of the Blessed Virgin, those of the Twelve Apostles and other saints.

It reached its highest development in the twelfth century, when it was said to have left little but one-fourth of the year for fighting. It died out, however, when the kings succeeded nobles and the power passed from the church supported by the nobles to the kings. It was now the king's peace and not the church's.

It would be well, however, for all belligerents to recognize its appropriateness at this time of the year and present another chance for a genuine suspension on Easter Sunday.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

There was no objection.

[Mr. RANKIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and following the legislative program of the day and special orders heretofore entered, if any, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, the other day our distinguished colleague the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] pointed out that the appropriation bill that would soon be coming up for consideration would reduce appropriations for the Civilian Conservation Corps, resulting in discontinuance of 273 camps. This bill is coming up for consideration and debate on the floor of the House today. There has been no more constructive or valuable work done in behalf of the unemployed youth of this country than that carried on by the Civilian Conservation Corps. No reductions should be made in the appropriation for that activity at this time.

Mr. Speaker, I have before me a clipping from one of my local newspapers, the Ely Miner, which came last week, that points out the tremendous value of the work C. C. C. Camp No. 711 is doing in that vicinity. I dare say the same remarks would apply to the C. C. C. camps in other sections of the country. These 273 camps should not be abandoned. Funds should be appropriated for them. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to revise and extend my remarks and include therein this comment from the Ely Miner.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

[From the Ely (Minn.) Miner]

ELY MAY LOSE ONLY CONSERVATIVE CAMP SITUATED IN THIS AREA—DECREASE IN FEDERAL BUDGET BY CONGRESS TO DISBAND C. C. C. CAMP 711—CIVIC CLUB PROTESTS—ELYITES URGE RETENTION OF CAMP TO COMPLETE WORK PROGRAM IN FOREST

The Ely territory may lose its only Civilian Conservation Corps camp, located at Portage River, because of a proposed cut in the appropriation for the C. C. C. which is expected to come up for consideration by Congress some time next month.

The decrease in the Budget, if it goes through, will mean that the Superior National Forest will be allotted six camps, instead of the present eight. Camp 711, at Portage River, stationed there since the corps was inaugurated in 1933, may be disbanded.

Secretary Ray Hoefler, of the Ely Commercial Club, has dispatched communications to Representative WILLIAM A. PITTENGER, of the Eighth Congressional District, and Senators ERNEST LUNDEEN and HENRIK SHIPSTEAD, urging them to "do everything in your power to secure the appropriation necessary to assist the Forest Service in carrying on its program."

Secretary Hoefler pointed out that a vast program of dam building and repairing throughout this part of the forest could be carried on.

Projects within a 15-mile radius of the Portage River camp have nearly been completed. It is understood that the Forest Service has the camp scheduled to move November 1 to Tofte Lake, on the Fernberg Trail.

What operations in this territory would include have not been definitely decided, but it is believed that they might comprise rebuilding the Fall Lake Dam and possibly work on a new dam for Prairie Portage.

A major camp site might be constructed on Lake One, at the end of the Fernberg Road, for use by the many visitors to the area who at the present time have no public facilities available. It is pointed out that from 15 to 20 cars stop here daily and that the long chain of fishing waters running up through Lakes One, Two, Three, Four, and into Lake Insula offer an ideal canoe route. Improvement of this area, including establishment of canoe camp sites, would probably be included in a work program for the Tofte Lake C. C. C. camp. Tree planting and timber-stand improvement work would also be included, and unquestionably a program which would last for from 5 to 8 years could be laid out.

Camp-site development has been one of the major accomplishments of the Portage River enrollees. They include the large grounds at Fenske, Sioux, and Meander, besides numerous small sites on boundary lakes for canoe parties. Lake surveys, timber-stand improvement, removal of fire hazards, planting, and other activities have been conducted.

The United States Forest Service's part in the operation of the camps is to lay out and supervise a work program.

A proposed $65,000,000 cut in the appropriation for the C. C. C. is expected to become a major issue confronting Congress within the next few weeks. It will limit the number of camps in the United States to 300, which will mean that the Superior National Forest will lose two. The Portage River camp may go because its program has nearly been completed.

Six camps allotted to an area embracing three and three-quarters million acres is not enough, it is pointed out.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I notice in the Appendix of the RECORD, page 1546, a letter from our colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS] that is worth reading. It is a letter to one of his constituents in regard to what defense means. I hope the gentleman will give us a real speech on this subject. I am getting letters constantly asking me to vote against all appropriations except those for defense. I should like to know what "defense" means. In the letter of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, which will be found on page 1546 of the Appendix of the RECORD, the gentleman outlines in brief what he means by "defense." I ask you to read the letter. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will give us a speech on that subject in the near future.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Does not the gentleman believe that appropriations for the National Youth Administration and the Civilian Conservation Corps are a mighty good, practical brand of national defense?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes; especially the Civilian Conservation Corps.

[Here the gavel fell.]

LABOR-FEDERAL SECURITY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941

Mr. TARVER, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 9007) making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 1822), which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ENGEL reserved all points of order against the bill.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9007) making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes; and pending action on that motion, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that general debate shall be confined to the bill and that general debate may proceed throughout the day, the apportionment of time to be equally divided between the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] and me.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to inquire of the gentleman why we are not to have general debate. Why does the gentleman confine the debate to one subject? There are a good many Members who have been planning to speak today on matters outside of the bill. Of course, the gentleman from Georgia understands the bill has just been introduced in the House and very few Members have had an opportunity to examine it, therefore they would not be able to talk intelligently on the recommendations of the committee.

Mr. TARVER. May I say to the gentleman that our subcommittee unanimously reached the conclusion that with a bill involving $954,000,000, upon which so many Members of the House desire to speak, especially with reference to certain controversial items involving the Civilian Conservation Corps, the National Youth Administration, and the Venereal Control Division of the Public Health Service, we ought to endeavor to give each one of those Members an opportunity to be heard, while if the usual rule permitting general debate on any subject, whether related to the bill or not, were observed, the result would necessarily be that a great many Members who want to talk about matters included in the bill would be precluded from such discussion.

I may say further to the gentleman that the subcommittee unanimously took action requesting the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] and myself to make this request of the House, and also requested that we not yield time to any Member of the House who does not desire to use such time for the purpose of discussing the bill. The only purpose of the request is to insure adequate opportunity to the membership of the House to express themselves on this bill and not have time uselessly consumed by those who desire to make speeches on subject matters not related to the bill and, oftentimes, for political purposes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I do not at all agree with the statement of the gentleman. I think a good many of the speeches made in general debate are very helpful and effective, so far as the policy of the Government is concerned. It has been the rule to have general debate and I think the policy should be continued. I am not going to give the gentleman permission to confine the debate entirely to the bill and, therefore, I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to proceed for just one moment to say——

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I reserve my objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TARVER. That the gentleman's objection will not have the result he anticipates in view of the fact that neither the gentleman from Michigan nor I will yield time to any Member unless he assures us that he proposes to use such time in a discussion of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, this is most unsatisfactory.

Mr. TARVER. I appreciate the gentleman's position, but nevertheless the committee has taken this action.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I object to the request, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TARVER. I submit, Mr. Speaker, another request. I submit only the portion of the request that general debate shall continue throughout the day, the time to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] and me.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire for my own information, and I believe for the information of other Members of the House, as to when it is proposed to bring this on for a record vote, if any. I assume that general debate will run through today and then we will go over until Monday and Tuesday of the following week.

Mr. TARVER. I have been informed by the leadership that it is proposed to adjourn until Monday, out of deference to Members of the House who desire to be absent from Washington during Good Friday and over the week-end. As to the length of time general debate will continue, I want to assure the gentleman that there is no disposition on the part of the committee to limit general debate so long as there are Members of the House who desire to discuss the bill; but, of course, we cannot anticipate exactly how many Members may desire to make use of that privilege.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman think he is going to take this bill up on Monday?

Mr. TARVER. After the conclusion of the District of Columbia business, which it is our impression will not require the entire day, it is our purpose to continue with general debate, if possible.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Of course we could keep that committee going, if we saw fit, on Monday.

Mr. TARVER. Oh, I am sure that the gentleman would not care to indulge in any obstructive tactics.

Mr. DUNN. Did I understand the gentleman to say that we are not going to have general debate? I am in favor of general debate, and not debate that must be confined to the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 53]

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 306 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, including a message from Hon. William D. Leahy, Governor of Puerto Rico, to the Rivers and Harbors Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a short article on flood-control costs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OSMERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a series of three articles I wrote for the Bergen Evening Record and an editorial on the same subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter I sent this morning to the Secretary of State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial appearing March 17 in the Chicago Sunday Herald-American, and also an editorial appearing on the same date on the same subject in the Decatur (Ill.) Herald.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial from the New York Times.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KILBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the legislative business of the day and other special orders, I be granted 15 minutes to address the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LABOR-FEDERAL SECURITY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to restate the unanimous-consent request which I made a few moments ago. I may say that this request is submitted after a conference with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] and meets with his approval, and I trust it will not be objected to. I ask unanimous consent that general debate upon the bill may proceed throughout the day in the usual manner and under the usual rules, to be equally divided as to control between the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] and myself, and that in the further debate upon the bill after today general debate shall be confined to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. It seems to me that that is entirely reversing the proper order. The Committee on Appropriations, I believe, has about 35 or 40 members. They bring in a bill and take up a day or two with the members of the committee, who discuss it, or who talk about everything except the bill. Then when they get down to the rest of us they want to limit us to the bill. I wonder if the gentleman would not reverse his proposition and have general debate today and then have it limited after today.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That is exactly what the gentleman from Georgia asked.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, no.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, there is no purpose on the part of the committee to monopolize the time. On the contrary, every request that I have for time on the sheet before me today is from some gentleman who is not a member of the committee. I am sure that the members of the committee will be glad to defer their time for speaking until a later date. We are not trying to impose any undue restriction upon anyone, but I am simply endeavoring to assure that every Member of the House who wants to discuss the bill may have opportunity to do it. I certainly hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. RANKIN. I may say to the gentleman from Georgia that all debate under the 5-minute rule is confined to the bill. There are a great many questions that ought to be discussed on the floor of the House; there are a great many questions in which Members are interested that they would like to discuss.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. As I understand it, anyone can speak today under general debate on any subject.

Mr. RANKIN. On any subject.

Mr. TARVER. And I will say further that it will certainly be my purpose and I am certain it will be the purpose of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] to accommodate those Members who wish to discuss matters other than the subject matters of the bill today.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. About when is it intended to start reading the bill under the 5-minute rule, on Monday?

Mr. TARVER. I wish to say to the gentleman from New York that it is not possible to determine when we may begin reading the bill. It is the purpose of the subcommittee, insofar as the matter may be influenced by the subcommittee, to accord to all Members who desire it opportunity to discuss the subject matter of the bill and to be heard, which undoubtedly may, if we have our way about it, continue general debate beyond Monday.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. At least the bill will not be read until after the disposition of District of Columbia business on Monday?

Mr. TARVER. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9007) making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, with Mr. BUCK in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, we bring you the first Labor-Federal Security Agency appropriation bill. There is no other general appropriation bill which carries so many items of such powerful and direct appeal to the hearts and minds of Members of Congress and of so much concern to the hopes and aspirations of the American people. Here are included the interests of labor and the efforts of our Government to help labor in numerous ways; the program for American youth, as outlined not only under the Office of Education, with its grants for vocational education, but in the work of the Civilian Conservation Corps and the National Youth Administration. Here also are involved the anxious hopes of those seeking social security, of the aged and those who want to be able to look forward to old age with confidence; of the blind, the crippled, and dependent children; and of those seeking security in employment at a reasonable wage. Aside from these, there is a public-health program which touches the lives and happiness of all our people. There are differences of opinion as to how the numerous objectives of this far-flung program may be best achieved. There can be no reasonable difference of opinion as to the worthiness of these objectives.

It is but natural that your committee in endeavoring to make provision for activities such as these should have handled the subject matter sympathetically. It is but to be expected that you will not find here those drastic reductions below the Budget which have distinguished some of the appropriation bills at this session. One committee could cut out the price of one great battleship and save perhaps a hundred million dollars; but if this committee should undertake to save a hundred million dollars, it would have to destroy the National Youth Administration or cut the Civilian Conservation Corps in half. These huge expenditures for national defense may be necessary. I do not know. I do not think anyone else knows. I have felt obliged, as most of you have, to follow the advice of those who claim to know. But I do know the vital necessity which exists to protect the domestic interests of the American people, their happiness, their welfare, and I do not want us to make any mistake by failing to make adequate appropriations to assure these objectives insofar as they can be assured by governmental action.

On the other hand, there is the very reasonable fear that because of the worthiness of these programs, because of the way in which they necessarily tug at our heartstrings, we may permit ourselves to be swayed into action beyond the bounds of reason and common sense. We cannot as legislators forget that if we undertake, with howsoever worthy a purpose, to place upon our National Government financial burdens beyond its capacity to bear, that very fact will insure the eventual destruction of some of these activities that we strive to foster and which can only be maintained if we find a way to maintain them within the limits of our national financial ability. Those who would make huge increases in these appropriations, therefore, may be stimulating action which will finally destroy them, or some of them.

Your subcommittee has taken evidence for exactly 1 month on this bill. It has tried to arrive at reasonable conclusions as to what we can do safely, which is certainly not in all cases what could have been desired. You have, therefore, a bill written by men who are not only not antagonistic to the humanitarian activities for which it provides, but very sympathetic toward them; and I, therefore, feel justified in hoping that those who might desire to largely increase some items in this bill may be able to feel that such action would not only be unwise but might in the long run tend to defeat the very objectives which they have in mind.

Seldom has an appropriations subcommittee of this House discharged its duties with such absolute absence of partisan rancor or squabbling, such singleness of purpose to further the public interest, as in the case of the subcommittee preparing this bill. The result has been that we bring no partisan fight to the floor, so far as this subcommittee is concerned. The Republican Members will assume their share of responsibility for the presentation of the bill to the House, as will each member of the Democratic majority on the committee. Each of these gentlemen has agreed to assume particular responsibility for the presentation of the facts with regard to certain portions of the bill. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOUSTON] will have charge of the items relating to the Wage Hour Administration and the National Labor Relations

Board; the gentleman from California [Mr. SHEPPARD], the Social Security Board; the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HARE], the National Youth Administration; the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL], the Civilian Conservation Corps; and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], the Public Health Service. Thus, through concerted effort on the part of Members who have thoroughly studied the intricate details of this bill, we hope to present to the House facts which will justify every action proposed for their approval.

The committee report has been drafted in accordance with the instructions of the committee by our capable clerk, Mr. Jack McFall, whose untiring and efficient service has been of very great aid to the committee and justly entitles him to the commendation of all who are familiar with his work. We feel that the report drafted by him contains a wealth of interesting and authentic information which will be found valuable, not only by the membership of Congress but by the people of our country generally.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. May I say to the gentleman I would prefer to defer yielding until after I have concluded a somewhat general presentation of the outstanding features of the bill?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If that is more convenient to the gentleman, all right.

Mr. TARVER. I would prefer to take that course.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield? Has the gentleman reached the Wage-Hour Division?

Mr. TARVER. No. I just stated to the gentleman from New York I would prefer not to yield for inquiries until I have completed a somewhat general presentation of the outstanding features of the bill.

APPROPRIATIONS AND ESTIMATES

The bill, as I have stated, carries proposed appropriations approximating $954,000,000, which is approximately $12,000,000 beneath the Budget estimate. We have not been able to effect reductions below the estimates of the Budget proportionate to those which have been effected by other subcommittees by reason of the facts I have heretofore referred to with reference to the particular desirability of adequate appropriations for the organizations with which this undertakes to deal. It has been impossible, therefore, to effect any very considerable economies.

May I call your attention to the fact, in this connection, that a major portion of the funds carried in the bill are used for the making of grants to States for various specific purposes with which you are familiar, and in the appropriation of tax moneys which have been collected by the Government for the benefit of certain classes of beneficiaries of social legislation, which, of course, in good conscience must be made available to those beneficiaries. The amount of these items in the bill aggregates approximately $580,000,000 of the total of $954,000,000. With regard to these particular items the subcommittee had very little, if any, discretion.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

I wish to begin first a brief discussion of the appropriations which are outlined in the bill for the Department of Labor and I shall confine myself to the most outstanding changes which may have been made or proposed in the bill submitted as the result of the subcommittee's action. I may say at the outset that the appropriations for the Department of Labor proposed in the bill are approximately $3,311,000 more than the appropriation for that Department for the present fiscal year, although it is less than the Budget estimate by a sum in excess of a million dollars. The reason which brought about the reduction below the Budget estimates in the main is related to the estimate for the Wage and Hour administration, and I shall undertake to discuss the estimates for that agency in greater detail in a moment.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

I may point out that we have effected a saving of some $10,000 by the transfer from the Wage and Hour Division to the Central Personnel Office of the Labor Department of certain personnel activities which have been projected by the Budget for the personnel section of the Wage and Hour Division. It was the belief of the committee that these duties could be performed under this jurisdiction as efficiently and more satisfactorily than in the Wage and Hour Division, and that the effect of the transfer would permit a reduction in the amount of appropriation for the item of approximately $10,000, which we undertook to do.

There has been no other considerable reduction in the Budget estimates coming under the head of the Secretary's office, with the exception of the travel-expense item which is correlated to the deduction made in the estimate for the Wage and Hour Division, which, as I have said, I will undertake to discuss in a few moments.

DIVISION OF LABOR STANDARDS

There has been no substantial change in the estimate for the Division of Labor Standards except that the committee has reduced by two the number of field representatives who were proposed to be added to the work in the apprentice-training program. I may say that the committee has been very favorably impressed with the accomplishments of that program, but we felt that the addition of three field representatives instead of five for the next fiscal year would adequately provide for a further extension of this work.

CONCILIATION SERVICE

The committee has been very favorably impressed, as I feel sure have been the Members of Congress and the country, with the high character and great value of the work which has been and is being done by the Conciliation Service. We regretted very much to note that the Bureau of the Budget had failed to approve the increase requested by that Service for additional conciliators, who were urgently needed for the next fiscal year in the proper administration of the duties of that Service. We have thought, on the basis of the evidence submitted to us, that we were justified in adding $30,000 above the Budget estimate to the appropriation for the Conciliation Service, the effect of which would be to provide substantially 10 additional conciliators to those that were contemplated in the Budget estimate. The Budget estimate itself contemplated an increase of 8 in the number of conciliators, and the effect of the committee action is to make the total increase in number 18.

DIVISION OF PUBLIC CONTRACTS

The Division of Public Contracts estimates have been approved without change, except for the matter of administrative promotions, which were eliminated in accordance with the rule adopted by the full Committee on Appropriations, and which policy of elimination has heretofore, in connection with certain other general appropriation bills, already received the approval of this House.

BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS

There has been no reduction in the estimate for the Bureau of Labor Statistics. The committee has been fully aware of the great value of the work being carried on under the direction of Mr. Lubin in that organization. Of course, there was the necessary decrease occasioned by the administrative promotion rule to which I have made reference, but instead of decreasing the estimates otherwise we have in reality added $25,000 to these estimates for the Bureau of Labor Statistics, having made that amount available for their use in the printing and binding appropriation. The purpose of providing this additional $25,000 was to enable this Bureau to print and make available part of the wealth of statistics it has gathered, and which it has so far been unable to have printed and made available for use. It has seemed to the committee that it is a rather foolish policy on the part of the Government to appropriate a considerable sum of money to enable the Bureau of Labor Statistics to gather information and then fail to appropriate enough money to enable it to publish this information and make it available to those who would benefit thereby.

IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION SERVICE

In the Immigration and Naturalization Service the committee found what seemed to it to be a very unreasonable situation outlined in the Budget estimates. It was proposed to effect administrative promotions aggregating approximately $128,000 in salary increases, but to do this by decreas-ing the number of personnel; in other words, by dropping from the Service persons who are now engaged in the work of that organization and who in our judgment are urgently needed in the orderly and efficient continuance of that work. They proposed, for example, to drop 46 of the members of the border patrol and 50 field immigration inspectors. There appeared to us from the evidence to be no reason for the dropping of these portions of their personnel except a desire to have the money represented by their salaries made available to grant promotions to others who are to continue in the Service. While the committee observed the rule of the full committee with regard to eliminating new money for administrative promotions, it made this $128,000, approximately, available to insure the continuance of the border patrol without diminution in number and to insure that not more than 37 of the field immigration inspectors who were intended to be dropped, 50 in number under the Budget proposal, would have to be separated from the Service. I believe, I may say, that the committee was favorably inclined to the retention of all the personnel of these two organizations, but it felt that under the circumstances represented by the evidence before the committee and the Budget estimates it could not go further than to take the course I have indicated. It certainly seems to us that with world conditions as they are today and with so many people of other countries of the world eager to enter the United States, either legally or illegally, this is no time to undertake to relax our efforts to keep our borders clear of those whose presence is not desired. For this reason we have amended the proposals of the Budget for the border patrol and the immigration field service.

There was projected in the Budget estimates $25,000 for the construction and repair of the ferry slip and bridge at Ellis Island, which the committee thought might be postponed until the next fiscal year, and the estimate for it was eliminated in the pending bill.

CHILDREN'S BUREAU

As to the Children's Bureau, the committee made substantially no change in the estimates for the regular work of the Bureau except that it added some $32,000 to the amount appropriated for the present fiscal year for the purpose of allowing the Bureau to discharge properly additional duties and responsibilities resting upon it by reason of the enactment of the amendments to the Social Security Act in 1939, which quite naturally increased its administrative expenses in the handling of maternal and child-welfare funds and funds for crippled children.

The amounts which were estimated as grants for the various purposes coming under the jurisdiction of the Children's Bureau, and to which I have made reference, have been carried in the bill as submitted by the Bureau of the Budget without change. These are matters involving certain increases with regard to which the committee felt it could exercise no discretion, and therefore has approved the increases made necessary by the amendments to the Social Security Act.

In the proportion of the projected appropriations for the Children's Bureau having to do with its duties in the administration of the child-labor provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act, the committee found that a very substantial increase was contemplated beyond the appropriation available to that Bureau for this purpose during the present fiscal year. We therefore examined carefully the evidence which was submitted to us and which it was thought justified the increase sought. We found that the Bureau had for salaries and expenses for this item for the present fiscal year $312,720 in addition to other amounts which are carried in the contingent expense, travel expense, and printing and binding items. We found that the Bureau during the entire course of its operations from November 1, 1938, until the time of the hearings before our subcommittee, had been able to discover only approximately 900 cases in the entire country of employment of children under 16 in violation of the child-labor provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

This, of course, convinces us that there is a very small degree of violation of the provisions of that law, and we were also advised that most of the States of the Union have themselves child-labor laws which are, in most cases, adequately and efficiently enforced. It seems to us that providing the amount carried in this bill, in excess of $300,000, for the discharge of duties which during the entire period from the inception of the fair labor standards law down to now have developed only 900 cases of law violation, was certainly liberal enough, if not too liberal, an appropriation of public funds. So it was the unanimous judgment of the committee that the amount of the appropriation for this particular portion of the activities of the Children's Bureau could properly be reduced to approximately the amount of the appropriation for the present fiscal year.

I wish to point out that we found in the Children's Bureau a practice which the committee desires to condemn as being unfair to the Congress, and it is this: In the estimates for the present fiscal year that Bureau projected 112 positions for which appropriations were asked and which were granted by the Congress, but the Bureau, instead of employing 112 people, employed for a portion of the fiscal year only 91 people, thereby not using all of the funds which would have been available for that portion of the year, and then during the latter portion of the fiscal year increased that number to 121, which was 9 above the number which had been estimated for in the estimates submitted to and acted upon by the Congress, and then came in this year with estimates which contemplated the continuance of these 121 employees for the next fiscal year and contemplated an appropriation of funds to pay their salaries in full for the entire year. We felt that the Bureau was not justified in employing any greater number of employees than it had assured Congress, at the time its appropriations for this fiscal year were granted, would be needed, and we therefore took proper steps to assure that not more than the number of 112, which they had assured would be the number needed, should be employed for the next fiscal year.

It is unnecessary to discuss the items of grants for maternal and child health, crippled children, and child welfare. You understand, of course, as I have already stated, these are not matters which are within our discretion, but which have been increased in accordance with legislative action taken by Congress last year in the amendments of the Social Security Act.

WOMEN'S BUREAU

There has been no substantial change in the estimates for the Women's Bureau except, after deducting the administrative promotion money which has been included in the estimates, the committee added $3,000 for the purpose which is outlined in the report and which results in a total increase for that Bureau above the Budget of $1,050.

WAGE AND HOUR DIVISION

In the Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor we found that estimates had been submitted and approved by the Budget aggregating somewhat in excess of $7,400,000, when the contingent expense, administrative expense, and printing and binding items are taken into consideration, which amount was approximately $3,169,000 in excess of the appropriation available to that Division for the present fiscal year.

The committee went into the matter of the needs of the Wage and Hour Division carefully. We had before us the Secretary of Labor and also the new Wage and Hour Administrator, Colonel Fleming. Colonel Fleming, I may say, of course, had nothing to do with the preparation of the Budget estimates, since his incumbency as Wage and Hour Administrator came up long after these estimates were prepared and submitted to the Congress. Both Colonel Fleming and the Secretary of Labor indicated that they proposed certain revision and correction in regulations which would simplify, in their opinion, the work of the Wage and Hour Division and make it more satisfactory and beneficial to the people of the country.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 additional minutes.

They indicated by their evidence that the effect of such simplified procedure would be necessarily to reduce the expenses of the Wage and Hour Division. In view of the fact that Congress entertained the opinion, or at least it was the opinion of the subcommittee that that was the opinion of the Congress when the Wage and Hour Act was passed, that it would be in a large measure self-policing and that it would not be necessary to set up any organization comparable to the old N. R. A. in order to enforce its provisions, and in view of the further fact that its appropriations have been increasing by leaps and bounds ever since it was originally organized, the committee felt that a reduction of a rather substantial nature in the amount of the estimates for the Wage and Hour Division was amply justified. So it made this reduction which, however, when all the items concerned are taken into consideration, nevertheless leaves the Wage and Hour Division $1,644,000 more for the next fiscal year than it had for the present fiscal year, although the reduction below the estimates submitted and approved by the Bureau of the Budget is somewhat in excess of $1,000,000.

Turning now to the Federal Security Agency, I must necessarily make my remarks brief, because I do not want to exhaust the patience of the House.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman leaves that subject will he yield to me for a moment?

Mr. TARVER. Yes; if the gentleman's inquiry relates to some item that I have already discussed.

Mr. HEALEY. It relates to the wage-hour appropriation. The committee cut the Budget estimate by about 20 percent.

Mr. TARVER. I have not figured out the exact percentage. I have tried to give the facts, indicating the amount involved, and also pointed out that with the cut the Wage and Hour Division still would have $1,644,000 more than it had for the present fiscal year.

Mr. HEALEY. That is true, but the gentleman's committee has recommended a substantial cut.

Mr. TARVER. Yes.

Mr. HEALEY. Of more than a million dollars.

Mr. TARVER. Yes.

Mr. HEALEY. I am sorry that I did not hear the gentleman's full explanation as to why that was made.

Mr. TARVER. I would dislike to take the time now to repeat what I said. I should be glad to discuss it further with the gentleman after I have concluded my remarks, if he so desires.

Mr. HEALEY. In reading the report I find the committee found some fault with the Administration and state as one of the reasons for the recommendation of a cut of a million dollars that certain legislation has not yet been considered, and that until that legislation is considered, they feel they should recommend this cut. It seems to me that recommending legislation is beyond the functions of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TARVER. There are other reasons stated in the report in line with the statements that I have just made to the Committee of the Whole than the reason which has been quoted by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HEALEY. That is the reason given in the report, and it seems to me the gentleman's committee is not organized to recommend legislation.

Mr. TARVER. I do not know that the committee is in the attitude of recommending legislation by reason of the quoted statement in the report. There is, however, an indication in the evidence on the part of Colonel Fleming, as I recall, that amendments to the act may be desirable, regarding which he has not yet arrived at a fixed conclusion. I know there is entertained by a number of Members of the House, if not a majority of the House, an opinion that there are some amendments which might very well be made, which would be in the interest of fair administration of the act.

The committee has not undertaken to determine that question, not being a legislative committee. I am sorry that I cannot yield further to the gentleman, because I have already used so much time on the first title of this bill that I am going to have insufficient time, unless I impose a great deal on the patience of the House, to discuss other important subject matters. I must decline to yield further.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman yield for a short observation in line with what he has said?

Mr. TARVER. Yes.

Mr. HEALEY. I do not think the gentleman has any better information than anyone else about the temper of the House regarding proposed amendments.

Mr. TARVER. Of course, if the gentleman thinks the cut is more than should have been made, he can offer an amendment when we get to that stage of the bill, and we will then take the judgment of the House, and that will be final.

FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY

We have embodied in the report on the bill certain recommendations looking toward the consolidation of administrative functions in the office of the Administrator of this Agency with a view of attaining some economies. We recommend, for instance, that all contingent expenses, traveling expenses, and printing and binding be consolidated under those respective heads under the jurisdiction of the Federal Security Administrator. It will be possible for him to then make allotments from this fund to all of the constituent agencies and hold down the amount of travel and other expenditures.

The Federal Security Agency, with all of its branches, had for the fiscal year 1940, the present fiscal year, in excess of $812,000,000. The Budget estimates for 1941 contemplate an appropriation of $798,714,000 in round numbers. The committee has reduced that amount to $788,759,400, representing a reduction below the Budget estimate of $9,955,288. My time is necessarily too brief to enter into a discussion of all of the items here involved. I shall not refer to those which are comparatively of a minor character.

OFFICE OF EDUCATION

I do wish to point out that under the Office of Education we have eliminated the provision of $40,000 for a radio service and $106,400 for a film service. The reason for that elimination is that after consultation with the Parliamentarian we arrived at the conclusion, upon his advice, that those appropriations, or proposed appropriations, are not authorized by law and would be subject to points of order if the committee should undertake to report them in this bill to the House. It was not the desire of the committee that we should recommend any legislative matter in connection with the appropriations for any regular establishment of the Government. In addition we eliminated the sum of $72,000 which had been proposed for public-service training, which had to do with the training of people in public service, such as policemen, firemen, and so forth, with the purpose of improving their efficiency to carry on work in a public-service capacity. We did not think the work done had demonstrated the advisability of the Government undertaking to continue an activity of that sort.

In connection with the appropriations for vocational education the committee has followed the estimates submitted by the Budget, with the exception of the item having to do with vocational rehabilitation. I may say that there is no other item in the bill with regard to which the committee was more sympathetically inclined. We feel that the work which is being carried on by reason of the grants made for vocational rehabilitation is of extreme importance to the people of the country as a whole, but here is the situation: We had an authorization of approximately $1,900,000 for this work for the present fiscal year. Prior to the enactment of the Social Security Act amendments there was actually expended by the States in carrying on that part of the program somewhat in excess of $2,100,000. The authorization was raised in the Social Security Act amendments to $3,500,000, and it was proposed in the bill as submitted by the Budget to authorize allocation of funds as between the States upon the basis of $3,500,000. After carefully examining the evidence relating to the matter, we found that only about seven States, upon the basis of expenditures being made by them during the present fiscal year, would, on the basis of their present expenditures, be able to match the full amount of funds which might be allocated to them under such an enlarged authorization; and the committee felt that under these circumstances it would be fair to approach the consummation of the full extent of the program which has been authorized somewhat more gradually than has been proposed, and that the authorization for the allocation of funds as between the States might very properly be reduced from $3,500,000 to $3,000,000, and the actual appropriation carried in the bill from $2,500,000 to $2,000,000, which appropriation would still be approximately $100,000 in excess of the former authorization. We do not feel that the projected action would be at all harmful to the orderly carrying on of this work.

If we had felt so we certainly would not have taken the action which has been recommended. It necessarily follows that if under the allocation of the $3,000,000 which it is proposed to allocate here to the States on the basis of a matching program, more than the $2,000,000 carried for appropriation in the bill should be required to meet payments under those allocations, then, of course, it would be necessary for Congress through the medium of a deficiency appropriation to take care of whatever deficiency might exist.

CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS

I wish to make reference, and I wish I had the opportunity to talk at somewhat greater length on the subject than will be my privilege, to the work of the Civilian Conservation Corps. I do not know of any subject matter which is of such deep interest to the membership of the House as well as to the people of the country as a whole. There was available for this work during the present fiscal year approximately $295,000,000, of which amount $5,000,000 was impounded and of which about $3,000,000 was used in the discharge of obligations incurred during the fiscal year 1939, leaving for this work for the present fiscal year approximately $287,000,000 with which 1,500 camps are being maintained with a total authorized enrollee membership of 300,000. The average membership has been 270,000.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. Will not the gentleman wait until I complete my discussion of this item? Then I will yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am deeply interested in this.

Mr. TARVER. I know. As soon as I finish discussing the Civilian Conservation Corps item I will yield to the gentleman from Montana.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia declines to yield.

Mr. TARVER. The Budget estimate reduced the amount available for the Civilian Conservation Corps to $230,000,000, which it was estimated would provide for 1,227 camps and for a peak enrollment of 245,000 enrollees. While this is a lump-sum appropriation, the committee examined very carefully the item of estimates for administrative expenses and reached the conclusion that while we could not, under the set-up of the bill, earmark the various items for various purposes described in the estimates, that it would be easily and reasonably possible for the administrative authorities of the Civilian Conservation Corps to effect economies which could not but result in the saving of several millions of dollars. I wish to point out to you that during the last fiscal year approximately $4,500,000 of the appropriation then available was not used and reverted to the Treasury as a saving. I wish to point out also that during the first 6 months of the present fiscal year the Civilian Conservation Corps lacks about $4,000,000 of having expended one-half of the $287,000,000 made available for the present fiscal year.

The average estimated cost per enrollee for the next fiscal year for pay, subsistence, and clothing, hospitalization, and so forth, is around $600. The total expense per enrollee as estimated for the next fiscal year—not for the present fiscal year—is around $1,000, making the expense, aside from pay, subsistence, clothing, transportation, hospitalization, and so forth, approximately $400 per enrollee, which the committee is satisfied represents entirely too great an expenditure for the purpose for which it is expended. We arrived at the conclusion, because of these and other facts which I find it impossible to make reference to in this brief time, that it would be easily possible to add $6,000,000 to the $137,000,000 plus which was earmarked in this bill when it came to our committee for the pay, subsistence, and clothing items of the enrollees, thereby insuring the addition of approximately 10,000 enrollees.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself an additional 15 minutes in an effort to conclude my discussion of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, this will mean an addition, considering an average membership for these camps of 180 enrollees, of about 55 camps. There were some members of the committee who thought that a greater number of camps should be added, but conservatively it may be said as is indicated in the committee's report that it will make provision for 55 additional camps, bringing the total number for the next fiscal year to 1,282. If additional savings can be made in administrative costs, the number of camps can be increased, of course, still further. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I just want to make an observation. I deeply regret there has been any cut in the operations and the extent of the work of the C. C. C. camps. We have a large territory of forests in my district and these boys have done effective and heroic work in regard to reforestation, the preventing of fires, and the building of roads through the forests, which are very much needed, as well as splendid work along other lines.

Mr. TARVER. I am quite familiar with the value of the work to which the gentleman refers that has been carried on generally throughout the country. Personally I do not think there is any activity of the Government which is more commendable than that of the Civilian Conservation Corps. For this reason the committee has endeavored to take steps which will insure a reduction in administrative expenses and at the same time increase the number of enrollees, to which I have made reference.

I want to call particular attention to the facts developed in the hearings with reference to the benefit of the civilian-conservation work as carried on by Negro enrollees. I have some of these Negro camps in my State and have had one or two of them in my district. The evidence shows conclusively that these Negro camps have been performing useful work in soil conservation and in other lines of activity under the jurisdiction of the Civilian Conservation Corps, and, insofar as it has been called to the attention of the committee, there has been orderly conduct on the part of these Negroes in the C. C. C. camps, for which they are certainly to be commended. I feel that the activity insofar as it relates to them is very important in the building up of a better citizenship among the members of the colored race.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, is not the gentleman going to yield on that topic which he has just been discussing?

Mr. TARVER. I shall yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts at almost any time.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am deeply interested in that. I was very familiar with those camps. I have seen them built and abandoned. There were young people you helped in the N. Y. A. by giving them two or three hundred dollars. Can the gentleman justify $1,000 or $1,200 for the boys in the conservation camps? Can he justify any such expenditure, when other boys and girls you can do so much for with $300?

Mr. TARVER. Of course, the gentleman knows that the sum he mentions as representing the cost of enrollees is excessive. The estimate, as I have stated, for the next fiscal year is $1,000, of which only $600 represents the pay of an enrollee, his subsistence, clothing, and hospitalization, and so forth; $400 goes into the item of materials, equipment, salaries, and other overhead items which are necessary in the consummation of these very useful projects which have been carried on. No; I do not think the amount is excessive, and I do not believe the people of the country consider it excessive. I think they regard it as a very reasonable expenditure. But I think the amount of administrative cost may be reasonably reduced so as to provide a greater number of enrollees.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to pursue that, if the gentleman will yield further.

Mr. TARVER. I shall have to yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, further answering the gentleman's question, is it not also true that the items we call expenditures totaling the $1,000 are actually not expenditures altogether, because some of it adds to the capital wealth of the Nation in the form of various improvements which these boys produce?

Mr. TARVER. Indeed so. I am in hearty accord with the gentleman's statement.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

May I make brief reference to the Public Health Service. There are no severe cuts in the estimates as submitted by the Budget under the various items. The committee felt justified, under all the evidence submitted, in adding $2,000,000 above the Budget for the Division of Venereal Diseases, making the appropriation for that Division $5,000,000, which will be sufficient to carry on its work for the next fiscal year upon the same basis that it has been carried on during the present fiscal year. We were impressed with the thought from the expressions we have had from the health authorities and other people interested that the allowance of that sum will, in the main, be satisfactory to those who are interested in this appropriation throughout the country, and represents the full extent to which we think we would be justified in going above the Budget estimate at this time.

SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD

Under the Social Security Board there has been a reduction of $10,000,000 in the amount of the estimate for old-age assistance. Of course, old-age-assistance funds are something which the Government has to furnish if the demands of the State on the matching basis are in excess of the amount provided. If that occurs, the additional money will have to be provided for through a deficiency appropriation. But during the first two quarters of this fiscal year they used only $55,000,000 in each quarter approximately, while the estimate for the present quarter is only $60,000,000. However, the expenditures will probably not be up to that amount. But accepting that as representative, the committee thought $240,000,000 might be needed, and it has provided $245,000,000, giving a leeway of $5,000,000, which is a reduction of $10,000,000 under the estimate.

We have effected a reduction of $300,000 in the appropriation for the expense of administration of unemployment compensation. There are some interesting facts in regard to this activity that I shall not have time to discuss, but with regard to which I hope gentlemen will find time to consult the hearings.

NATIONAL YOUTH ADMINISTRATION

The National Youth Administration estimates have been approved in the lump sum recommended by the Bureau of the Budget. I realize there is some difference of opinion on the part of the membership of the House as to the desirability of the work being carried on by the N. Y. A., but, personally, I feel it is just as important to afford aid of this character to the poorer youth of the country in the securing of an adequate education to enable them to earn a livelihood as it is to carry on the commendable conservation work, conserving both human and natural resources, which has been carried on under the direction of Congress during the last several years.

The committee felt that perhaps in some of its activities the National Youth Administration has gone beyond the real objectives that the Congress had in mind in setting up that agency, and the committee has included in the bill a specific definition of the projects upon which the Youth Administration will be authorized to engage, the effect of which will be to restrict some of its activities during the next fiscal year, thereby adding something to the amounts which may be made available for school and out-of-school aid.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. This is another cut in the appropriations that seems to me unfortunate. I believe this has been one of the most far-reaching and beneficial activities in which the Government has been engaged. We have millions of youths today who are unemployed, who cannot get employment, and cannot get an education. This activity afforded, in a small measure, an opportunity for the youths of the Nation to become experts in different lines of work and receive a reasonable education. In my own State the N. Y. A. has been, and is now, of splendid service.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I fully endorse this gentleman's view concerning the N. Y. A.

Mr. TARVER. I am quite in accord with the gentleman's last statements.

EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION COMMISSION

The Employees' Compensation Commission's appropriation is not substantially reduced, and the reasons for the reductions made are explained in the report.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

There has been some reduction in the estimates for the National Labor Relations Board. It should be pointed out in this connection that the National Labor Relations Board had brought to its attention, in the fiscal year 1938, some ten-thousand-and-odd cases. During the 1939 fiscal year this number was reduced to approximately 7,000, and during the first 6 months of the present fiscal year the number has been 3,085. The committee has felt that in view of this reduction in the number of cases coming to the attention of the Board some reasonable reduction in its operating expenses might be effected. Also, we have made provision for the elimination of the research section, composed of 14 economic analysts, which, with clerical help, bring the total number of persons employed in this Division up to approximately 30. We have felt that the Bureau of Labor Statistics, which has been set up for that purpose, is amply able to take care of the reasonable needs of the National Labor Relations Board for statistical information.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MASSINGALE. With regard to the inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts about the expense of operating the C. C. C. camps, may I ask the gentleman if it is not his opinion that it is not fair to try to hold down a committee in considering these measures to valuing them by dollars and cents?

Mr. TARVER. Of course, there are certain other values which must be taken into consideration by any reasonable person and I am sure will be taken into consideration by all the Members of the House. I am quite in agreement with my friend from Oklahoma in the sentiment he has expressed.

NATIONAL MEDIATION BOARD

There has been very little change, and that of a minor character, in the appropriation for the National Mediation Board.

RAILROAD RETIREMENT BOARD

As regards the Railroad Retirement Board, a $52,000 reduction has been accomplished—$2,000 from the printing-and-binding item and $50,000 from the rent item, occasioned by the occupation of the new Social Security Board and Railroad Retirement Board Building at an earlier date than had been expected.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LUDLOW. Unfortunately I have not been able to be here to hear all the very admirable presentation the gentleman is making on his bill. I wonder if the gentleman has touched on the appropriation for venereal diseases, and if not, I should like to hear an explanation of that item.

Mr. TARVER. I pointed out to the House that the committee had effected an increase above the Budget estimate of $2,000,000, bringing the full amount to $5,000,000, the same amount that is available for the present fiscal year.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman has discussed the question of the Labor Department appropriation. My attention has been called to the fact that the appropriation has been cut below the appropriation for 1940, and that this will result in eliminating the positions of about 129 immigration inspectors and other personnel. The gentleman has just explained that the border patrol is not receiving any cut, but why should it be necessary to cut the immigration service any amount?

Mr. TARVER. May I say to the gentleman that the committee, of course, has had to pay some regard to the estimates submitted by the Budget. The committee has exceeded the estimates of the Budget for personnel by $128,000 in order to take care of this pressing border patrol and field immigration service matter and to prevent undue reductions in those activities. It has seemed to the committee impossible that it could, in the exercise of its judgment, undertake to go further than that in exceeding the estimates which were transmitted to the Congress by the President as representing the views of the Budget and of himself.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman has made a very excellent statement—that in these times we need every man on the job we can get to deal with the enforcement of the immigration laws.

Mr. TARVER. I quite agree with the gentleman.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. You are practically breaking down the enforcement when you reduce the appropriation for the Immigration Service below the 1940 appropriation. It seems to me that is poor economy, and that we are not going in the right direction by saving a few pennies through knocking off 40 or 50 men who are in charge of important work.

Mr. TARVER. There is very much logic in the gentleman's position, but, as I have said, the committee went as far as it felt it could under the circumstances.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. The committee has the support of the thinking people down on my border when it comes to restoring the patrol on the international line.

Mr. TARVER. I thank the gentleman. [Applause.]

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from New York [Mr. KILBURN] such time as he may desire.

Mr. KILBURN. Mr. Chairman, the announcement by the State Department recently that active negotiations are again under way between the United States and Canada looking forward to another agreement and treaty on the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway and power project should be welcomed by all. Reports from Canada indicate that the Ontario Government is now supporting the project and that the sentiment of dominion unity furthered by the war will help overcome the forces which heretofore have been opposed to the development. I sincerely hope that the negotiations may be concluded at an early date and a treaty submitted by the President to the Senate for its consent to the ratification.

The question raised by opponents of the project that such a treaty will violate our neutrality because Canada is now a belligerent nation is absolutely false. I refer to a letter which I received from Secretary of State Hull and inserted in the RECORD, March 7, 1940, in which Mr. Hull advised me that such a treaty would in no way affect our neutrality.

As an ardent supporter of the St. Lawrence waterway and power project, I am happy to have this opportunity to say a few words in its furtherance. It is my privilege to represent the Thirty-first New York Congressional District in the House of Representatives, and I have a special interest in the St. Lawrence development since the river marks the northern boundary of a part of my district. The residents of northern New York State are almost unanimous in their support of the waterway and power project. For two decades now we have been looking forward to this development which will open the St. Lawrence and the Great Lakes to ocean shipping and provide large quantities of cheap electric power. I trust that we may be pardoned for our special interest in the project. Undoubtedly northern New York will benefit much from the increased shipping and cheap power, but we sincerely believe that not only the Great Lakes region but the Nation as a whole will profit considerably from the completion of the development. And I trust that when another treaty is submitted to the Senate the mistake of almost exactly 6 years ago, March 14, 1934, will not be repeated.

NOT A PARTISAN PROJECT

This is not a partisan project. The original surveys were started in the Wilson administration. Presidents Harding and Coolidge both advocated joining with Canada in improving the St. Lawrence, and it was in President Hoover's administration, 1932, that the treaty was finally signed. President Roosevelt has long been a supporter of both the navigation and power aspects of the development. Both the Republican and Democratic Parties have pledged themselves at various times in their platforms to undertake the completion of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway.

FORTY-SEVEN-MILE BOTTLE NECK

The Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway is the most important navigation and power project now before the country. Ocean shipping and reduced transportation costs will be brought to the Great Lakes ports by deepening the channels and removing certain obstructions in only 9.6 percent of the total mileage of the seaway. The other 90.4 percent of the waterway is complete and ready for ocean shipping. In the International Rapids section between Lake Ontario and Montreal large amounts of cheap electric power will be generated, and the United States, through the Power Authority of the State of New York, will receive one-half of the output. The project is economically sound and will provide great benefits in the way of increased trade, lower transportation and power costs to the Great Lakes region and the Nation as a whole.

The Waterway, extending a distance of 2,350 miles from Duluth-Superior to the Atlantic Ocean, has already been improved to a minimum depth of 21 feet except in the short section of the St. Lawrence River between Ogdensburg and Montreal. In that 120-mile section there are now 47 miles of 14-foot canals. This section forms a bottle neck which prevents the passage of most ocean-going vessels and makes Montreal virtually the head of ocean navigation and the transhipment point for inbound and outbound commerce. The treaty of 1932 in substance was an agreement between the United States and Canada to complete the improvement of the existing waterway to provide a minimum depth of 27 feet from the Great Lakes ports to the Atlantic Ocean.

The major portion of the work provided for in the treaty will be done in the International Rapids section of the St. Lawrence River, which forms the boundary between the State of New York and the Province of Ontario. There two dams will be built and ocean-going vessels will be passed around them by canals and locks. The dams will also be used to generate 2,200,000 horsepower of electrical energy, which will be shared equally between the United States and Canada.

NINETY-SEVEN PERCENT UNRESTRICTED

The completed seaway from Duluth to the Atlantic Ocean will provide a waterway in which vessels may move with unrestricted speed over approximately 97 percent of the total distance. The time required for navigation by ordinary cargo vessels from Duluth or Chicago to the ocean is estimated at approximately 9 days.

The total cost of the project is estimated at $543,000,000; the share of the United States under the 1932 treaty was to be $272,000,000 and that of Canada $271,000,000. The United States is already credited with expenditures totaling $14,000,000 and Canada is credited with $128,000,000 already spent on the Welland Canal.

The New York Power Authority has agreed to assume $90,000,000 of the cost to the United States as the allocation to New York's St. Lawrence power development. This reduces the new expenditure required by the United States on account of the seaway to $168,000,000. There may be some slight readjustments in plans, estimates, and cost allocations growing out of the present negotiations, but it is not anticipated that they will be substantial.

WILL STIMULATE TRADE

As has been indicated there are two main considerations in the St. Lawrence project—navigation and power. The completion of the seaway will admit the great majority of ocean vessels from the Atlantic Ocean clear into the Great Lakes and add 3,500 miles to our coast line. As a result the cost of transportation to the seaboard and foreign ports of the agricultural products of the Plains States and the automobiles and other industrial products of the Lake States will be reduced materially. Thus the midwestern manufacturer and farmer will have an opportunity to get closer to equal terms with the eastern and Pacific seaboards and to recover the disadvantage which became effective with the completion of the Panama Canal. This great inland area is composed of nearly half the States in the Union and has a population of over 40,000,000 people.

Our export trade, particularly to Europe, will be stimulated by the completion of the waterway. And it will permit our citizens in the great industrial and consuming centers of the Great Lakes to exchange products with the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific ports in the coastal and intercoastal traffic which comprises more than 80 percent of the ocean shipping of the United States. The opening of our home markets by this means to the full enjoyment of all sections alike is the key to national recovery. It will stimulate the growth of new industry which will absorb labor and raw materials, create new rail tonnage, revive domestic commerce, and open up rich markets to the shipping and industry of our Nation.

WILL PROVIDE CHEAP POWER

Of at least equal importance as the navigation aspect of the St. Lawrence waterway is the development of the great supply of cheap electric power. We in New York State are particularly interested in the power project for our power authority is going to assume about $90,000,000 of the cost of construction and in return receive for distribution about 1,100,000 horsepower. And we are awaiting the time when the St. Lawrence power project will bring to our homes, farms, and business enterprises electric power at rates comparable with other low-rate areas.

The St. Lawrence power can be made available within a wide area at so low a cost as to render its development an essential step in providing for the power requirements of the region. It is an economically sound project both in terms of providing for industrial development near the river and for base-load power in conjunction with other plants to a distance of 300 miles from the point of production. Thus the metropolitan region of New York City and the industrial areas of New England can be served economically with the St. Lawrence power. The savings to light and power consumers served by St. Lawrence power will be around $50,000,000 a year.

WILL BRING NEW INDUSTRIES

The St. Lawrence project will stimulate a great deal of industrial development in the immediate area as well as provide direct employment for over 22,000 men in the construction work. The northern half of New York State has never been adequately developed industrially because of the absence of transportation and cheap power. Within 50 miles of the proposed development there are large quantities of magnetic ore, zinc, lead, arsenic, molybdenum, and the materials for a huge ceramic industry. Lack of fuel and power, combined with the transportation factor, has prevented the development of these mineral resources. I am not unmindful of the vigorous opposition in some quarters to the completion of the waterway and power project. But I believe that the expression of fears are not justified and the predictions of woe unwarranted. The railroads, public utilities, and seaboard ports in the long run will profit from the increased industrial development and transportation rather than suffer from the completion of the project.

WILL INCREASE RAILROAD BUSINESS

The economic development of the Middle West and upper New York State as a result of the seaway and power development will provide the railroads and existing canals with more rather than less traffic. The opening of a much cheaper transportation route has the effect of removing a barrier to the exchange of goods which do not move because of high transportation costs. Such a route, therefore, does not so much divert existing traffic as produce new traffic. It creates more business activity in all regions between which increased interchange thereby becomes practicable. The experience with the Panama Canal has proved this fact. In the 10-year period 1920 to 1929, shippers saved $876,000,000 in transportation costs on goods shipped through the Canal. Yet the western railroads showed a gain in revenue because the new economic development from the Canal brought them an increase in the more profitable classes of freight traffic. The economic growth of the country will require all existing transportation facilities as well as the St. Lawrence waterway to meet its requirements.

The most vigorous opposition in New York State to the project comes from the private power interests. Again I feel that the power people exaggerate their fears as to the consequences of this St. Lawrence power development. I by no means advocate public ownership and management of the generation and distribution of all electric power. But I do believe that in this case it is entirely proper for the Power Authority of New York State to have charge of the generation of the power and then sell it to the existing public-utility companies and districts. Furthermore, I believe that the production of the St. Lawrence power will benefit the private power companies rather than harm them. The cheaper rates will stimulate consumption of electricity to such an extent that large additional supplies of steam-generated energy will be required over and above the full output of the St. Lawrence project itself. Thus the water power will not supplant the steam power but rather supplement it. The tie-up will result in lower rates and greater consumption of power. And private investment will be made more secure rather than endangered.

SUPPORT FROM NEW YORK

I am also aware that many of my colleagues from New York City and the down-State area are opposed to the waterway and power project. It is only natural that they should be interested in protecting and preserving their trade and commerce. I believe that their fears also are unwarranted. Not all are of the same opinion, however, and I wish to quote Mayor LaGuardia, who is a strong supporter of the waterway project. In 1934 he wrote Senator LA FOLLETTE in support of ratification of the treaty of 1932. He said in part:

> No official study has ever been sponsored by the city of New York that supports the claim that completion of the seaway will injure the commerce and shipping of our port. We have one of the great natural harbors of the world, and it has been improved by the use of public funds. New York City is unique as a port and not afraid of inland competition. Since 80 percent of the water-borne commerce of the United States is domestic rather than foreign trade, the extension of our seacoast into the Middle West will inevitably increase the profitable exchange of goods between New York and the other great American cities in the littoral of the Great Lakes.
> A temporary or slight diversion of export and import tonnage does not justify, in my opinion, the obstructing of a national project so obviously in the interests of the United States as a whole. In the long run it is certain that New York City as the metropolis of the Nation will benefit from economic recovery and development in the Middle West. I am therefore heartily in favor of the ratification of the treaty which President Roosevelt has submitted to the Senate. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 78, pt. 4, 73d Cong., 2d sess., p. 4062.)

In conclusion let me say again that I hope that we can reach a satisfactory agreement with our Canadian neighbors and start this project soon. I do not feel that the war situation should deter us. There is no question of our continued friendly relations with Canada, and it is not likely that the project can be completed until after the war is over. In the post-war period the project will be of great value. Cheap energy and cheap transportation have always been forces tending to alter the economic situation which they find in the direction of expansion of industrial and business enterprise. I am confident that the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway project will prove no exception. [Applause.]

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, the Civilian Conservation Corps has been perhaps the most popular of all new organizations which sprang into existence during the past 7 years. It has been popular with the people back home and popular with the Members of Congress. This organization has spent since its beginning approximately $2,450,000,000, of which $560,400,000, or approximately 23 percent, has been allotted by the enrollees to their relatives back home. This $2,450,000,000 has been turned over to this organization in annual lump sums averaging from $250,000,000 to $300,000,000.

I like Mr. McEntee, the Director of the Corps, very much personally. I believe he is sincere. I was greatly impressed by his desire to do things for the enrollees. In his testimony—page 179 of the hearings—he said:

> It is a question of utilizing every dollar we can get under the law from Congress for the benefit of these enrollees.

I believe that Mr. McEntee, and I know that Mr. McNutt, head of the Federal Security Agency, will welcome any constructive criticism. It is because I believe that we have not been utilizing every dollar Congress has appropriated for the benefit of these enrollees that I am speaking here today. At the outset, let me say that I am not attempting to cut the Budget figures of $230,000,000. What I am trying to do is to get more camps and more enrollees for the same amount of money. I shall try to make my criticism constructive and not destructive.

CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES

According to the Budget Director's estimates for 1940, 32,406 civilian employees, including Army Reserve officers, will at the end of the present fiscal year have received $58,234,711 in salaries, while 270,000 C. C. C. enrollees and their dependents will have received $101,185,200 in wages.

This bill provides for a maximum authorized C. C. C. strength of 245,400 enrollees, which will give us an actual enrolled strength of 221,000 enrollees. The committee amendment earmarks the pay-subsistence item of the C. C. C. in this bill. It takes $6,000,000 from overhead and adds it to the pay-subsistence item. If this amendment is retained, it will provide for 55 additional camps with the same amount of money. If this bill is passed as it was submitted to the committee by the Budget Director, without the committee amendment, 28,055 civilian employees, including Army officers, will receive $49,413,697 in salaries during the next fiscal year, while the 221,000 enrollees and their dependents will receive $82,821,960 in pay. These figures do not include expenses and other allowances which the civilian employees will receive. For every $8 the enrollee or his family will receive during the next fiscal year the civilian employees will receive approximately $5.

Discussing the 1941 estimates as set forth in the hearings we find on page 198, part 2, an itemized statement of the estimated representative cost and pay of the individual technical service for each Civilian Conservation Corps camp operated under the Department of the Interior, which is as follows:

1 superintendent at $2,300 per year	$2,300
2 senior foremen at $2,000 per year	4,000
2 foremen at $1,860 per year	3,720
1 foreman at $1,680 per year	1,680
1 mechanic at $1,500 per year	1,500
1 blacksmith at $1,500 per year	1,500
Average clerical assistance for camp services	1,260

Or a total of $14,661 per year per camp for technical-service operations, for each of the 397 camps which will be operated under this bill by the Department of the Interior. We will have a total of 3,176 employees in these 397 camps receiving $5,820,417 pay.

On page 238, part 2, of the hearings we find the estimated break-down for the technical service of the 830 camps which will be assigned to the Department of Agriculture. Each camp will have:

1 superintendent at $2,300 per year	$2,300
1 engineer at $2,000 per year	2,000
1 technician (forestry, soils, etc.)	2,000
1 senior foreman at $2,000	2,000
1 foreman at $1,860	1,860
2 junior foremen at $1,680	3,360
2 squad foremen at $1,200	2,400
1 mechanic	1,440
½ skilled worker	600

Making a total of 10½ employees per camp who will receive a total of $16,031.35 per camp-year. Multiply this by 830 camps and we find that the Department of Agriculture for technical service will have 8,715 people on the pay roll who will receive $13,305,730; or, summarizing, these 1,227 camps provided for by the Budget will, during 1941, have 11,891 employees who will receive from $1,200 to $2,400 per year, or a total of $19,126,147. These 11,891 employees are the people who look after the boys during the working hours between 8 o'clock in the morning and 4 o'clock in the afternoon. In addition to these 11,891 employees, we have a group of employees who are supposed to look after these boys after 4 o'clock in the afternoon and until 8 o'clock in the morning, and on pages 185 and 186 of part 2 of the hearings we find that we will have 9 staff officers who will receive $3,800 per year; 63 staff officers at $3,500 a year; 108 staff officers at $3,200 a year; 228 staff officers at $2,900 a year; 1,227 camp officers at $2,900 a year; 342 staff officers at $2,600 a year; 409 camp officers at $2,300 a year; 818 camp officers at $1,980 a year; 827 staff officers at $3,500 a year; and 642 staff officers at $2,900 a year. In other words, we will have 4,673 camp and staff officers with a yearly average salary of $2,787, totaling for the 1,227 camps $13,025,640, or almost 4 camp and staff officers for each camp at a cost of over $10,000 a year.

The third class of employees we have in the camp are the educational group. We will find this group itemized on page 170, part 2, of the hearings, as follows:

Director of C. C. C. camp education	$7,000
Assistant director of C. C. C. camp education	5,600
Assistant to the director	3,200
Special assistant to the director	3,200
2 research assistants	6,400
Secretary to the director	2,000
Secretary to the assistant director	1,800
3 stenographers	4,860
Statistical clerk	1,620
File clerk	1,440
Part-time clerical assistance	1,440
Administrative promotions	1,240
Total departmental pay roll	39,800

You will also find under "Field services, project 1," the following:

9 corps area educational advisers, at $4,800	$43,200
9 assistant corps area educational advisers, at $3,200	28,800
9 secretaries to corps area educational advisers, at $1,620	14,580
11 clerks (corps area educational advisers' offices), at $1,440	15,840
1,227 camp educational advisers, at $2,000	2,454,000
59 district educational advisers, at $2,900	171,100
Administrative promotions	132,500
Overlapping services	18,673
Total, field service	2,878,693

We have here 1,339 more employees, 1,307 of whom will receive from $2,000 to $7,000 per year, or a total of $2,918,793 in the Educational Department. This makes a grand total of 17,903 men who are supposed to look after the welfare of the enrollees, or 14 employees per camp. These 17,903 employees will receive a total of over $35,000,000. This does not include 11,000 more civilian employees in the Army, Interior Department, and Department of Agriculture, which brings the total number of civilian employees to more than 28,000 and the total pay roll up to nearly $50,000,000.

These 17,903 employees above referred to will receive an average of approximately $2,000 per year. If we could cut off two of the higher bracket employees from each camp, we would save $5,000,000 of the $6,000,000 which we have transferred from overhead to enrollee pay and subsistence.

EDUCATIONAL PROGRAM

The testimony shows that 91 percent of the enrollees take part in the educational program. The average enrollee stays in the camp 9 months and takes 4 hours per week of educational work. Four hours per week for approximately 36 weeks equals 144 hours of actual class work. A high-school or grade student in our public schools attends classes from 9 until 12 in the morning and from 1 until 4 in the afternoon, or he has 6 hours' class work per day, 5 days a week, or a total of 30 hours' class work per week. At the end of 5 weeks, he will have had 150 hours in school.

According to the testimony, the average enrollee receives the equivalent of about 5 weeks' high-school or grade-school education. At first I was rather enthusiastic about this program. There is no question but some good is being accomplished by this work. However, I am now convinced that the good that has been accomplished has been greatly exaggerated, and I wonder whether it justifies the employing of a group of men who receive from $7,000 a year on down in salaries aggregating $3,000,000. This $3,000,000 would give us 3,500 more boys in camps or 20 more camps. It certainly is a matter that should be carefully considered.

CITY ENROLLMENT

One of the greatest arguments that has been advanced in favor of the Civilian Conservation Corps is that the C. C. C. takes the boys from the city streets, slums, and poolrooms of the city. Undoubtedly this is true to a certain extent, but again I think this benefit has been greatly exaggerated. A survey was made in 1937 by the C. C. C. of 350,000 enrollees. It was found that 55 percent came from rural areas, 12 percent from cities of 2,500 to 10,000 in population, and only 33 percent came from cities of over 10,000. Mr. McEntee testified that since that time, the enrollment from the large cities has been reduced below the 1937 figures.

Applying these percentages to the 221,000 enrollees which the testimony shows will attend these camps if this bill is passed as it was presented to the committee, we find that 55 percent or 121,000 will come from rural and farm areas, that another 12 percent or 26,000 will come from cities of from 2,500 to 10,000 and that only 73,000 of the total enrolled will come from cities of 10,000 or over. To say that these 73,000 or any material percentage of them will come from poolrooms, and slums, and so forth, is, of course, not true. While undoubtedly some of these boys do come from the slums, poolrooms, and so forth, it would be difficult to justify an appropriation of a quarter of a billion dollars for this purpose on this ground. The 1930 census shows that there were approximately 9,000,000 boys in the United States between the ages of 17 and 25. It is obvious that we cannot help all of these boys, and the work that is being done along this line is merely a drop in the bucket, worthy though it may be. When you take the increased population into consideration over 1930, this 73,000 represents approximately one out of every 130 boys in America. Again, I feel that the public has been very much oversold on this part of the program.

LUMP-SUM APPROPRIATIONS

I have expressed myself repeatedly as being opposed to lump-sum appropriations and lump-sum debt increases. The one is as vicious as the other; the two together, if continued, will spell financial ruin. That policy is conducive to waste and extravagance. The Budget can never be successfully balanced without imposing a great many unnecessary taxes unless the policy is abolished and unless we earmark appropriations and provide that all unused portions should be turned back into the Treasury.

When I called the attention of the C. C. C. to the great discrepancy between the amounts for each item which that organization justified before the Budget Director and the Appropriations Committee, and the amount they actually spent, the Director attempted to justify this discrepancy by saying that the estimates for 1939 were submitted upon a Budget providing for 1,200 camps, while Congress later amended the law increasing those camps from 1,200 to 1,500, or adding 25 percent. I have before me a table which I ask unanimous consent to insert into the RECORD.

TABLE I.—Civilian Conservation Corps

		1939 Budget estimates for 1,200 camps	Additional 25 percent for 1,500 camps	Actually spent in 1939
02	Supplies and materials	$13,060,037	$16,326,296	$18,645,062

Column 1 shows the estimates for 1939, item for item, for 1,200 camps which the C. C. C. justified both before the Budget Director and before the Appropriations Committee, and which the Budget Director and the Appropriations Committee approved before the House increased the number of camps from 1,200 to 1,500. Column 2 shows each item increased by 25 percent to take care of the increase of camps. In other words, column 2 shows what would have been undoubtedly allowed had each item been increased the same percentage that the camps were increased. Column 3 shows the amount that was actually spent by the C. C. C. for each item during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939. No one can look over this table and justify the discrepancy between the several amounts. For instance, for supplies and material they justified $13,060,000. When you add 25 percent you have $16,326,000. They actually spent $18,645,000 or $1,300,000 more. The subsistence item is rather interesting because of the fact that one of the justifications they gave for the increase was the Ohio flood. They justified for subsistence for 1,200 camps $38,882,929. Adding 25 percent, we would have for 1,500 camps, $48,720,732. They actually spent only $40,247,000 for the 1,500 camps—a discrepancy of over eight and a half million dollars which cannot be justified on the ground of decreased ration cost. For travel of persons which includes, of course, the travel of C. C. C. enrollees back and forth from their homes, they asked for $7,172,000 for 1,200 camps. For 1,500 camps they would have received $8,965,000. They actually received $11,718,000, or $1,800,000 more. I asked Mr. McEntee to insert into the record an itemized statement of the money they spent during the Ohio flood, which statement can be found on page 224 of the hearings. They only charged up against the travel item approximately $320,000, so of course that would not justify the increased travel allowance. In the item of transportation of things, they asked for $4,034,000 for 1,200 camps. Adding 25 percent for the extra 300 camps would make it $5,042,000. They actually spent only $2,758,000 or approximately 50 percent of what Congress allowed them. Under the item of repairs and alterations, which certainly could not have been affected by the flood, they asked for $8,414,000. Adding 25 percent for additional camps would give them $10,518,000, and they actually spent $15,114,000 for this item, or nearly $5,000,000 more than they justified. Again on equipment they asked for $3,358,000. Adding 25 percent for the 1,500 camps would give us $4,198,000. They actually spent $12,635,879. In other words, they spent $8,400,000 more than they justified, or three times the amount they justified. While a part of this amount can be justified by the Ohio flood, the difference between the amount justified and the amount spent is $2,000,000 more than the total amount spent by the Corps in the Ohio flood. If this statement does not convince this House of the waste and extravagance caused by lump-sum appropriations, there is nothing that I can say that would convince this House. I feel very keenly on this subject.

The framers of the Constitution tried to safeguard the money of the taxpayers in every way possible. They provided that revenue bills and appropriation bills must originate in the House of Representatives, and cannot originate in the Senate. The House has always defended that position. The framers of the Constitution then limited the terms of Members of the House to 2 years so that if this privilege were abused, we would have to answer to the people. I feel that the Constitution gives me, as a Member of Congress, the right to reach into a taxpayer's pocket, take out money we call taxes and put that money into the Treasury. The Constitution also, in my judgment, places upon me the responsibility of seeing that every dollar of taxes which we have placed into the Treasury is properly spent and accounted for. The criticism I make is not of Mr. McEntee nor of the C. C. C., but the criticism I make is of the practice of lump-sum appropriations which we have been following for the past 7 years. We have no one, only ourselves to blame, if this money is juggled and wasted.

AVERAGE DISTRIBUTION OF ENROLLEE STRENGTH

I asked for and received from the Director of the C. C. C. a table which gives the average distribution of enrolled strength during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, that being the only complete fiscal year for which we have figures.

This table shows that the daily average strength of the entire corps during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, was 289,205.

I was also furnished a monthly work-progress report, giving 151 type or project designations, which they classify in this table as field-work projects, and which are of a permanent type. In other words, these 151 projects represent, when they are complete, the permanent value that we have received in the way of construction, and so forth, through the C. C. C. They have also designated camp projects which are temporary projects. Mr. McEntee states that 65 percent of these camp projects have a public benefit over and above the direct benefit to the C. C. C., but he does not state of how much benefit they are; and in view of the fact that they are temporary projects, they cannot be of much value.

I think you will find, if you should examine the sheet, that the field-work projects cover practically everything of a permanent nature. This table shows that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, there were employed on an average 196,161 men, or approximately 66 percent of the total enrollment on field-work projects, with over 93,000 who were not employed on permanent projects. These are classified as follows: Camp-work projects, 41,847; detached service and special detailed-work projects, 14,295; overtime, 409; light duty, 5,149; not used due to bad weather, 8,792; sick, on leave, or in transit, 21,598; all other causes, 954.

The appropriation for the C. C. C. for 1939 was $296,000,000. Of this amount, four and a half million dollars was turned back into the Treasury, and six and a half million was used for the Ohio flood, leaving approximately $285,000,000, which the C. C. C. actually got. If this were a business with a going concern, you would charge against this permanent type of work the entire appropriation, leaving out of consideration the question of benefits to the workers themselves; and looking at it from a hard-boiled, cold-blooded business standpoint, it costs us $285,000,000 to keep these 196,000 men on the front-line-work projects. In other words, for every enrollee who worked on actual permanent field-work projects, the taxpayers put up $1,450 a year.

I personally feel that we have not been getting value received for our money, even when we take into consideration the benefits to the enrollees. If we could have reduced the number of enrollees—in 1939—detailed to other than permanent-work projects to 25 percent, and increased the number of enrollees who work on field-work projects from 66⅔ percent to 75 percent, we would have had 216,900 enrollees employed on permanent field projects instead of 196,161. This means that we would have had 20,000 more enrollees working on permanent camp projects. This would be the equivalent of 110 extra camps with an average enrolled strength of 180 men each. Surely, with 32,000 civilian employees to look after the welfare of these men, it should not be necessary to detail and have off duty for various causes 93,000 enrollees.

I want it distinctly understood that I am not blaming Mr. McEntee, the Director, for this. Mr. McEntee, Mr. McNutt, or those working in the Civilian Conservation Corps are not responsible. They had nothing to do with the detailing of these men for various duties. These men and those who are under them, whether staff officers or technical officers, are under the control of the Department of the Interior and the Department of Agriculture, and those two Departments must take the responsibility for any wastage of manpower here.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. I heard our chief forester of the State of Massachusetts say, "Give me 20 trained men and 2 tractors and I will do more work than the 400 boys are doing."

Mr. ENGEL. I have talked to foresters, both State and National, and they tell me if we would give them a third of the money they will do as much work, but they will not say anything about that publicly because they are afraid they are going to lose these camps.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. Yes.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I did not hear the gentleman's full statement, but will he indicate in his statement where we can find a break-down as to what the $400 per boy is spent for which the boy does not get?

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman will find that break-down in the RECORD. That is accounted for somewhat in this respect: $58,000,000 last year was expended for salaries of 32,000 civilian employees. The gentleman will find in the RECORD a break-down of supplies and materials, itemized, for 1939, which will give him a pretty good idea.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Would the gentleman give us an idea as to what it costs to maintain a soldier and what it costs to maintain a C. C. C. enrollee—that is, exclusive of the accouterments?

Mr. ENGEL. I do not want to go into that. Of course, it costs a lot less for a soldier, but I do not think the comparison would be fair. I say this to the gentleman: If this were a business concern, they would charge against these 151 work projects all of the items which we have, and they would have to charge against these 196,000 men working on these 151 projects the total appropriation, and they would find that it would cost about $1,450 per man per year. In other words, if every man who worked in the front line, planting trees, doing actual work, soil conservation, or any of the other 151 work projects, had charged against him every item, it would be found that it cost for the actual work about $1,450 per man—that is, putting it on hard-boiled financial basis.

SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD PROMOTIONS

In going through the Social Security Board offices, I made a "spot check" of the pay cards. By "spot check" I mean I took every tenth pay card for, we will say, 150 cards, in the letter "A," then dropped down to perhaps "F" and again took every tenth card; then down to the letter "J," "L," and so on down the line. When I finished that check, I went through the personnel files, taking every tenth file of a section taken at random, examining the personnel records, endorsements, and so forth. I then went to the section which contained the records on promotions. The last complete year was the fiscal year 1939. I found that the Social Security Board had for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, an average of 8,723 employees. During that same fiscal year they made 7,087 administrative promotions at an annual cost of $538,180, as against 1,404 administrative promotions made during the preceding fiscal year at a cost of $117,960. These are administrative promotions within the grade, and not step-ups, that I am speaking about.

The tables furnished me show that, in addition to these 7,087 administrative promotions we had 3,122 grade promotions during the same period of time. Some of these employees who received grade promotions also received administrative promotions and were canceled out. However, this shows that the Board made 10,109 administrative and grade promotions during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.

The Reorganization Act provided that no promotions should be made within 1 year from the effective date of reorganization. The effective date of reorganization of the Federal Security Agency, of which the Social Security Board is a part, was July 1, 1939. The testimony in the record I have shows that the Social Security Board made 2,989 administrative promotions at an annual cost of $221,960, on June 15, 1939, or within 15 days next preceding the effective date of reorganization after which date Congress said no promotions should be made. Eighty-five percent of the administrative cost of the Social Security Board, according to testimony, is paid out of pay-roll taxes paid in by employers and employees, so 85 percent of this $538,000 increase in pay during 1939 will come out of the money that actually belongs to the widows, the orphans, and to the employees who have earned this money by the sweat of their brow. Mr. Altmeyer tried to justify these promotions by his desire to bring the average pay of his employees up to the general average of the other departments. The employees of these older departments have worked for years and have earned their promotions, and the Social Security Board is trying to give, within a few months, promotions to their employees that employees of other departments have worked for years to earn. Let me not be misunderstood. I am not opposed to reasonable promotions, but we have here a situation where I find employees worthy, honest, hard-working people with excellent records who have received no promotions for years. Here we have a department which has given 32½ percent of their employees promotions in 1 month. It is not conducive to good morale on the part of other employees. It is not fair. These other employees will say, "I have not had a promotion in 4 or 5 years. If I had been in the Social Security Board, I would have received it at once."

The testimony of Mr. Altmeyer is rather amazing. Naturally he tried to justify his promotions. On page 849 of the hearings he frankly admits that these promotions were made to get around the Reorganization Act. I quote from the testimony:

Mr. ENGEL. The administrative promotions, from July 1 and through December 31, 1938, were 2,778, at an annual cost of $207,760, and in June 1939 there were 2,889 at an annual cost of $221,960. Regardless of whether the act of Congress is advisable or not, you "jumped the gun" on the act of Congress?

Mr. ALTMEYER. Let me explain.

Mr. ENGEL. Is it not true, Mr. Altmeyer, that you have jumped the gun, and that these 2,889 promotions were made in June—I am not discussing the justification, but they were made to get around the Reorganization Act?

Mr. ALTMEYER. Yes; that is right.

I might add that they made 2,989 administrative promotions, but 100 were canceled out by grade promotions. I feel that the entire Social Security Board is responsible for this and I have no desire to place the responsibility on Mr. Altmeyer's shoulders alone. We have here again another department to which we have handed lump-sum appropriations of millions of dollars, with absolutely no strings attached, to spend as they saw fit. In discussing the lump sum appropriation question with Mr. Altmeyer during the hearings, I asked him the following question (p. 868 of the hearings):

Mr. ENGEL. If we had earmarked these appropriations and items, would you have been able to find the money to make 7,087 administrative promotions in a year?

Mr. ALTMEYER. I don't know; but I would say that I feel that our personnel policy is justified in terms of the results our people are turning out.

I think we have here the crux of the whole matter. You know, Mr. Altmeyer knows, and I know that these 7,087 administrative promotions would not have been made in 1 year had the Appropriations Committee and Congress earmarked these funds and had they followed a policy where unused portions of earmarked funds would revert to the Treasury, and provided that such unused portions could not be used for other purposes.

Again, you and I as Members of Congress cannot shirk the responsibility. I personally feel that you and I are to blame for the condition existing more than the Social Security Board or its Chairman. I like Mr. Altmeyer personally. I think he is an efficient official, doing a good job. I know my criticism is rather harsh, but you cannot get around the facts. I am directing that criticism rather to Members of Congress in permitting these lump-sum appropriations and not against the Social Security Board, nor against any Board nor employee. You and I cannot dodge that responsibility. We are to blame.

I went through their offices, visiting every nook and corner, examining the files, records, and methods of doing business. I was in every building, including the Baltimore office. I said then and I say now that they have an efficient organization. I think the Baltimore office is operating as efficiently as it would be were it a private insurance company. I believe the same can be said more or less of the entire Board's operation. However, I feel the salaries on the Board and those under the Board are far above what they would be on the average were this Board being operated by a private insurance company. I want to be fair and say that I know of no one whom I esteem more, whose ability I place upon a higher plane than that of Mr. Altmeyer, and, as a rule, those under him. However, I cannot justify the expenditure of this money and the making of these promotions.

I also call attention briefly to promotions made by the United States Employment Service. I have in my office the name of every employee who was promoted in the Social Security Board and the United States Employment Service between March 1939 and June 30, 1939, the old salary, the new grade, and the new salary. The United States employment records show that they jumped their pay roll from $368,980 on April 1, 1939, to $427,780 on June 30, 1939. They had on July 1, 1939, 684 employees. They promoted during that 3-month period 185 employees, or 27 percent, at a cost of $58,800. I call attention again to the fact that no promotions could be made after July 1, 1939, for 1 year under the Reorganization Act. Practically all of these promotions were made during the month of June or within a short time of the effective date of reorganization. They could not have been made after July 1.

I find that 11 employees received increases of $1,000 to $1,600 a year, aggregating $11,300. Forty-four employees received increases of $500 a year or more; 66 employees received increases of $300 a year or more. In other words, nearly 20 percent of this salary increase went to 11 employees and over 50 percent went to 44 employees. They tried to justify the increases on various grounds.

I asked Mr. McNutt about these promotions which were made just prior to the effective date of reorganization. On pages 10 and 11 of the hearings you will find that in referring to these promotions I asked Mr. McNutt:

You knew nothing about any of those promotions at that time; that all took place prior to the time you took office, and you had no knowledge at that time of those facts?

And Mr. McNutt answered:

Nor would I attempt to justify any such procedure at all.

Mr. Altmeyer denied responsibility, and his testimony is found on page 851 of the hearings, referring, of course, to the United States employment promotions only and not to the Social Security Board promotions:

Mr. ENGEL. Did the Social Security Board know, prior to July 1, that those promotions were being made?

Mr. ALTMEYER. We learned about it, as I recall it, in June.

Mr. ENGEL. At the time they were being made?

Mr. ALTMEYER. No; after they were made.

Mr. ENGEL. You knew nothing about it at the time?

Mr. ALTMEYER. No.

Mr. ENGEL. Then the Social Security Board itself had nothing to do with the making of these promotions, either impliedly or otherwise?

Mr. ALTMEYER. No, sir.

Mr. ENGEL. Did anyone connected with the Social Security Board?

Mr. ALTMEYER. No, sir.

Mr. ENGEL. And the first knowledge you had of these promotions was after they had been made?

Mr. ALTMEYER. Yes.

Again this testimony refers only to these 185 promotions made by the United States Employment Service prior to their merger with the Social Security Board.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, who did effect these promotions?

Mr. ENGEL. They came from the reorganization plan in the Labor Department before the United States Employment Service went to the Security Board.

LUMP-SUM APPROPRIATION

I desire now to discuss briefly the lump-sum appropriation as it affected the Social Security Board. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a table compiled by myself, showing the estimates other than pay rolls justified before the Budget Director and before the Appropriations Committee by the Social Security Board and upon which was based the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939. This table shows, also, item for item, the actual amount spent by the Social Security Board.

TABLE II.—Social Security Board

		Budget estimate for 1939	Actually spent in 1939
02	Supplies and materials	$1,088,552	$363,457
04	Storage and care of vehicles	6,000	807
05	Communications service	516,022	220,000
06	Travel expenses	1,275,000	1,156,495
07	Transportation of things	105,904	30,214
10	Furnishing heat, lights, and power	105,190	67,631
11	Rent	1,991,252	[1] 653,793 [2] 990,678
12	Repairs and alterations	101,870	[2] 60,329 [3] 152,008
13	Special and miscellaneous current expenses	143,445	41,450
30	Equipment	498,275	402,496
	Total other obligations	5,831,510	4,140,227

[1] Rent. [2] Equipment. [3] Operations and maintenance.

TABLE III.—Social Security Board

	Budget estimate for 1940	Actually spent during first 6 months of 1940
Supplies and materials	$374,354	$132,945
Storage and care of vehicles	917	287
Communications	245,589	79,614
Travel	1,502,920	628,050
Transportation of things	58,655	14,602
Advertising		483
Heat, light, and power	90,162	28,816
Rental of space	938,405	348,092
Rental of equipment	944,281	442,119
Repairs and alterations	66,933	21,610
Operations and maintenance	174,450	73,675
Special	157,710
Equipment	318,427	144,423
Total	4,872,803	1,914,717

This table shows that the Social Security Board justified in 1939 for supplies and materials $1,088,552. They actually spent $363,457, or approximately one-third of the amount they justified. They justified $6,000 for storage and care of vehicles; they spent $800. They justified $516,000 for communication service and spent $220,000. They justified $105,904 for transportation of things, and they spent $30,000. They justified $1,991,000 for rent, and they spent $1,440,000, including rental of equipment, or over one-half million dollars less than the amount they justified. They justified a total for a list of obligations at $5,831,510, and they spent $4,140,000. You will find great discrepancies in item after item where they overestimated the amount of the actual expenditures. After making these promotions involving over one-half million dollars, they turned back into the Treasury one and a half million dollars.

I am wondering just what you and I would say if someone criticized us for appropriating taxpayers' money in this way—that you and I as Members of Congress allowed three times as much for supplies and materials as they could spend, or allowed them one-half million dollars more for rent than they could spend, and right on down the line. Again, 85 percent of this money comes from the pay roll of taxpayers, big and small, that is earned by the sweat of many workers' brows.

I also ask unanimous consent to place into the RECORD the estimates justified before the committee for 1940 and the expenditures for the first 6 months of 1940. You will find there the same discrepancies when you compare the 6 months' actual expenditures with the 1940 estimate. Some of these discrepancies are justified by the fact that undoubtedly the expenditures of the last half of 1940 will be heavier than the first half. However, I call attention to the fact that the Board justified $4,872,803 for the full year for the items specified, and they actually used only $1,914,717 the first 6 months. If they spend the same amount the last 6 months as they did the first 6 months, they would have expended for these purposes $3,829,000 as against an appropriation of $4,872,000. I am certain that while a part of the remaining million will be used for the purpose for which it was appropriated, you will find other discrepancies at the end of the year.

FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY

The Honorable Paul V. McNutt, as Administrator of the Federal Security Agency, occupies a peculiar position. He was appointed July 13, 1939. I want to be fair about the matter, and in justice to him I want to say that the promotions referred to in the record here were made and approved prior to the time that he took office. I want, however, to discuss the peculiar relations that exist with regard to Mr. McNutt's administration of the Civilian Conservation Corps. Mr. McNutt, as Administrator, is responsible for the C. C. C. operations. A part of the camps are assigned to the Interior Department and are under Secretary of the Interior Ickes. The remainder are assigned to Mr. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture. Both of these men hold a position of Cabinet officer—naturally a higher rank than Mr. McNutt as Administrator; yet Mr. McNutt is charged by law with certain administrative duties over the C. C. C. operations that are taking place under these Departments.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. Yes.

Mr. LEAVY. The question I am about to ask is not in any way a criticism of the subcommittee nor of the gentleman himself, but he has been chastising the Social Security Board rather severely, and yet I notice that there is an increase for salaries and expenses this year—that is, for the coming fiscal year 1941—over those of 1940 of $2,204,060, but when it comes to old-age assistance in grants to States there is a reduction below the Budget estimates of $10,000,000, and when we take this bill as a whole, the cut below the Budget estimate is $11,798,942, but $10,000,000 of that comes out of the old folks, if it is ever spent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the genteman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes more. First, as to this increase in the pay roll. The gentleman will recall that Congress passed an amendment which jumped ahead the payments of old-age pensions. The gentleman will remember that.

Mr. LEAVY. Very well.

Mr. ENGEL. And this extra pay roll you have in there comes first, in rental of machines. They spent a million dollars a year for rental of tabulating machines and other costs made necessary by this increase in work because of the increased benefits which are being paid under the act and under the new act of Congress last year. Whether we put this extra $10,000,000 in or not will not affect the amount that the old people will receive. It is just a question of how much will be required to match the funds of the States. Those funds are going to be matched. The committee thought there was $10,000,000 more than was required to match those funds, but if it should not be enough, those funds will be matched just the same and a deficiency bill for the necessary amount will come in.

Mr. LEAVY. On the other hand, if the States did not make a demand for this the money would not be spent, would it?

Mr. ENGEL. That is true. On the other hand, however, the committee has done all it could to appropriate only such money as will be used. Let me close with the thought that this cut will not affect the old-age pension nor the Federal contribution to the old-age pension nor assistance of one eligible person. Understand, it is just a question of overestimating or underestimating. If we underestimate we can take care of the situation through a deficiency appropriation.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Let us assume that the States demand a greater sum than that provided in this bill. In order to meet that demand of the States further legislation will be necessary by this Congress.

Mr. ENGEL. Oh, not at all.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Did not the gentleman just say that a deficiency bill would be necessary?

Mr. ENGEL. What I said was that we could try the lesser amount; that, if necessary, the fund would be replenished through a deficiency appropriation. We do that right along.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In other words, Congress will again have to act upon the matter.

Mr. ENGEL. We have deficiency bills during every session of Congress. This money will not be used up until July 1, 1941, and Congress will be in session beginning January 3, 1941.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The point I am not clear on is just why was this sum taken away from the aged people of this country who need it?

Mr. ENGEL. It was not taken away from the aged people of this country. It is not going to affect the pension of one aged person. It is just a question of who is right in the estimate. We looked into the situation carefully and came to our conclusion that the amount provided by the bill is adequate.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If I may make this observation, it seems to me that if there is a doubt in the mind of the committee, it should have been resolved in favor of the aged people.

Mr. ENGEL. There was no doubt in the mind of the committee at all.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. I yield.

Mr. LEAVY. Suppose a Congress should be elected this fall that is hostile to this whole social-security program and should refuse to make a deficiency appropriation, if the judgment of the present Subcommittee on Appropriations proves to be wrong?

Mr. ENGEL. If that kind of Congress should be elected, they probably would repeal the whole Social Security Act and would not do anything for it.

Mr. LEAVY. The gentleman is not fearful of that occurring?

Mr. ENGEL. I am not worrying about that at all. I am concerned about the soundness and wisdom of the committee's action in handling the items in this bill. This will not affect the pension of a single aged person. If I thought it would, I would not be for it, because I am most sympathetic with the needy aged. Let me say in passing that the entire membership of this subcommittee is sympathetic toward old-age pensions and care of the aged. There is not one member of the committee that is not sympathetic with them. We want them to get everything they are entitled to.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a short observation?

Mr. ENGEL. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In the questions I asked I was not impugning any desire on the part of the gentleman from Michigan to cut down old-age pensions, because I know the gentleman is sympathetic to the program; but I do think that the action of the committee is subject to criticism in taking a part away from them and putting up to a future Congress the question as to whether or not the fund will be made up.

Mr. ENGEL. If we were to operate on the theory that the Committee on Appropriations should always recommend the appropriation of money beyond the amount that in its judgment is needed, we would bring in bills carrying twice the amount they should carry.

The gentleman says that I criticized the Social Security Board. I did; but I want to say that the responsibility is not that of the Board, nor of Mr. Altmeyer alone; the responsibility is yours and mine for turning funds over in lump sums to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars. You turned over $2,500,000,000 in the last 7 years to the C. C. C. organization in lump sums of $250,000,000 and $300,000,000.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Then why does not the committee earmark funds so as to prevent just such occurrences? I feel, knowing the gentleman for his fairness, that he personally would be in favor of such action.

Mr. ENGEL. The gentleman will find that in the short time at the disposal of the committee to conduct hearings on matters of such great extent and ramification it is impossible to earmark funds dollar for dollar unless it has been done from the very beginning of the hearings in the Bureau of the Budget. The gentleman will find that stated in the report.

Mr. O'CONNOR. When is the committee going to start to do that? I think it ought to be done. Administration costs should be cut to enable those sought to be benefited would secure a more just share, and I know the gentleman would favor that action.

Mr. ENGEL. The bill provides that expenditures under the several classes of objects of expenditures for which this appropriation is available shall not exceed by more than 10 percent the amounts estimated for such items in the Budget.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. I have yielded so much of my time and have so much ground to cover that I regret not to be able to yield further. I cannot yield.

I wish now to address myself to the matter of cars owned by the various agencies which come under the bill.

In going through the departments I asked for a report of all the cars owned by the various agencies which come under the bill—whether those cars were pooled or not pooled, the number of stenographers, and how many operated in the pool and how many were assigned individually. I also endeavored to learn whether or not automobiles were properly marked as required by law, and whether they were being used for personal and private use as prohibited by law. You will find rather interesting testimony on page 858, part 2, of the hearings. I asked Mr. Collins, the Budget officer for the Federal Security Agency, to furnish me with records, and prior to entering the committee room, in order to shorten the record, I discussed with him the question as to whether and to what extent bureaus and agencies under the Federal Security Agency were complying with the law. After considerable hesitation and reluctance, which, of course, came naturally, Mr. Collins showed me the correspondence which you will find on pages 858 and 859 of the hearings, pertaining to the lettering of official cars.

The C. C. C. cars operated in the Department of Agriculture and in the Department of the Interior are purchased with C. C. C. funds, and Mr. McNutt is charged with the responsibility of seeing that those cars are properly marked. In this matter I have no jurisdiction and no desire to enter into any question pertaining to the Department of the Interior and Department of Agriculture only insofar as these C. C. C. cars are concerned. This subcommittee is responsible for the appropriation for the purchase and operation of these cars and for its personnel. I found that these C. C. C. cars assigned to the Department of the Interior, in my judgment, were not properly marked as required by law. I call attention to the testimony on page 857:

Mr. ENGEL. Are all the cars that you have marked plainly for the Social Security Board and the Federal Security Agency, Mr. Collins?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes, sir. We got out a circular on November 30, 1939, calling attention to the provisions in the Treasury-Post Office bill which prohibits the use of Government cars for personal purposes. We also cited the code provision which requires that the name of the establishment be conspicuously painted on the cars. So far as I can learn, those provisions are being observed. We did, however, have a little difficulty with the C. C. C. cooperating Departments, Interior and Agriculture, misconstruing our circular as requiring additional painting being put on the cars, and the Secretary of the Interior objected also on the ground that the painting on the doors of the cars made them too conspicuous, so that their use after regular hours for official purposes might easily be misconstrued. The contention of the Interior Department is that the use of official tags, without painting of any kind on the body of the cars, should be sufficient.

Mr. ENGEL. Official tags without painting.

Mr. COLLINS. Without painting on the cars. That question is still up with the Interior Department. The Secretary of the Interior wrote the Administrator to the effect that he did not believe it would serve any useful purpose having painting put on the doors, in view of the fact that they had the official tags on the cars.

Mr. ENGEL. He wrote to the Administrator.

Mr. COLLINS. Yes. The letter was actually addressed to Mr. McEntee, Director of the C. C. C.

Mr. ENGEL. What does the Interior Department have to do with it?

Mr. COLLINS. This is in connection with the C. C. C. cars.

Mr. ENGEL. Does the Agriculture Department comply with that order?

Mr. COLLINS. The Agriculture Department is complying with it so far as we know, but the Secretary of the Interior wrote he did not think it was advisable, but there was too much room for misunderstanding where the cars were used outside of office hours on official business.

Mr. ENGEL. In other words, he didn't want the cars identified; and if they were identified, there might be some public reaction.

Mr. COLLINS. In justice to the Interior Department I might read exactly what they wrote.

Mr. ENGEL. I would be glad to have you do that.

Mr. COLLINS (reading from letter). "I object, in the first place, to any lettering being painted upon the body of passenger cars used by employees of this Department and, secondly, I object to the omission of the name of the Department of the Interior. Of ccurse, I have no particular objection to adding 'Federal Security Agency' to the lettering on the present special license tags which are now in use, and which identify the vehicle as Government-owned. If the lettering is to notify taxpayers that the car is an official one and is used for official business only, it can be done less conspicuously. The proposed lettering would undoubtedly prove embarrassing to many of our employees who must use their cars after regular working hours on official business in making important contacts, but the use of which might be misinterpreted by a casual observer. I use official Government cars on which purposely there is no lettering except the license tag, and I do not see why the employees of the Department of the Interior, even though paid from C. C. C. funds, should be inflicted with a form of advertising which I find objectionable for myself."

Mr. SHEPPARD. Who signed that letter?

Mr. COLLINS. It is signed by Harold L. Ickes.

Mr. ENGEL. Doesn't the law require him to mark it plainly? Have you a copy of the law there?

Mr. COLLINS. The circular quoted the law.

Mr. ENGEL. The circular issued by whom?

Mr. COLLINS. By the Federal Security Agency?

Mr. ENGEL. Read the circular—the law, I mean.

Mr. COLLINS (reading). "No part of any money appropriated by any act shall be used for purchasing, maintaining, driving, or operating any carriage or vehicle * * * for the personal or official use of any officer or employee of any of the executive departments or other Government establishments at Washington, D. C., unless * * * all such carriages and vehicles so procured and used for official purposes shall have conspicuously painted thereon at all times the full name of the executive department or other branch of the public service to which the same belong, and in the service of which the same are used."

Mr. TARVER. I want to know how any department of the Government gets around that requirement of the law, and how you can use any funds for the operation and the maintenance of these vehicles in any department without complying with the law?

Mr. COLLINS. As I read the law, the money is not available for operating these cars unless they are painted.

Mr. TARVER. And as a matter of fact they are not, in the Interior Department, so painted.

Mr. COLLINS. The Interior Department contends that the official tag "Department of the Interior" is sufficient.

Mr. TARVER. But its contention in that respect is patently erroneous. I am just wondering whether or not the Interior Department is disregarding the law. Is it, as a matter of fact, disregarding the law?

Mr. COLLINS. I only have this letter from Secretary Ickes.

Mr. TARVER. What about the Civilian Conservation Corps funds administered by the Interior Department?

Mr. COLLINS. The question arose because of the issuance of this circular by the Federal Security Agency, calling attention to the two provisions of the law and designating the type of painting that should be placed on cars that did not carry painting at the present time. After a meeting with the director of the Civilian Conservation Corps this circular was passed out for compliance insofar as cars or equipment purchased from the C. C. C. funds was concerned, and the response was that which I have just read.

Mr. TARVER. Of course, the Secretary objects to the law, but that does not have any effect, that does not change the law, and I am wondering whether or not the law has been carried out in the Civilian Conservation Corps motor equipment, in the Civilian Conservation Corps acting under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. COLLINS. Well, it would appear from this reply of the Secretary of the Interior that so far as passenger cars are involved it is not being complied with.

Mr. TARVER. How is he getting the money which is not available unless the requirement is met?

Mr. COLLINS. You will recall when the Civilian Conservation Corps estimates were under consideration, it was shown that a large sum of money is transferred for expenditure under the supervision of the Department of the Interior, and they are enabled to purchase their equipment in that way.

Mr. TARVER. But the Comptroller General should be notified that they are not complying with that requirement made by Congress, in which event those funds would not be available.

Mr. COLLINS. That is correct.

Mr. TARVER. I am wondering if it isn't your duty, on account of the position you hold with the Federal Security Agency, to call that matter to the attention of the Comptroller General.

Mr. COLLINS. The matter has not yet been disposed of with the Interior Department. It will be further discussed with the Interior Department to the end that all cars will be properly marked. When the discussion was first had with the cooperating departments, they reached the conclusion that the Federal Security Agency was requiring a lot of painting to go on the cars in addition to the painting already on the different types of automotive equipment. "Federal Security Agency, Civilian Conservation Corps, official" was what we suggested to go on the cars.

Mr. TARVER. But this restriction as to the use of money carried in the appropriation bill for the operation and maintenance of motor equipment has been effective throughout this fiscal year, has it not?

Mr. COLLINS. That is taken from the code. This law has been in effect for a great many years.

Mr. TARVER. How have they been able to get money without having their cars marked as required by law?

Mr. COLLINS. If the Department of the Interior purchased an automobile and did not paint it, unless the Comptroller General sent a representative to investigate, the matter would not be brought to light. If you saw a car on the street unpainted, unless you looked at the official tag, you could not identify it as a Government automobile.

Mr. TARVER. In other words, they were using the funds in violation of the law.

Mr. COLLINS. That is my opinion.

Mr. SHEPPARD. They have a legal department down there to keep the Department posted as to the enactments by the Congress, do they not?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Is there any excuse that you know of as to why there should not be a proper compliance with that law?

Mr. COLLINS. Not that I know of.

I feel that Mr. Collins was placed in rather a difficult position, but his testimony was absolutely fair, and I want to commend him for the courage he had in furnishing this committee with the facts upon request.

OFFICE OF EDUCATION—FILM SERVICE

Time does not permit me to discuss fully either this or the remaining departments. I can only point to the high spots. You will find on page 284, part 2, of the hearings some interesting facts. The President allocated $331,000 for this service which is now under the Office of Education. This money was all emergency and relief money, and not one dime was spent for relief. You will find on page 299 the testimony of Mr. Mercey, Assistant Director of Film Service, as follows:

Mr. ENGEL. This $331,000 is W. P. A. and P. W. A. money?

Mr. MERCEY. For the most part that is correct.

Mr. ENGEL. You didn't hire any W. P. A. labor on it at all, did you?

Mr. MERCEY. We didn't hire relief workers as such.

Mr. ENGEL. In other words, this $331,000 did not go for the purpose for which Congress appropriated it, that is, for relief, did it, or for W. P. A. workers, people who were in need? It did not go for that purpose, did it?

Mr. MERCEY. There are a good many extenuating justifications that might be made——

Mr. ENGEL. Wait a minute. Please answer. It did not go for that purpose, did it? You can justify it if you want to. It did not, did it?

Mr. MERCEY. If you answer it strictly, I should say that you are quite correct.

Mr. ENGEL. And out of this $331,000 you paid these per diem employees. How much per diem did you pay out?

Mr. MERCEY. I don't have that figure.

Mr. ENGEL. How much did they get per day?

Mr. MERCEY. Our per diem people receive from $5 to $25 per day.

Mr. ENGEL. From $5 to $25 per day?

Mr. MERCEY. That is correct.

Mr. ENGEL. Plus expenses?

Mr. MERCEY. Plus traveling expenses, yes, which is the regular Government traveling expense—subsistence.

Mr. ENGEL. That was paid out of these funds?

Mr. MERCEY. That is correct.

You will find on pages 290, 291, 292, and 293 a table showing the positions and the amount that each person received out of this relief money. On page 290 you will find that the director received a salary of $10,000. The production consultant and technical consultant received $9,000 a year each. Each of their salaries were $25 per day when actually employed. A chief of photo research received $4,600 a year. A motion-picture director received $25 per diem or an aggregate sum of $4,350. Another motion-picture director in the A. A. A. received $5,900 working on a $25 per diem basis.

I learned of a picture which this agency made called The Fight for Life. Mr. Mercey testified, on page 300 of the hearings, that this picture cost $150,000. I have an itemized statement furnished me by the Service showing that it cost $178,000. I call attention to the further testimony, on page 300, which reads as follows:

Mr. ENGEL. Were those films that you took, showing the bad housing conditions, taken from actual life?
Mr. MERCEY. Yes, sir.
Mr. ENGEL. Were those people who were walking around actors, or were they people that you just got out there to take their picture?
Mr. MERCEY. We employed in the production of that picture seven professional actors, who played the principal parts.
Mr. ENGEL. What I mean is, in taking the picture, the people who were walking around those houses back and forth.
Mr. MERCEY. Well, many of them.
Mr. ENGEL. For instance, you have in that picture a scene of people going to a garbage can and taking out food. Were those people actually going there, or were they actors playing that part?
Mr. MERCEY. I will have to ask our production manager, Mr. Atkins.
Mr. ATKINS. Those are actual documentary scenes. They were not staged.
Mr. ENGEL. They were not staged? The people actually went there and got that food out of the garbage can?
Mr. ATKINS. That is true.
Mr. ENGEL. I am amazed.
Mr. HOUSTON. I have seen that right here in Washington in the last 18 months.
Mr. ENGEL. I am amazed to learn that after 7 years of the abundant life under the New Deal we still have people eating out of garbage cans.

I am not discussing the picture. Personally, I saw nothing objectionable. However, I am criticizing the spending of $178,000 of relief money for one picture, paying salaries of $5,000, $9,000, and $10,000 per year out of relief money for a film service, not one dollar of which went to any person on relief. Is it not strange that after 7 years of the New Deal, after spending $60,000,000,000 of the taxpayers' money, after trying all the quack remedies under the sun, we should take $178,000 of relief money which Congress set aside to feed the hungry and clothe the naked and make a picture in order that we might tell those people that after 7 years of the abundant life under the New Deal they are still eating out of garbage cans?

WAGE AND HOUR DIVISION

I do not have time to discuss the Wage and Hour Division or to go into it in detail. Many Members of this House, including myself, were very much disturbed over the opinions of the legal department of the Wage and Hour Division interpreting that act of Congress, particularly as it pertains to the area of production. You will find in the hearings the complete examination on the subject, by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] and me, of Mr. McNulty, the chief counsel.

In going through this department I naturally made inquiries about the Legal Division. I was amazed to learn that the man who is in charge of the department which writes the legal opinions interpreting this law, including the opinions interpreting the area-of-production clause—opinions which affect every industry from United States Steel down to the little farmer's warehouse on the corner—that man is 29 years old, was graduated from Harvard Law School in 1935, had been out of school for 4 years, and was placed in charge of this most important department.

Mr. O'CONNOR. At that point, may I ask, does this gentleman you have referred to—the young lawyer—have to try any lawsuits in connection with carrying on the affairs of the department?

Mr. ENGEL. No; but he has to construe the laws. Let me be frank. I have potato warehouses and bean warehouses in my district. Here is a farmer who grows potatoes or beans on an 80-acre farm. He takes those potatoes or beans in a wagon with steel tires and an old team 3 miles to a farmer warehouse owned by farmers in a town of 150 people, and because that warehouse has more than 7 employees they say that warehouse is not in the area of production—that Congress did not intend to exempt that case. For heaven's sake, if Congress did not intend to exempt that warehouse, what did it intend to exempt? Those are the kind of opinions you get, and you have hundreds of them. The Secretary of Labor referred to other cases. I call your attention to page 416, part 1, of the hearings, which reads, in part, as follows:

Mr. ENGEL. On page 33 of your justifications, you have the legal branch, opinion section. You have there an assistant general counsel at $6,500. That is a man who has charge of the opinion section of the Legal Division; is that correct?
Mr. MCNULTY. That is correct.
Mr. ENGEL. What is his name?
Mr. MCNULTY. Joseph Rauh.
Mr. ENGEL. How old is he?
Mr. MCNULTY. Twenty-nine, I believe.
Mr. ENGEL. He told me he was 29 years old. He was graduated from the Harvard Law School in 1935. What legal experience did he have since graduating from the law school?
Mr. MCNULTY. I think he first came to the Securities and Exchange Commission. Then he was a law clerk or secretary, whatever it is called, to Mr. Justice Cardozo.

On page 417 you will find his record. He was a law clerk to Justice Cardozo for about 18 months. He was law clerk to Justice Frankfurter for 1 month. On February 26, 1939, he came to the Wage and Hour Division as chief of the opinion section of the legal branch, and on June 30, 1939, 4 years after he was graduated, he was made assistant general counsel of the Wage and Hour Division at a salary of $6,500 and placed in charge of the opinion section. On page 417 you will also find the following testimony:

Mr. ENGEL. Has this man ever tried a lawsuit?
Mr. MCNULTY. No.

There is no doubt but that this is a bright young man, perhaps a brilliant young man, idealistic; but what we need in the opinion section of the Wage and Hour Division is somebody with a little realism and less idealism, and I submit that regardless as to this man's training or mind, no man 29 years old, out of law school 4 years, who has never tried a lawsuit, ought to be put in charge of a department which so vitally affects not only the various industries and corporations in the country but affects millions of farmers, their employees, and workers. I submit that a man of his age, brilliant though he may be, does not have that mature judgment that comes only with age, that one must have to handle this difficult department.

NATIONAL YOUTH ADMINISTRATION

I went through the National Youth Administration, and while I was not able to complete the work there because of lack of time, I have some interesting facts. I found there, a teletype pounding away, giving the news of the country. I asked Mr. Williams' assistant in just what way that teletype helped to serve the boys and girls in your district and in my district. I found no answer. When Mr. Williams appeared before the committee, I asked him the question as appears on page 621 of the hearings, part 2:

Mr. ENGEL. In what way does the use of the teletype help to give service to the students down in the country?
Mr. WILLIAMS. I think one could defend the teletype, but I am not going to make any attempt to. I will just tell you without attempting to argue that I have discontinued it.
Mr. TARVER. Then you ought to save $900 there?
Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. Chairman, $900 saved in this one little item will pay $15 a month for 10 months in the year to six boys or girls going to school.

Again, I asked each department to furnish me with a list of the cars that they had, together with any other information. The N. Y. A. had furnished me with the name of a Ford, Chevrolet, and a Pontiac. Imagine my amazement and surprise when, in walking across from the new to the Old House Office Building, I found a beautiful new Packard parked at the curb, with a colored chauffeur at the wheel. On the door was painted the name "Federal Security Agency, National Youth Administration." I asked the chauffeur whose car it was. He told me that it was Mr. Williams' car.

In the testimony, on page 364, Mr. Williams testified that he thought he was buying a Buick but when the car arrived, it was a Packard; that he paid $722 for the car, and that the delivery price was not in excess of $1,200. I, of course, do not question that testimony, but I am wondering whether he got the colored chauffeur who sat in the car for half price.

I drive a 1938 Ford. If you will examine it carefully, you will not find any colored chauffeur at the wheel. If you will look at the cars parked in front of the office buildings, you will find that very few Members of Congress have Packards, and certainly few of them have chauffeurs. They drive their own cars. This chauffeur undoubtedly gets from $1,200 to $1,400 a year. A salary of $1,200 a year, not including expenses, will pay $15 a month to 8 boys or 8 girls for 10 months while they are attending school. It is their money we are spending. I would suggest to Mr. Williams that he apply the same principle to the chauffeur that he applied to the teletype and save another $1,200.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In the gentleman's reference to cars operated by the C. C. C. and other agencies he referred to cars of subordinate officials being driven by chauffeurs.

Mr. ENGEL. Yes. I drive a 1938 Ford. If these men I refer to are being driven around by chauffeurs, they should not be.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman state just what he means by that?

Mr. ENGEL. He is not a Cabinet member.

Mr. O'CONNOR. But he is an officer of the Government.

Mr. ENGEL. But that is no reason why he should be furnished a chauffeur.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman is right, and I am not defending the practice. I am simply trying to show it is a practice that is followed which should be stopped.

Mr. ENGEL. The cost of the teletype and chauffeur comes out of the boys and girls of the country.

Mr. O'CONNOR. And that practice should be stopped.

Mr. ENGEL. Absolutely.

Mr. O'CONNOR. It seems to me it is the committee's duty to stop it by earmarking the funds.

Mr. ENGEL. I am sorry that time did not permit me to go into this department in more detail. I was impressed, however, with Mr. Williams' willingness to adopt suggestions made by the committee. These two items are small and perhaps of little importance, but I hope that it is not typical of other matters in the department. [Applause.]

Mr. ENGEL was granted leave to include in his remarks certain tables compiled by himself. Also, Mr. ENGEL was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ELLIS].

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, what I shall say will deal mostly with the Civilian Conservation Corps. I think that in all of the 7 years of the New Deal nothing has been thought out and inaugurated that has more completely met the overwhelming approval of the American people than the C. C. C. Its benefits are both direct and indirect; its benefits are both immediate and remote; its benefits no doubt will be felt even in the next half of this century.

Mr. Chairman, we have today in this country, 1,500 C. C. C. camps located in every State of the Union. Last year we appropriated for the Conservation Corps $295,000,000. With that figure we accommodated, roughly, 300,000 enrollees in this country. This year, under the estimates submitted to the committee, it is anticipated there will be 1,227 C. C. C. camps compared with the present 1,500. Of course, I know the committee has figured out that 55 camps more may be operated by reducing the overhead. The expenditure is $230,000,000 compared with $295,000,000, and the number of enrollees to be accommodated this year will be 245,400 compared with 304,000 during the present year.

Breaking this down into percentages, we find that the $230,000,000 which stands as the figure in this bill, is 77.9 percent of the $295,000,000 appropriated last year; but we find that the number of enrollees that will be taken care of under the present bill compared with last year's bill in percentage is not 77.9 but 70.2 percent. In other words, Mr. Chairman, we are taking a bigger cut off the boys in these camps by, roughly, 8 percent than we are taking off of the top of the structure. Surely no one can argue that is fair, if the present system has been working well, and we think it has been. I am sure the same thing has happened to you, Mr. Chairman, that has happened to me and to every Member of Congress. Since the reduction became known you have been receiving requests from your States and districts asking you to restore the cut. Members of the Senate have been receiving those same requests, and the Department has been receiving them. The reason is that the American people do not favor this reduction in the C. C. C.

The State of Arkansas passed a resolution, the State Planning Board of Arkansas and the State Parks Commission of Arkansas passed a resolution, requesting that Congress or the administration, as the case may be, see to it that these proposed reductions in the C. C. C. will be proportionate with the camps instead of eliminating enough camps to take up the reduction, which seems to be a fair proposition.

The day before yesterday I introduced a bill, H. R. 8975, to do that very thing. If I could properly offer such an amendment to this bill without its being subject to a point of order I would certainly do so. You and I would not contend, if we were going to cut relief half in two or cut off 22 percent, as is being done in this bill, that we should cut off relief entirely in some counties and continue the status quo in other counties. We would not contend that. I hope that someone will offer an amendment; and if no one else does, I believe that before the consideration of this bill is completed I shall do so, to increase this item $50,000,000. I understand from talking with the Director of the C. C. C. that $50,000,000 would do the job. This would still be $10,000,000 under the present figure, but he believes they could get by on $50,000,000 and leave intact all the camps that are now in existence.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIS. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. May I say that the gentleman is making a very fine and informative speech in support of the C. C. C. camps.

Mr. ELLIS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I believe the C. C. C. camps have made more lasting and beneficial improvements than have been made by any other department in connection with conservation and relief work. May I say to the gentleman that if he or any other Member offers an amendment such as he suggests I shall give it my hearty support.

Mr. ELLIS. I thank the gentleman.

Along the line of what the gentleman was speaking of, may I read from the report of the committee some of the things of value which the committee states the C. C. C. has done in this country? The committee states that the C. C. C. has planted in this country more than 1,700,000,000 forest trees. Surely that is adding tremendously to the wealth of this Nation. It is not an expenditure; it is a capital investment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the gentleman will yield further, may I point out that I have had the personal experience of seeing great forest fires raging in the forests of my own State and being eventually put out by the C. C. C. boys, who were driven in there by Army trucks, and did that work at the risk of their lives. By doing this they saved a tremendous amount of capital wealth to the country in the form of these great and magnificent virgin forests.

Mr. ELLIS. The gentleman from Montana has in his State a number of these forest camps, I believe fifty-some altogether, camps of all different branches of the Government. The committee has listed the very activity of which the gentleman speaks as one of the great values of the C. C. C. The committee says that fire-hazard reduction has been prosecuted on nearly 2,000,000 acres, that 75,000 miles of telephone lines have been constructed, I presume mostly in the forests, and that 109,000 miles of truck trails and minor trails have been completed, with nearly 500,000 miles maintained. The committee also states that saving-check dams numbering nearly 5,000,000 have been built to prevent erosion. Think of it; 5,000,000 saving-check dams. This again adds to the capital wealth of this Nation and is not an expenditure. I believe we all agree that the total cost of the C. C. C. in this country when offset by the values which it has added to the wealth of this Nation is nothing.

Some of these days the boys and girls who are of the age of the boys now in these camps are going to take over this country, and some of these days we are going to see youth movements in this country much like those on the continent of Europe unless we do something about the boys who are today unemployed.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIS. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman uses the phrase "some of these days." Does not the gentleman believe that when in the future we read the biographies of some of our great men of the future we will find that in their early days they put in time at a C. C. C. camp? Just as we read in the biographies today of men who were Spanish-American War veterans and turned out to be great businessmen; are we not making great businessmen and great leaders in these C. C. C. camps?

Mr. ELLIS. Yes, indeed. I also believe, I may say to the gentleman, that if the day ever comes in this country when the boys who are today walking the streets, and have nothing to do and cannot find anything to do, get in the majority, that is the day American democracy will no longer be safe.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Does not the gentleman believe it is a great education in itself for these boys to be transported from the cities to the newly developed sections of the country where they can learn to build roads and learn to crib and handle timber and do other useful things, such as running rock drills? I may say to the gentleman that in my section men who learned to run rock drills in the C. C. C. camps are now in demand in the mines at $5 a day, and the employers are glad to get them. I can cite one case where five boys have gone out of the camps and have been taken in as expert machine drillers by the mines of Idaho.

Mr. ELLIS. What the gentleman says is in partial answer to the statements of the gentleman who preceded me, who was talking about the overhead of experts in these camps. I sincerely believe it would do no good at all toward helping these boys get along in the world merely to segregate them in camps and keep them there and pay them so much a month. They would be worse off when they came out, perhaps. But when you put men in these camps who are trained, who are expert carpenters, expert concrete mixers, expert steel workers, experts in every line, under whom the boys may learn a trade, then you are helping to educate these boys and make them useful citizens, and they will not join Communist movements in this country.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. It is my observation that the practical men who go out and handle these boys and teach them to operate machinery and follow other trades are of more value to the rising generation than are some of our highest-paid college professors.

Mr. ELLIS. They are doing a great work.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for another observation?

Mr. ELLIS. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The Government of the United States is spending a tremendous amount of money for the purpose of conservation of our natural resources. I have observed the work of these C. C. C. boys, particularly in the forests. They are employed along the line of building roads in the forests, marking out and building trails in virgin forests, the purpose of this being to enable people to get into the forests during these great forest fires, so as to put out the fires and save these great millions of acres of fine timber in the forest regions. Now, it seems to me it is penny wise and pound foolish to curtail this expenditure or to cut down this appropriation, thereby taking the chance of losing the millions of acres of splendid forest trees. We are getting more than value received for this outlay of money.

Mr. ELLIS. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

In conclusion, I think we have done the same thing with N. Y. A. that we have done with the C. C. C. We have made an unwise reduction. They, too, like the C. C. C., have done a great work in this country. Much has been done to help the youth of this Nation, much has been done to stabilize the unrest that did exist and will still exist among the youth.

I am sure the administration was sincere in recommending this cut, I am sure the committee was wholly sincere in recommending the cut, but I am also sure that if you and I feel that it is the overwhelming opinion of the American people whom we represent that these agencies should not be thus reduced, then it becomes our duty to endeavor to retain them at the proper status without these drastic reductions. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM].

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, the American people will be astonished and shocked to learn of the existence of a joint agreement between the United States and Great Britain—secretly negotiated and relating to joint control over strategically located islands in the Pacific Ocean—which in its implications amounts to a political alliance of far-reaching and dangerous consequences.

The agreement relates to the Canton and Enderbury Islands of the Phoenix group located some 1,912 miles southwest of Hawaii and some 1,316 miles southeast of the Japanese mandated islands.

The agreement, which has the force and effect of a treaty and by its terms is to endure for 50 years, is the fruit of a controversy between Great Britain and ourselves with respect to the ownership of these islands and rests upon diplomatic interchanges between the two Governments which have never been made public, and which the State Department now refuses to disclose to Members of Congress.

The facts evidence that President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Hull have been guilty of collusive action in entering into this alliance with Great Britain in relation to these islands, and that secret diplomacy has dominated the situation from start to finish.

In March, 1937 the British Government took formal and legal possession of these islands. A year later, after our State Department had had secret correspondence with Great Britain, the United States, according to the press, seized the islands, asserting ownership.

It is manifestly absurd, in view of Secretary Hull's repeatedly declared policy of "parallel action" with Great Britain, to suppose that the United States seized these islands claimed by Great Britain, which act in itself was an act of war, without some previous understanding with Great Britain.

Here was a situation of conflicting claims of ownership which obviously called for arbitration, and had good faith and honesty of purpose governed the action of the United States arbitration would have been sought; but instead there was more secret negotiation with Great Britain, and in August, 1938 the issuance of a joint communiqué which announced that the two Governments had "agreed to set up a regime for the use in common of these islands."

The next step, so far as the public is concerned, was the exchange of joint notes in April, 1939 between Secretary of State Hull and the British Ambassador which purported to recite an agreement respecting the joint control of the two Governments over these two islands for civil aviation. One of the vices of this agreement was the provision whereby the two Governments may secretly agree to use the islands for any other purpose.

If an enemy of Great Britain should attack these islands, the United States, having joint control over them, would have to join Great Britain in their defense, thereby becoming involved in war. Such an arrangement constitutes not only a political alliance but, what is more, a military alliance, inasmuch as even the armament of the islands could be agreed upon secretly by the two Governments.

The United States has no such arrangement with any other nation.

The United States is being deliberately entangled in Asia for British political purposes. British economic interests in Asia are 10 times greater than those of the United States.

This alliance was closely followed by our notice to Japan of termination of treaty relations, a move manifestly in accord with British policy in the Far East. Now we have threats of embargoes by the United States of trade with Japan and threats by Japan of retaliation, all of which are the seeds of war.

The making of secret commitments which cannot be disclosed to the people or to officials of the Government is the policy of dictators. President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Hull make a fateful mistake if they believe that when loyal Americans, not hyphenated Americans who put British interests ahead of American interests, obtain control of this Government there will not be an investigation of this political alliance and of other political commitments made in the interest of Great Britain.

I shall now read the correspondence between the State Department and myself in relation to Canton and Enderbury Islands:

APRIL 13, 1939.

The Honorable GREEN H. HACKWORTH,
Legal Adviser, Department of State,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HACKWORTH: I note in the press that there has been an exchange of notes between Secretary Hull and the British Ambassador making a 50-year agreement for "the joint control of the United States and Great Britain" of Canton and Enderbury Islands, part of the Phoenix group of coral islands lying midway between Hawaii and Australia.

Will you kindly give me a short résumé of the facts in the situation which led to this agreement, including advice concerning the discovery of these islands?

With appreciation of your attention and with cordial personal regards, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 21, 1939.

The Honorable GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. TINKHAM: I have your letter of April 13, 1939, in regard to Canton and Enderbury Islands of the Phoenix group in the Pacific Ocean.

I am not in a position to state who were the discoverers of these two islands. However, they were known to American whalers before 1828.

Without entering into details concerning the claim of the United States to the two islands, I may state that Enderbury and Canton, under the name of Mary's, were, along with other islands, included in the lists of guano islands appertaining to the United States issued by the Treasury Department. These lists are printed in Moore's International Law Digest, volume 1, pages 567–568. On December 31, 1859, Lewis Cass, Secretary of State, issued to the Phoenix Guano Co. a guano certificate covering Enderbury and certain other islands. On March 3, 1938, the President by Executive order placed Canton and Enderbury Islands under the control and jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior for administrative purposes.

The British Government has also claimed jurisdiction over these two and other islands in the Phoenix group, and the British order in council of March 18, 1937, provided for the ncorporation of the islands in the Gilbert and Ellice Island colony. This Government has not acceded to the British claims. In view of their conflicting claims, the two Governments, by an exchange of notes on April 6, 1939, agreed, without prejudice to their respective claims to Canton and Enderbury Islands, to a joint control over these two islands.

A copy of the Department's press release, No. 129, of April 6, 1939, containing the text of this agreement is enclosed.

Sincerely yours,

GREEN H. HACKWORTH,
Legal Adviser.

(Enclosure: Press release No. 129.)

MAY 31, 1939.

The Honorable GREEN H. HACKWORTH,
Legal Adviser, Department of State, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HACKWORTH: I trust you will excuse my delay in thanking you for your communication of April 21 in regard to Canton and Enderbury Islands of the Phoenix group in the Pacific Ocean (your reference Le 811.0141 Phoenix group/122).

In your letter you refer to a list of guano islands printed in Moore's International Law Digest, volume 1, pages 567–568. The list of guano islands in Moore's International Law Digest is followed by detailed information concerning various islands as to which correspondence had taken place. There does not appear to have been any international discussion regarding the islands particularly mentioned above at the time of the publication of the Digest of International Law in 1906. Were there any international discussions regarding these islands previous to the recent discussions which resulted in the agreement of "joint control" by the United States and Great Britain? What is the evidence?

In your letter you state: "On March 3, 1938, the President, by Executive order, placed Canton and Enderbury Islands under the control and jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior for administrative purposes." But you also state that the British Government by an Order in Council of March 18, 1937, provided for the incorporation of Canton and Enderbury Islands "and other islands in the Phoenix group * * * in the Gilbert and Ellice Island colony." You further state that the Government of the United States "has not acceded to the British claims," but that, in view of their conflicting claims, the two Governments, by an exchange of notes on April 6, 1939, "agreed without prejudice to their respective claims to Canton and Enderbury Islands, to a joint control over these two islands."

Taking these statements as a whole, it appears that the President's Executive order placing Canton and Enderbury Islands "under the control and jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior for administrative purposes" was issued a year after the British Government had by Order in Council incorporated them in the Gilbert and Ellice Island colony. My question is: Was any correspondence on the subject exchanged between March 18, 1937, and March 3, 1938? You make no statement in relation to this.

Of course, the British Foreign Office has a copy of Moore's International Law Digest, and those who are familiar with the work and use it may be supposed to know that it contains a list of the islands which are considered as "appertaining to the United States," under the Guano Islands Act of August 18, 1856.

If we assume that the British Government possessed such information, it is natural to infer that it had a particular reason for undertaking to assert sovereignty over the islands in question. Possibly they saw fit to assume that the islands had been abandoned by the United States and took the chances of acting upon that assumption. However, in your letter to me it does not expressly appear that when the Executive order of March 3, 1938, was issued the Department of State was acquainted with the Order in Council of March 18, 1937. Will you kindly inform me whether or not the Department of State was acquainted at that time with the Order in Council of March 18, 1937?

You do not state in your letter to me what is meant by "joint control." Will you kindly elucidate this point?

If the "joint control" is meant for military purposes—and I wish to ask whether or not it is, and if it is alleged that it is not, what prevents it from being so—let me observe that an embarrassing situation might arise in case the parties should not be acting in harmony; and the embarrassment would not be lessened if their interests and their aims should positively conflict. Such a predicament is always possible between parties that are independent and equal.

With appreciation of your kind attention and with cordial personal regards, I remain

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 9, 1939.

The Honorable GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. TINKHAM: In response to the inquiries contained in your letter of May 31, received June 6, 1939, concerning Canton and Enderbury Islands, you are informed that between March 18, 1937, and March 3, 1938, correspondence was exchanged between the United States and Great Britain concerning their divergent views respecting sovereignty over these islands, and this Government was furnished a copy of the British Order in Council of March 3, 1937, to which you refer. This correspondence has not been made public, and I am not, therefore, in a position to discuss it in detail.

The nature of the joint control to be exercised over the islands by the two Governments is indicated by the exchange of notes of April 6, 1939, the texts of which are embodied in the Department's press release No. 129 of April 6 last, a copy of which has already been furnished you, but another copy of which is enclosed for your convenience.

You will note that paragraph 5 stipulates that the use of any part of either of the islands or their territorial waters for aviation purposes, except as therein agreed upon, or for any other purpose shall be the subject of agreement between the two Governments.

Sincerely yours,

GREEN H. HACKWORTH,
Legal Adviser.

(Enclosure: Press release No. 129, April 6, 1939.)

JULY 10, 1939.

The Honorable GREEN H. HACKWORTH,
Legal Adviser, Department of State, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HACKWORTH: I regret that the press of many urgent matters has so long delayed my writing you to thank you for your letter of June 9, 1939, concerning Canton and Enderbury Islands (your reference Le 811.0141 Phoenix group/140).

In your letter you stated "that between March 18, 1937, and March 3, 1938, correspondence was exchanged between the United States and Great Britain concerning their divergent views respecting sovereignty over these islands, and this Government was furnished a copy of the British Order in Council of March 3, 1937, to which you refer. This correspondence has not been made public, and I am not, therefore, in a position to discuss it in detail."

May I see the correspondence in question if I come personally to the Department?

Mr. Hull's note of April 6, 1939, proposed an agreement which the British Ambassador's note accepted in the terms in which it was presented to him; and this agreement, which embraces aviation in the most comprehensive terms, is to last for 50 years. During all those years the islands are to be subject to "a special joint ad hoc regime, the details of which shall be determined by the two Governments in consultation from time to time." Moreover, while it is specifically provided (pars. 3, 4, 5) that during those 50 years only civil aviation companies incorporated in the United States or in British jurisdiction shall be permitted to use the islands for scheduled air services, yet it is stipulated that the use of them for "any other purpose," aviation or otherwise, shall be the subject of agreement between the two Governments. From this it appears to follow that, as neither Government admits the other's claim of sovereignty over the islands, they have agreed jointly to use them in common, to the exclusion of all other powers. In the papers that have been disclosed there is nothing to show that a third power has advanced a competing claim of title. On the other hand, as each of the two joint users claims title, it would seem logically to follow that if a power at war with only one of them should attack the islands, both would combine to repel the attack, and in this aspect the agreement would in effect operate as an alliance.

With cordial personal regards, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

The Honorable GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. TINKHAM: In response to your letter of July 10, 1939, I regret to inform you that exchange of communications with Great Britain with respect to Canton and Enderbury Islands could not be made available for your inspection without the consent of the British Government.

This correspondence does not amplify or modify in any way the information in regard to the joint control over these islands, contained in press releases No. 384 of August 10, 1938, and No. 129 of April 6, 1939, copies of which you already have.

Sincerely yours,

GREEN H. HACKWORTH.

JULY 27, 1939.

The Honorable GREEN H. HACKWORTH,
Legal Adviser, Department of State, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HACKWORTH: I thank you for your letter of July 25, 1939, your reference Le 811.0141 Phoenix group/144.

I have before me a map of the Pacific Ocean published in December of 1936 by the National Geographic Society. I note on this map that Christmas Island carries the notation, "United States and Great Britain." Will you please explain what the situation is in relation to this island and how such a connection as that indicated came about, and when?

With appreciation of your attention and with cordial personal regards, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 3, 1939.

The Honorable GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. TINKHAM: I have your letter of July 27, 1939, in which you refer to a map of the Pacific Ocean published in December 1936 by the National Geographic Society on which Christmas Island carries the notation "United States and Great Britain," and request to be informed of the situation with respect to this island.

As you doubtless are aware the National Geographic Society is not a governmental institution and its maps are not official publications of this Government.

According to the Department's information, Christmas Island was discovered by Capt. James Cook, a British subject, on December 24, 1777. Capt. John Stetson, of New Haven, Conn., reported having landed on Christmas Island from the American ship Equater on February 15, 1825.

The island has been occupied at various times by American citizens and British subjects. It was first occupied by Americans about 1858 and was bonded as an American guano island on December 29, 1859. Christmas was included in the lists of guano islands issued by the Treasury Department. See in this connection Moore's International Law Digest, volume I, page 567. You may also desire to read the discussion of Christmas Island commencing on page 572 of that volume and also to see the exchange of correspondence referred to therein between the United States and Great Britain concerning this island which is published in the Foreign Relations of the United States 1888, volume 1, pages 712, 713, 727–728.

The island is now reported to be occupied by the Central Pacific Coconut Plantations, Ltd., a British corporation, under a lease from the Brtish Government which grants the use of the island for 87 years from January 1, 1914. By a British Order in Council dated July 30, 1919, the boundaries of the Gilbert and Ellice Islands colony were extended to include Christmas Island. No protest in respect to the British Order in Council of 1919 has been made by the Government of the United States.

Sincerely yours,

GREEN H. HACKWORTH.

AUGUST 5, 1939.

The Honorable GREEN H. HACKWORTH,
Legal Adviser, Department of State, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HACKWORTH: I thank you for your letter of August 3, 1939, your reference Le 811.0141 Phoenix Group 144.

May I ask whether there are any other islands than Canton and Enderbury Islands, or any other territory, which are owned in common by Great Britain and the United States?

May I ask you further whether you know of any other similar arrangement in the world, under which islands or territory are under joint ownership or control of two or more countries? Of course, I do not mean islands or territory some or part of which is under the jurisdiction of one country and some or part of which is under the jurisdiction of another country.

With cordial good wishes, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 22, 1939.

The Honorable GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. TINKHAM: In the absence of Mr. Hackworth I acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated August 5, 1939, addressed to him, inquiring whether there are any other islands than Canton and Enderbury Islands, or any other territory, which are owned in common by Great Britain and the United States.

As you will note from the copy of the Department's press releases transmitted herewith, the islands of Canton and Enderbury are not "owned in common" by Great Britain and the United States, but provision is made for "a joint control over these islands" by the two Governments. There are no islands or other territory which are owned in common by Great Britain and the United States.

With respect to your inquiry whether there is any other similar arrangement in the world under which islands or territory are under joint ownership or control of two or more countries, you are advised that the New Hebrides are under the joint administration of Great Britain and France, pursuant to the British-French Convention of October 20, 1906, which was superseded by a protocol of August 6, 1914, and extended until modified by common agreement by an exchange of notes of December 15, 1922, and December 25, 1922, between the British and French Governments. Administrative regulations with respect to the New Hebrides were approved by these Governments by an exchange of notes of August 29, 1907, amended by exchanges of notes dated December 15, 1931, and January 31, 1935.

Reference is also made to the British-Egyptian agreements of January 19 and July 10, 1899, which provide for the administration of Sudan. The status of Sudan as a condominium was reaffirmed by article 11 of the British-Egyptian Treaty of August 26, 1936.

You doubtless recall the general act providing for the neutrality and autonomous government of the Samoan Islands concluded at Berlin on June 14, 1889 (26 Stat. 1497), under which Great Britain, Germany, and the United States exercised jurisdiction over these islands. This general act was replaced by the convention respecting the Samoan Islands, concluded on December 2, 1899 (31 Stat. 1878), between the United States, Germany, and Great Britain.

Sincerely yours,

JOSEPH R. BAKER,
Acting Legal Adviser.

(Enclosure: Press releases.)

NOVEMBER 24, 1939.

JOSEPH R. BAKER, Esq.,
Assistant to the Legal Adviser, Department of State, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BAKER: Please accept my belated thanks for your letter of August 22, written in reply to a letter which I wrote to Mr. Hackworth on August 5 concerning questions in relation to Canton and Enderbury Islands. Had I not been obliged to spend considerable time out of Washington since the receipt of your letter, you would have heard from me much sooner in relation to its contents.

In your letter of August 22 you state that Canton and Enderbury Islands are not "owned in common" by Great Britain and the United States but that Great Britain and the United States agreed to "a joint control" by the two Governments. Your letter fails to show any distinction between common ownership and joint control. If the control does not mean ownership, it would be interesting to know by whom the islands are owned. You would I take it, be reluctant to admit that they are owned by the natives but controlled by Great Britain and the United States, because that would be hardly consistent with the exalted conception of "democracy" of which we now assume to be the glorified champion.

Your letter cites precedents for the assertion of joint control, and among them you mention the Sudan as a "condominium" reaffirmed by a British-Egyptian treaty of August 26, 1936. If you will consult Webster's Dictionary you will find "condominium" defined as "joint dominion or sovereignty," and specifically, in Roman law, as "joint ownership." Similar language will be found in other dictionaries. Moreover, no matter what we may call the joint occupation, it necessarily implies the right and the intention to defend it against the claim of any other power. It can hardly be supposed that if some third power, whether Germany or any other, should demand, not indeed the exclusive control, but a joint control of the islands with the two present occupants, the latter would feel that they were obliged to yield the claim without a fight. We have taken the ground without any physical occupation of the Latin American countries that we would defend them by force against occupation by any European power. I fancy that we should not have supposed our claim of protection and defense to be weakened if we had induced some other power to share the burden with us, or if we ourselves had actually assumed control of them.

You will understand the pertinency of the foregoing observations if you will read my earlier correspondence with Mr. Hackworth in relation to these islands.

With kindest regards, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 2, 1939.

The Honorable GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. TINKHAM: I have read with interest your letter of November 24, 1939, addressed to Mr. Joseph R. Baker in further relation to Canton and Enderbury Islands.

As you of course are aware, sovereignty and ownership are not synonymous terms. A State may have sovereignty over territory privately owned and even over territory owned by aliens. There has been no discussion regarding the actual ownership of the land comprising the islands in question. As heretofore indicated these islands are not owned in common by the United States and Great Britain, but are merely under the joint control or administration of the Governments of the two countries. The present situation is due to the fact that the two Governments having conflicting claims to sovereignty over Canton and Enderbury Islands, as a practical expedient and without prejudice to their respective claims, entered into the arrangement for joint control embodied in the exchange of notes of April 6, 1939, of which you have copies.

Sincerely yours,

GREEN H. HACKWORTH,
Legal Adviser.

DECEMBER 1, 1939.

The Honorable GREEN H. HACKWORTH,
Legal Adviser, Department of State, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HACKWORTH: In your letter of July 25, 1939 (your reference Le 811.0141 Phoenix Group/144), you stated:

"In response to your letter of July 10, 1939, I regret to inform you that exchange of communications with Great Britain with respect to Canton and Enderbury Islands could not be made available for your inspection without the consent of the British Government."

After carefully investigating the matter it is my understanding that prior to 1913 the publication of our diplomatic correspondence was kept up to date; that in our earliest days as a government, even when wars pervaded the entire globe, we published everything, and that we were in a position to do this freely because we had no secret commitments; that the annual publication of our diplomatic correspondence began during our Civil War, and that while that great conflict was going on, as many as four volumes were published in one year, and that their contents candidly and comprehensively covered the entire field of our foreign relations.

It would seem that since the era of "open covenants openly arrived at," proclaimed as an American policy in 1918–19, there have been secret commitments which cannot be disclosed to the people or to officials of the Government. The significance of this situation does not appear to have been grasped either by our people or by those who, as Senators and Representatives, act for them in the Congress. We read and hear the daily prattle about "dictatorships," but a dictatorship is nothing but a system under which an individual in an executive office disposes of the fate of a country and its people as he likes. Consequently, a country in which secret engagements are made, which are not to be disclosed to the legislature or the people without the consent of the other party, is necessarily living under a dictatorial regime. In my opinion, the acceptance of such a situation by the legislature does not mitigate the situation; on the contrary, it seems to me that the submission demonstrates that the legislature has abdicated its functions.

It would appear from the facts that the transaction between Great Britain and the United States with regard to Canton and Enderbury Islands constitutes an alliance; that arbitration, the classic method of settling disputed territorial ownership, has been carefully avoided in this case, just as it would be avoided in the case of a collusive transaction so that the true facts in the situation would not come to light. The apparent desire to conceal the true facts in this matter would seem clearly to support a charge of secret diplomacy. In the circumstances, it seems to me that there should be an independent and thorough examination of the transaction in question by the Congress.

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
April 6, 1939.

Confidential release for publication at 3 p. m., Eastern standard time, Thursday, April 6, 1939. Not to be previously published, quoted from, or used in any way

On August 11, 1938, the following joint communiqué was issued simultaneously in London and in Washington:

"The Governments of the United States and of the United Kingdom have agreed to set up a regime for the use in common of the islands of Canton and Enderbury in the Phoenix group and for the employment of these islands for purposes connected with international aviation and communication, with equal facilities for each party. The details of the regime will be determined in notes to be exchanged between the two Governments."

The Secretary of State made public today the texts of notes exchanged on Thursday, April 6, 1939, between the Government of the United States and the Government of the United Kingdom defining the future administration of the islands. The texts of the notes are as follows:

NOTE FROM THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO THE BRITISH AMBASSADOR IN WASHINGTON

APRIL 6, 1939.

EXCELLENCY: With reference to recent correspondence between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland concerning Canton and Enderbury Islands in the South Pacific Ocean, I have the honor to propose an agreement concerning these islands in the following terms:

1. "The Government of the United States and the Government of the United Kingdom, without prejudice to their respective claims to Canton and Enderbury Islands, agree to a joint control over these islands.

2. "The islands shall, during the period of joint control, be administered by a United States and a British official appointed by their respective Governments. The manner in which these two officials shall exercise the powers of administration reserved to them under this paragraph shall be determined by the two Governments in consultation as occasion may require.

3. "The islands shall, during the period of joint control, be subject to a special joint ad hoc regime the details of which shall be determined by the two Governments in consultation from time to time.

4. "The islands shall be available for communications and for use as airports for international aviation, but only civil aviation companies incorporated in the United States of America or in any part of the British Commonwealth of Nations shall be permitted to use them for the purpose of scheduled air services.

5. "The use of any part of either of the islands or their territorial waters for aviation purposes, except as herein agreed upon, or for any other purpose, shall be the subject of agreement between the two Governments.

6. "An airport may be constructed and operated on Canton Island by an American company or companies, satisfactory to the United States Government, which, in return for an agreed fee, shall provide facilities for British aircraft and British civil aviation companies equal to those enjoyed by United States aircraft and by such American company or companies. In case of dispute as to fees, or the conditions of use by British aircraft or by British civil aviation companies, the matter shall be settled by arbitration.

7. "The joint control hereby set up shall have a duration of 50 years from this day's date. If no agreement to the contrary is reached before the expiration of that period, the joint control shall continue thereafter until such time as it may be modified or terminated by the mutual consent of the two Governments."

I have the honor to suggest that if an agreement in the sense of the foregoing paragraphs is acceptable to the Government of the United Kingdom this note and Your Excellency's reply thereto in similar terms shall be regarded as placing on record the understanding arrived at between the two Governments concerning this matter.

Accept, Excellency, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

CORDELL HULL.

NOTE FROM THE BRITISH AMBASSADOR TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE

APRIL 6, 1939.

SIR: I have the honor to refer to your note of this day's date proposing an agreement between the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the Government of the United States of America on the subject of Canton and Enderbury Islands in the following terms:

"1. The Government of the United States and the Government of the United Kingdom, without prejudice to their respective claims to Canton and Enderbury Islands, agree to a joint control over these islands.

"2. The islands shall, during the period of joint control, be administered by a United States and a British official appointed by their respective Governments. The manner in which these two officials shall exercise the powers of administration reserved to them under this paragraph shall be determined by the two Governments in consultation as occasion may require.

"3. The islands shall, during the period of joint control, be subject to a special joint ad hoc regime, the details of which shall be determined by the two Governments in consultation from time to time.

"4. The islands shall be available for communications and for use as airports for international aviation, but only civil aviation companies incorporated in the United States of America or in any part of the British Commonwealth of Nations shall be permitted to use them for the purpose of scheduled air services.

"5. The use of any part of either of the islands or their territorial waters for aviation purposes, except as herein agreed upon, or for any other purpose, shall be the subject of agreement between the two Governments.

"6. An airport may be constructed and operated on Canton Island by an American company, or companies, satisfactory to the United States Government, which, in return for an agreed fee, shall provide facilities for British aircraft and British civil aviation companies equal to those enjoyed by United States aircraft and by such American company or companies. In case of dispute as to fees, or the conditions of use by British aircraft or by British civil aviation companies, the matter shall be settled by arbitration.

"7. The joint control hereby set up shall have a duration of 50 years from this day's date. If no agreement to the contrary is reached before the expiration of that period, the joint control shall continue thereafter until such time as it may be modified or terminated by the mutual consent of the two Governments."

I have the honor to inform you that an agreement in the terms of the foregoing paragraphs is acceptable to the Government of the United Kingdom, and that this note, and your note under reference, will be regarded as placing on record the understanding arrived at between the two Governments concerning this matter.

I have the honor to be, with the highest consideration, sir,

Your most obedient, humble servant,

R. C. LINDSAY.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY].

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire at this time to call the attention of the Members of the House to Senate bill 3046, the bill introduced by the distinguished senior Senator from New Mexico, the Honorable CARL A. HATCH, extending the provisions of the original Hatch Act to employees of State agencies which are financed, in whole or in part, from Federal funds.

There is no other measure before the Congress which so holds the interest of the American people, and has their universal commendation—rightfully so—as does this particular legislation.

The amendments proposed in this bill have been adopted by the other body of this Congress by a more than two-to-one vote. The Senate-approved measure is now before the Judiciary Committee of this House for consideration, and, I sincerely trust, its approval.

Mr. Chairman, I particularly direct this legislation to your attention because of rumors, I might say whispers, which, in the past few days, have continually grown in volume until they are reverberating through the Capitol, indicating an effort will be made to pigeonhole this bill in committee. I feel confident that the leadership and members of this House, recognizing the wishes of the people of the country whom they represent, will not tolerate or sanction any such action. The Members of this body are entitled to an opportunity to consider and approve, or disapprove, the bill and make known to the public their position, either for or against the measure.

I desire also, Mr. Chairman, to direct attention to the Gallup poll, as it appeared in the Washington Post of March 20, 1940. It is not my intention to single out any particular State and refer to it in any way that might be construed as derogatory. The Gallup poll, however, does have to do with the State of Pennsylvania, and it reveals some very interesting and, I believe, significant facts.

For instance, this poll, which has an excellent record for accuracy, shows in 1936 President Roosevelt carried the State with 58 percent of the major party vote cast. In 1938, the poll reveals, the Republican candidates for the House of Representatives polled 53 percent of the major party vote in the congressional elections, to 47 percent for the Democrats, and a Republican Governor was elected with a 54-percent vote. In 1939 the Gallup Institute survey in July showed Democratic strength at 46 percent to 54 percent Republican, a new low level in Democratic strength since President Roosevelt was first inaugurated. Today, the poll shows, sentiment is virtually evenly divided, with 51 percent of the voters favoring a Democratic victory in the Presidential election, and 49 percent a Republican victory. What has brought about this change? Let me say to you, Mr. Chairman, the passage of the Hatch Act did more than any other one factor by restoring the confidence of the people in the Democratic Party and its leadership. By adopting in the House the amendments to the Hatch Act, as they recently passed the Senate, and are now in the House Judiciary Committee, an even greater confidence will be inspired in the public.

What possible valid reason could be given for failure of this House to act favorably upon the amendments now pending? The feeling in some quarters, I understand, is that it will deprive the Democrats of sufficient campaign funds to match those which the Republican Party may be able to obtain. I desire to make a suggestion to the Democrats, which I strongly feel will be helpful. Campaign funds are sought only to be used for increasing the vote for the ticket of a political party. That may result, in a degree, but history has shown repeatedly that any party that can instill confidence in the minds and hearts of the voters is building strength that no campaign fund can offset. Confidence is the greatest possible political asset and I, as one Democrat, am in favor of relying on public confidence and faith rather than on any campaign policy which requires the use of large funds, no matter from what source they may be derived.

In my opinion the attitude of the general public toward this legislation is faithfully reflected through those channels of expression which the public possesses. It is significant, indeed, that virtually every newspaper, every magazine, every radio commentator or reporter in the United States is favorable to this measure. I am equally certain that the great majority of the Members of this House will honestly reflect the sentiment of the public which they represent and vote for the amendments to the Hatch Act in the event this legislation is brought before them for action.

Mr. Chairman, let me call your attention to the situation which exists today in the Work Projects Administration. We all recall the investigation by a subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee, the resultant scandals in the various States of the Union—there is scarcely a State to which some bad odor did not attach—and this all brought about because Members of the Congress and others insisted upon the appointment of unqualified persons, considered only for political reasons and because they would do the bidding of their political leaders and force certified workers—even their families—to submit to partisan dictates.

With the Hatch Act came a change, and it has been a long time, indeed, since I have heard a single charge of political activity in the W. P. A. Frankly, I know the W. P. A. is doing an honest, clean job, and it is my purpose to do what I can to assist in furthering efficiency and integrity in other agencies.

I can see no objection to Members of Congress, or any other elective officer, recommending an efficient man for a job. I do, however, look with disgust and resentment upon those who dismiss efficient men and women because those men and women will not either do their bidding or kick in to a campaign fund. And this feeling, it has been evidenced, is shared by the general public.

I have been in many States of the Union since the Hatch Act was passed. It has given new life and liberty to Government employees. No longer do they have that feeling of sacrificed rights and freedom denied that formerly existed. Nor do they fear an arbitrary and coercive political assessment on their wages, which means deprivation of their families of some of the comforts and necessities of life. This condition, I am sure, will be reflected when the time comes for them to cast their votes, particularly with regard to those who are responsible for bringing about this desirable change.

It is my desire to bring to the attention of the House the status of these amendments in order that those who are interested in their passage may take such steps as they deem necessary. I, for one, propose to do all within my power to pass the amendments to the Hatch Act, which I know to be essential to good government and political decency in this Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. The distinguished gentleman from New Mexico expresses the opinion that some of the Democrats are apprehensive that if the Hatch bill becomes a law, it will be difficult to raise campaign funds. You still have the Diplomatic Service to put on the block, and there is nothing to stop the President from autographing three or four thousand convention books to be sold at $1,000 apiece.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I understood that the gentleman was going to ask me a question, not make a speech.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman's party has so many ways of raising money that I marvel at his modesty.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. CREAL. I notice that the distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] has further legislation in mind in which he says that he will propose that the Federal Government appropriate money to the two major parties for the campaign, and prohibit all sorts of contributions. I presume, since the gentleman is in touch with his Senator, that he knows that this campaign contribution by the Government would be proportioned upon the basis of the last Presidential vote between the two parties?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Let me say to the gentleman that one job at a time is quite sufficient for me, and before I go into another phase of amending the Hatch Act, I should like first to dispose of that bill which is now in the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. CREAL. But if we knew that this was coming, it would somewhat clear the atmosphere in respect to it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I do not know that it is coming.

Mr. CREAL. Well, the press has given it out.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman will have to consult Senator HATCH about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Mexico has expired.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 minutes more.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. FISH. I am glad to see the gentleman is standing for clean government. The gentleman also said in his remarks that he was opposed to the highjacking of Government officials, and making them contribute to campaign funds.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I am now and always have been.

Mr. FISH. I am in thorough accord with the gentleman, as I am in many other matters.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. FISH. Would the gentleman accept an amendment to the Hatch bill that hereafter would prohibit Government employees from being highjacked to make contributions to future memorial libraries?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Oh, I don't know that Federal employees have been hijacked for that particular purpose.

Mr. FISH. They have been merely assessed?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I don't know that they have been assessed. I think they contributed voluntarily. I think that was a worthy project.

Mr. FISH. And I have just learned now that they will be free of income tax on that account.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I would not know anything about that.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. As a sponsor of the bill in the House, would the gentleman be able to say whether in his opinion, when it come to the floor of the House from the Judiciary Committee, it will pass this body?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I am advised by a great many Members on my side of the aisle that it will. Many Members who voted against the original act are in favor of the amendments now.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield.

Mr. HOUSTON. I want to say to the gentleman from New Mexico that I am one Member who is very much in favor of the proposed amendments. I think that unless the Judiciary Committee reports them out within a reasonable length of time the gentleman from New Mexico would be justified in filing a discharge petition on the Speaker's desk, and I would be glad to sign the petition.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK].

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I am fortunate this afternoon in having chosen this occasion to speak because there are a lot of Members here waiting to speak. If it were not for that, I doubt if anybody would be here. [Laughter.]

On the bill now before the Committee for consideration there cannot be very much debate. On several features of it I think we are all agreed. For one, we all agree that the C. C. C. camps perform and have been performing very useful services—that they have proven the best thing that could have been done at the time. I think we are all agreed that aid to the blind and crippled is a good thing. We all agree in the health-service program. There seems to be only one subject involved on which there is great agitation in this country. There is a division of opinion as to whether our social security for the aged has been anything other than a mere dole handed out to the aged. It is my firm opinion from my experience in the Western States that if we had made no provision for the aged at all under social security they would have fared just as well under general relief as they have under this program. I think this program is wrong.

There is one disadvantage that we have as Republicans in the coming campaign—and I suppose I am a candidate again on the Republican ticket, so far as I know—we have no program at all. The Democrats at least have had a program—one they have put through. I have not seen anything yet emanate from the Republican Party that shows the least sign of having any program of security for the aged, and I think that is going to be an issue in this campaign. I do not want you to understand that just because I believe in the Townsend plan that that is the only plan that could be put through Congress, but I do believe in the plan and I do not see where anybody can say anything against it in this House—at least, I do not believe it is entitled to very much weight if they do because we have tried everything else. You have sidetracked the Townsend plan and put through every variety of plan conceivable. The result is that we are just as bad off as, if not worse than, we ever were before. Why should anybody object to trying a new thing? Let me tell you about it. In substance all it amounts to is a proposal to levy a tax on gross incomes above $3,000. Those earning under $3,000 would not be touched on the theory that the real basis of taxation is as laid down by every economist that ever discussed the subject—that people should pay taxes according to their ability to pay. If I have an income of $10,000, which I have as a Member of Congress, I ought to be willing to pay—and I have to pay it whether I am willing to pay it or not, both here and at home—but that is the test. Those having meager incomes will not have to pay anything.

How are you going to raise the money? The gentleman from Pennsylvania is not here this afternoon to raise that question, but I can tell him how. We are going to raise the money from a 2-percent tax on the gross income of this country in the brackets above $3,000. In these brackets we find that the total gross income of the United States annually, figured on the present situation, is about $360,000,000,000. About $60,000,000,000 of this income belongs to the lower brackets that we are not going to touch at all; so there will be a tax on gross incomes in the amount of $300,000,000,000. Two percent on that will be $6,000,000,000. In the United States are some 10,000,000 people over the age of 60 years. On the basis of the best authorities I can trace down, the number does not exceed 10,500,000. Of these, about 8,000,000 will qualify. There are a great many aged people who would not want any assistance at all. I am 60 years of age myself, and I do not think that public opinion would let me file for this additional $50 a month when I am receiving $10,000 a year, and there are a great many aged people in this country in the same situation. So, the best estimate that I can give this House is that about 8,000,000 of these will apply for this assistance; and of the $6,000,000,000 received from a tax on the gross income of $300,000,000,000, measured in terms of so much a month, will approximate $51 a month to the aged who can qualify. I am telling you where the money is coming from. The very first argument I now hear is that used the last time to destroy this bill, and that is, "They said you want $200 a month." Nobody in this Congress ever said anything about $200 a month. The bill itself did not set out $200 a month as the amount to be paid; nobody advocated $200 a month. If you will read the bill that was under consideration last year, you will discover that that was a maximum; that they were to receive whatever the tax would bring in; and that is the situation again this year.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. Yes; I will yield to anybody on this subject.

Mr. GROSS. I voted for the Townsend bill. Does not the gentleman believe, however, that the Republican Party is going into power next fall and that then much of the need for Federal relief will disappear because of increased business and better conditions in the country?

Mr. BURDICK. There is only one chance in this world of the Republicans getting into power next fall, and that is by their adopting the Townsend plan, or some plan equally as good as a social-security program.

Mr. O'CONNOR and Mr. COLMER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In the bills that have been introduced before the Congress, known as the Townsend bills, there was no minimum fixed at all, was there?

Mr. BURDICK. No.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In other words, it would only pay what the tax would bring in, as the gentleman said?

Mr. BURDICK. That is right.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The State of Indiana has a gross income-tax law, which, as I understand it, is satisfactory to that State. What is the difference in principle between a gross income-tax law and the Townsend plan, except as to the allocation of the funds derived from the tax, namely, to be paid to the elderly people and that the amount paid would be required to be spent and put in circulation?

Mr. BURDICK. That is a good question and it involves another one. I will try to answer them both together.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I want the gentleman to tell the story that he told me the other day about what William Jennings Bryan said to a certain audience where the Republican and Democratic Parties were at issue.

Mr. BURDICK. This is a most unusual request and I doubt if the story will be quite applicable to this debate. I cannot, however, resist the request since the gentleman from West Virginia, JENNINGS RANDOLPH, was named by the Great Commoner and has in a marked degree emulated in this Congress the wisdom, ability, and statesmanship of this great Democrat and American. If the Democratic side will yield me 2 additional minutes I shall be glad to tell the story.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. BURDICK. I will try to tell this story in 2 minutes. When Mr. Bryan came through Williston where I reside, in the very western section of North Dakota, he stopped there to make a speech. I was asked as a Republican if I would consent to introduce Mr. Bryan to the people. I said I would be delighted, because he was one of the great men of the country. I did not look upon his democracy or the party he was affiliated with in derogation of his standing as one of the great, outstanding leaders of his time. I introduced him. Of course, the audience assembled there were mostly Republicans and he said in substance something like this: "Ladies and gentlemen and friends: I am on my way to the Democratic convention at San Francisco. I do not know what the Democrats are going to do. I have been a long time on the front firing line and I have come to understand that it does not make much difference which party name you have, it is really what you stand for that counts. Now, I can prove by every Republican that when the Democrats are in power the Democrats are incompetent."

A great cheer went up from the Republican audience. Then he continued and said, "And when the Republicans are in power, no proof is necessary." [Laughter and applause.]

There is some argument I hear around the cloakroom here that the Townsend people have receded from the program last year of taxing upon the various elements that go to make up a gross income. Last year it was a transaction tax, and, as the gentleman from Montana has suggested, economically there is no difference between a tax on the various items that go to make up the gross and a straight tax upon the gross income, because the gross is the measure of all transactions that enter into it; so fundamentally there is no difference at all.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is not this similar to the proposed tax in the District of Columbia which they are about to bring in here?

Mr. BURDICK. I cannot answer that because I am not familiar with that subject.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the Government of the United States were to adopt that system of taxation to take care of the aged people, it would simply be following along the same lines that the people of Indiana have followed to meet the expenses of running the government of the State of Indiana.

Mr. BURDICK. Yes; the gentleman is correct. May I say further that all the charges that the Townsend people have receded from the first stand they made is not warranted by the evidence, because there is no receding whatever. The amount is the same. The tax is the same.

Mr. O'CONNOR. May I say to the gentleman that the time is coming when the United States Government has got to come to that method of taxation to take care of the aged people of this country and it might as well do so now, and I am in favor of immediate action on the Townsend plan and I favor it and will support it.

Mr. BURDICK. You are right, Mr. Chairman, let us consider this situation of the old people getting $51 a month. There is not a man in the House who would object to that if it can be done. It should be paid as a matter of principle from those most able to pay. We can agree on that. Now, what is the situation? We are operating under the present social-security program and under it you have made paupers out of everybody who takes advantage of that law. I have in my office at least 500 examples of how the aged are treated in my State. Here is an old couple struggling along. They have a little home not worth over three or four hundred dollars. They have no income. They are old. The State and the Federal Government together are the measure of what they are going to get. The law we passed provided that the Federal funds must be matched by State funds. The Government is matching what my State that has had 9 years of total drought and grasshoppers can put up. The sum total of all we are paying the aged in North Dakota ranges all the way from $8 a month to $17 a month. But before they can get a nickel of this money something has to be done, and I want you gentlemen, the Democratic organization particularly that is responsible for the present program, to realize this. Before they can get a nickel they must deed this little old home worth three or four hundred dollars to the administration of the State. In other words, under the program we are now operating in America there is not an aged person who can get 1 cent unless they prove themselves to be abject paupers. Is that what you want or do you desire something different? Maybe we can pay $51, $52, or $53 under the Townsend plan. We hope it will be $200 a month. At least this is true—as business revives under the operation of the Townsend Act, the gross income will increase. Some who have incomes less than $3,000 now will receive more than $3,000. As the incomes increase the proceeds of the tax will increase and larger payments will follow.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. CREAL. Is not the matter of conveying the property wholly a State matter?

Mr. BURDICK. No. The regulations of the Social Security Board here in Washington determine that situation entirely.

Mr. CREAL. A number of States have repealed the laws requiring the conveyance of property to the State under those conditions. My State is one of them, and took this action 2 months ago. I understand the States have that authority, but if they do not require the conveyance of the property it is not compulsory that the property be conveyed.

Mr. BURDICK. I will give the gentleman another example of the same thing. We have never passed an act of Congress requiring a farmer to give security on his old seed loans before we would give him seed loans for the coming year, yet the administration down there demands such security. While we appeal to them, "Let this fellow go another year, because you are going to keep him off relief if you do; don't sew him up so he cannot operate," the fact remains the farmers are required to give mortgages covering past seed loans. You can pass all the laws you want to, but if those who administer the laws are given power to make regulations and interpret the law in the light of these regulations, they can and do actually circumvent the law itself.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman is certainly to be congratulated on the splendid speech he is making before the Members of the House. The gentleman is pointing out the necessity for the bill he has mentioned. Yesterday morning the gentleman and I sat on a committee and heard testimony to the effect that aged Indians in this country, whose good land the Government of the United States has taken away from them by various methods, are actually living on dog meat with no other kind of food, and living in tents during winter months. This is the way we are permitting many of the old people who are our wards to live, and we refuse to provide for them. At the same time we are extending assistance to the distressed in other countries. We should at least, in addition, look after our own.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. THILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. THILL. I did not listen to the gentleman's fine address in its entirety, but can the gentleman tell me just how much revenue this bill would produce and how much it would give to each aged individual?

Mr. BURDICK. It would produce about $6,000,000,000 of revenue, and this sum divided among those who will participate will amount to about $51 per month.

Mr. THILL. How many people does the gentleman expect will participate?

Mr. BURDICK. A little over 8,000,000.

Mr. THILL. I am very sympathetic with the end the gentleman is trying to attain.

Mr. BURDICK. I know the gentleman is sympathetic, and I believe he will vote for the bill.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. In connection with the statement of the gentleman it may be well to point out that the State of Wisconsin for a number of years has collected a surtax upon incomes in order to provide the State's share of the pensions provided for teachers. The teachers make a contribution, it is true, but in order to provide the State's share of the pension fund for teachers they have resorted to a surtax on incomes.

Mr. BURDICK. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. KEEFE. I thought it might indicate that there is perhaps nothing new in the application of a tax on incomes. In one case the tax is on net income and in the other case, as in the bill proposed by the gentleman, the tax is on the gross income.

Mr. BURDICK. The gentleman is correct.

The only thing we are trying to do is take care of these old people. If in taking care of them we can at the same time help all those who are not 60 years of age, if we can help those who are 40 or 30 or 15, I say it is worth trying.

Mr. KEEFE. If the gentleman will yield further, may I call the attention of the gentleman, in answer to the remark of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CREAL], to the fact that the social-security law effective July 1, 1941, provides that each State plan must provide that the State agency shall in determining need take into consideration any income and resources of an individual claiming old-age assistance. Therefore, the question of need is determined by the ownership of property.

Mr. BURDICK. I appreciate your statement. Our present system, under the Social Security Act, of taking care of the aged is a disgrace to this Republic. The Townsend bill will finance itself, and if you want to stop reaching into the Public Treasury to fish out pitiable doles for the fathers and mothers of America, here is your chance to do it. Let us put this assistance on the high plane it deserves, and thus care for the aged, provide opportunities for the young and the forgotten class (those between 45 and 60), revive business everywhere in this Nation, and write finis to the depression. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE].

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, on this occasion I propose to discuss the answer to the unsolved farm problem.

I am thinking now of the people I represent in the Seventh Oklahoma District. I am thinking of the people of the Nation, and I am thinking of their welfare. I am fully aware of the fact that the farmers of my district, with all the help they have been given, with all of the appropriations, with all of the expenditures of money, and with all of the vast efforts that have been made in their behalf, my farmers and the farmers of the Nation are receiving little more than one-half of cost of production for their products and less than three-fourths of parity prices.

Since I was first elected to the Seventy-fourth Congress in the fall of 1934 I have introduced and reintroduced legislation which would assure the farmers market prices for their products consumed in the United States of not less than the cost of production. Early in the Seventy-sixth Congress 15 of my colleagues from 14 agricultural States on either side of the aisle and 18 Senators joined me in introducing this important legislation. I can say without fear of contradiction that this legislation has the active support of the great majority of the real farmers of my district and I dare say that of a majority of the farmers of the Nation. It has had the active support of the independent national farm organizations and their leaders.

We have two new situations today, both of which are important and either of which is a peril to the farmers of my district and of the Nation.

The first of these new situations is the growing reluctance on the part of the Congress to make huge annual appropriations for so-called parity payments. We are all painfully aware of that fact. If we take a realistic view of this we must conclude that the day is approaching fast, if not already here, when the farmers cannot depend upon the Congress to make these huge appropriations particularly affecting parity payments and crop control under title III of the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

The second and most dangerous of these new situations is the fact that the war in Europe is certain to end some day—it may be soon—or that day may be far away. It may be within 3 months or 3 years. It may be within 6 months or 6 years. But we know with certainty that each day brings us 1 day closer to the end of the European war. Under our present system the end of the European war will bring a post-war deflation. A deflation that hits farm prices first. Up to this day we have not provided the farmers with worthwhile safeguards against that day of post-war deflation and collapsing farm prices.

I am sure that every Member of this House knows well the history of deflation following the first World War. The bitter experience of that depression burned deep into the hearts and minds of the farming class. Their holdings and homes were either immediately swept away from them or were so severely devalued that they had to give them up and look for others and a new kind of employment within short periods. That deflation was the staggering blow to agriculture, for farm products were practically without value, land had no salable value, and thousands of farm communities were disintegrated. We can prevent a recurrence of the worst features of another post-war deflation if we will only set ourselves to the task of enacting the principles set out in H. R. 2371 into law. We know that when farm prices collapse the little-business man at the country crossroads suffers a decline in business, industrial production slows down, unemployment increases, business stagnation follows, and national income rapidly declines. We are not prepared financially or otherwise to deal with this peril when it comes, but we are intellectually prepared to prevent it.

It is the duty of Congress, it is the duty of this Congress, to enact into law an honest answer to the unsolved farm problem. In my judgment it is the duty of the House Committee on Agriculture to cooperate with the House and report a bill which will put a legal floor under farm prices consumed in the domestic market and to protect our domestic market price and domestic market from the unnecessary invasion of foreign competing agricultural products. I want to speak more particularly about the farm bill which I have introduced. It is H. R. 2371. I have spoken to you about this bill many times on this floor. I have argued and debated this bill on the floor. I have fought and defended it before the House and Senate Committees on Agriculture when extensive hearings were being held before those committees a year ago. My bill is safe for the farmer because it puts a legal floor under farm market prices consumed in the domestic market. It is safe for the Treasury, because it requires no huge appropriations or subsidy payments to the farmer. It is safe for labor because it gives them assurance of employment opportunities. It is safe for business, because it gives business an opportunity to sell an additional $5,000,000,000 worth of goods to our 6,800,000 farmers. It is safe for the 130,000,000 people of the United States, because it assures all of us of prosperity based upon agricultural prosperity.

Now, let us examine the provisions of this bill; let us see what it will do if enacted into law:

First. It would aid and protect the producers of 50 of the 78 agricultural products produced by the farmers of this Nation.

Second. It would aid and protect 98 percent of the value of our total agricultural production.

Third. It would place a legal floor under the market price of these 50 agricultural products consumed in the domestic market.

Fourth. It would assure farmers minimum market prices for the products we consume here in the United States.

Fifth. It would give farmers the world price on the percentage of their production in excess of domestic requirements.

Sixth. It would make agricultural products gilt-edged security for loans, public or private, at nearly 100 percent of the minimum price.

Seventh. It would prevent the importation of competitive agricultural products.

Eighth. It would give our farmers 100 percent of our domestic market.

Ninth. It would protect our domestic market and domestic price level against foreign competitive imports.

Tenth. It would repeal crop control or title III of the Triple A but would leave undisturbed the soil-conservation part of the act, commodity loans, and crop insurance.

Eleventh. It would eliminate the necessity of annual appropriations from the Treasury.

Twelfth. It would provide an annual cash income from marketing to the farmers of the United States of about twelve to twelve and a half billion dollars, and would raise the national income to about $85,000,000,000.

Thirteenth. It would eliminate Government control and operation of the farmer and his farm and substitute Government aid and protection of the farmer's market price, his income, and his domestic market.

Fourteenth. It would be self-financing, self-maintaining, without appropriations or subsidies or processing taxes by making agricultural products sell for not less than their actual worth in the domestic market.

Fifteenth. It would stabilize agricultural prosperity—the base of our economic pyramid.

Last night I am sure some of you heard Mr. Stoddard in the caucus room of the old House Office Building discuss Germany from inside the German boundary lines. It was an informative address. He made the statement there that the German Government advises every farmer in that empire, before the farmer even prepares his ground for seeding and before any kind of crops are planted, just exactly what the price is going to be in Germany during that year for the entire farm products of his farm and all other farms in Germany. People know what they are going to get. The German Government pays them that price.

Now, I am not a totalitarian by any means. I do not believe in that philosophy. I do not believe in any other philosophy than that American philosophy under which we ought to let this Nation grow and prosper.

Year before last, in Italy, Mussolini made an agreement with the people of that country that if they would plant so many acres of wheat that he, the people and the Government of Italy, would pay the farmers $2.12 a bushel for it in American money. They planted it, and they got that much in American money for their wheat, while our farmers here in the United States were forced under our kind of agricultural legislation to take from 40 cents to 60 cents a bushel for their wheat.

Mr. MUNDT rose.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes more to the gentleman from Oklahoma so he may answer the questions of the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I shall not agree to answer them, but I agree to try to answer them.

Mr. MUNDT. I am very much interested in the remarks of the gentleman from Oklahoma because I have followed his valiant fight for a just farm program for a long while. I just want to add by way of emphasis that it is true, is it not, that the present farm program, if it were working 100 percent successfully, would not give more than 75 percent parity to the American farmer.

Mr. MASSINGALE. The gentleman is exactly correct and the law itself does not begin to provide parity payments unless the farm prices are below 75 percent of parity.

Mr. MUNDT. The law does not operate 100 percent, and if it did it would still give the farmer only 75 percent of parity, while the gentleman's bill soundly and logically assumes that the farmer must have 100 percent of parity. So that even if the farm program were to operate permanently and successfully, eventually you would bankrupt every farmer in America because if he gets 25 percent less than parity every year, he is bound to go broke.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I think that is correct and I will further state to the gentleman and to my friend, who I know is sincerely interested in this program, that we might just as well make up our minds to give the farmers of America an opportunity to make a living.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASSINGALE. I gladly yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The House owes the gentleman a vote of thanks for his splendid and convincing argument in support of the cost-of-production bill, and I sincerely hope the time will come when this House and the Senate of the United States will follow out the advice of the gentleman from Oklahoma and pass the cost-of-production bill and solve permanently the problem of the American farmer which will never be solved until such a bill is passed.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASSINGALE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GROSS. Does the gentleman subscribe to the policy of this administration of agricultural regimentation as now put on by Wallace?

Mr. MASSINGALE. I think if the gentleman had ever heard me open my mouth on it, he would not have asked that question.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASSINGALE. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. I want to congratulate the gentleman from Oklahoma for coming in here and giving us an explanation of this bill that he has proposed. I am 100 percent for it, as are most of the Members of the House. I would like to know why the Committee on Agriculture does not conduct hearings on this bill and report it out and bring it up on the floor here so we may pass it.

Mr. MASSINGALE. The Committee on Agriculture did not pass the bill out because of protests filed against the bill by officials of the Farmers' Union who stated that the farmers did not want the bill, and the bill is now pending in the House Committee on Agriculture. In order to get the bill from before the committee and to the House for consideration I have filed petition No. 5. This petition now has about 120 signatures on it. I trust that every Member who has not signed this petition and who wants enacted into law a legislative program of some kind for the farmer will sign it.

The enactment of my bill into law would give the farmers of this Nation an annual cash income of about $5,000,000,000 more than the farmers received in cash farm income in 1939. This additional $5,000,000,000 in income would increase their own consumption of food and fiber, and it would increase the farmers' consumption of industrial products, which increase in consumption would necessitate an immediate increase in the employment of labor. I dare say that it would produce an immediate reemployment of idle men and women in private industry of not less than four and one-half million workers at American wages. This, my friends, is a sincere approach to a solution of the unsolved farm problem. This is also an approach toward solving the unsolved unemployment problem. I believe the passage of this bill will aid us in finding a market within the United States for the products of industry that is at least five times greater than the elusive and vanishing market which our industrialists are seeking to find abroad. If we will trade wisely with prosperous people among ourselves, we will have the employment, the goods, the money, and the prosperity. We can then trade with the world, not as dependents, but as independents.

My bill, H. R. 2371, is in perfect harmony with the historical policy of the United States, it is in harmony with the Constitution, it is in harmony with our democratic principles and our republican form of government, it is in harmony with the principles enacted into law by this Government to aid and protect others of our economic groups since the beginning of the Government. It has been the policy followed by the Government from that day to this.

There are 23 valid laws on the statute books designed to help our several economic groups. These 23 laws have been enacted by the Congress. Each of these 23 acts of Congress authorizes and directs certain Federal agencies to fix by regulation prices, rates, wages, and services. This covers the field of business, industry, transportation, communication, public service, and the wages and hours of labor.

Congress has fixed the administration of these acts and vested the administrators of them with regulatory powers to fix prices, rates, wages, and services, with commissions, boards, bureaus, departments of government surrounding this very Capitol on every side; and for your information let me just name a few of them. There is the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the Secretary of War, the Maritime Commission, the President, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Power Commission, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Tennessee Valley Authority, the Federal Communications Commission, the Security and Exchange Commission, the Secretary of Labor, the National Bituminous Coal Commission, the Tariff Commission, and the Administrator of Wage and Hour Division. These are just a few of the many. This list does not include the governmental powers to fix interest rates or insurance rates, or the price of gold, or the value of money, or the Federal Trade Commission, or many other agencies and institutions of this Government which, directly or indirectly, are engaged under authority of law to regulate prices and enforce fair trade practices among and between the citizens of the United States. But the laws which I have named for you, in principle and application, furnish complete authority for all that is proposed to be done under my bill H. R. 2371. We are at long last proposing now to come to the aid of the farmers with the historical aid of Federal law, when we should have come first to the farmers' aid. It is the business of the Government and it is the duty of the Government to protect the weak against the strong. We have in times past been aiding the strong against the weak. Now let us fulfill our duty to the farmers; let the House Agriculture Committee report out the bill. The Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry unanimously reported this cost-of-production bill April 7, 1939, and made this general comment:

GENERAL COMMENT

This bill is a protection to agriculture in general. It may work some hardship on the large producer, but for the average producer it will do the job; and if agriculture is put on the proper base, the large producer will adjust his production to the law of supply and demand, and agricultural labor will be taken care of in increased wages and compensation. Purchasing power will put farm labor on an equitable basis, and the farmer will be able to pay his farm labor adequate wages.

This is the best proposal yet offered to solve the farm problem. Our American farmer has sold his crops in the open market at world prices in competition with low-priced labor and very low living standards. Everything the American farmer has bought has had to pay the costs of production plus a profit and protected against outside competition by the tariff laws. In short, the American farmer sells in an open market and buys in a closed market.

It is either this bill or one like it, or free trade, which would have the same effect on the industrial worker, that the present system has on the farmer. The industrial worker sells his product to the American consumer in a protected market and works only part time. He could sell a greater volume and work practically full time if the farmer, too, had a protected market.

This bill is an attempt to equalize conditions.

Your committee recommends S. 570 as a well-thought-out and seasoned legislative attempt to solve the agricultural problem and, by solving it, induce national prosperity. Your committee believes that the American farmer is entitled to the American market at a profit.

Shortly following the Senate report, and on April 19, 1939, while the bill was being heard by the Agricultural Committee of the House, there appeared the president of the Farmers' Union of America, the president of the Oklahoma Farmers' Union, and other farmers' union officials and filed their protest and objection to the passage of the cost-of-production bill. The result was failure of the House Committee on Agriculture to report out the bill H. R. 2371. Bear in mind that S. 570 is identical with H. R. 2371.

Now, let us pass an honest farm bill which will raise the domestic prices of farm products to at least 100 percent of parity.

If this bill were enacted into law, we would raise the domestic-market price of cotton per pound to 17 or 18 cents, the domestic-market price of wheat per bushel to about $1.20, corn around 85 cents per bushel, hogs to $9.50 to $10 per hundredweight, butterfat to around 38 to 40 cents per pound, wool to about 25 cents per pound, lambs to about $8 per 100 pounds, and so on down the list of 45 or 50 agricultural products in every section of the United States and in every State in the Union.

There is no use of us begging the question any longer. There is no use of us dodging the real issue. We have 150 years of precedent, and for 150 years we, as a government, have been engaged in applying this same principle of Federal legislation to aid and protect practically every other economic group in our society; let us now apply this same principle of Federal legislation to aid and protect the market price of our farmers throughout this Nation and give our farmers 100 percent of cost of production; certainly not less than parity prices, if you please. Let us enact this law in this session of Congress. Let us protect the farmers of our Nation against the peril of inadequate appropriations and the perils of a postwar deflation, which will come upon us like a thief in the night unless we enact into law now an honest answer to the unsolved farm problem. H. R. 2371 is the honest basic answer to this problem.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I, too, come from a farm district and I believe I belong to all of the great farm corporations, the National Grange, the Farm Bureau——

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Oh, I would like to at least finish my sentence before I am asked to yield. I just stated that I come from a farm district, and although I have represented a farm district for many years, both in the legislature at Albany and here at Washington, I have never yet claimed to be a dirt farmer, like my great constituent, who now resides in the White House, the President of the United States.

Every election year my constituent suddenly discovers the compelling urge to be a dirt farmer and wants everyone to know it. He is as much a dirt farmer as I am a Communist. However, because of the failure of the New Deal to even approach solving the farm problem and carry out their solemn promises, and because of the complete failure and collapse of the New Deal farm program as agricultural conditions now exist in America, I am 100 percent in favor of the bill proposed by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE]. However, I am not so sure that I would vote for such a bill next January, because then we will have a Republican President and he will automatically restore confidence, employment, and purchasing power throughout the United States so that our wage earners in the East can buy farm products at reasonable prices from the farmers of the West and restore prosperity among the farmers.

There will be no prosperity in America until there is prosperity on the farms, and there will be no prosperity on the farms until there is restoration of buying power on the part of the wage earners of the Nation. Furthermore, there will be no prosperity in America until the farmer gets a fair price for his products and has a purchasing power of his own. That is what the gentleman from Oklahoma wants and so do I. But if these deplorable farm conditions continue, and as a result of this program, of scarcity and destruction, of plowing under of crops, of wheat, cotton, and corn, and of birth control of pigs, of which I am sure the gentleman from Oklahoma is not in favor, then I am sure the best thing the administration can do is to accept the bill proposed by the gentleman from Oklahoma, and I shall be glad to support it.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Where did the New Deal get their idea of birth control for the pigs? Upon reading a pamphlet published by Mr. James Cromwell, the New Deal Minister to Canada and the husband of the richest woman in America, I found that he had a program to solve all of the political and economic ills of America which includes the repeal of the income tax and birth control as applied to human beings.

Mr. FISH. And he also wants to control those of us who want to keep us out of war, does he not?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Yes; and he also believes that Uncle Sam should lend money to everyone who wants to borrow money, and that Uncle Sam, for the privilege of making the loans, should pay the borrower 6-percent interest. I think he ought to be taken care of by Uncle Sam in the United States instead of taking care of Uncle Sam's interests in Canada.

Mr. FISH. Can the gentleman tell us what he wants to do to the isolationists and Members of Congress who believe in maintaining American neutrality and keeping out of foreign wars?

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman answers that, will the gentleman from New York yield to me?

Mr. FISH. With pleasure.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I just want to answer the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] about where the Democrats got this idea. I thought he knew that we stole it out of the Republican platform and put it into operation. That is how we got it first.

Mr. FISH. Which—the program of scarcity?

Mr. MASSINGALE. Yes. We got it from the Republicans.

Mr. FISH. Well, you have stolen a lot from the Republican platforms but not any program of scarcity. We used to be the party of what we called reasonable centralized government, and you Jeffersonian Democrats used to believe in State rights, but the New Deal has gone far beyond us as far as reasonable centralized government is concerned in regimentation, bureaucracy, collectivism, and State socialism. We are actually now much more closely identified with the Jeffersonian theory of State rights than the so-called Democratic Party.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I have been given 15 minutes, and I would like to know if I can get any more time, because I would like to have 5 minutes to talk on my own topic, which I want to discuss briefly this afternoon.

Mr. KEEFE. I suggest that the gentleman better begin to talk on his own topic.

Mr. HOOK. I am wondering what the gentleman thought about the program set forth by Mr. Glenn Frank, where he seems to adopt most of the New Deal measures, but says that they are not properly administered.

Mr. FISH. I do not know that he adopted most of the New Deal measures at all. I know that as far as foreign affairs is concerned he is entirely opposed to the internationalism of the New Deal, and I think that is the most important issue at the present time.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. COLMER. While we are in this facetious mood I want to take my friend to task for his party's failure to cooperate with the gentleman from Oklahoma if the fact be that his bill would be enacted into law when the Republican President came into power.

Mr. FISH. No; I did not say that his bill would be enacted into law if the Republicans came into power. I said I hoped that when the Republicans came into power they would restore confidence and buying power that actually would solve the farm problem. Everyone interested in the subject knows that farm prices are too low, that farm prices are at least 50 percent lower than they were under the Republican administration from 1920 to 1930.

Mr. HOUSTON. Does the gentleman think the farmers can last that long?

Mr. FISH. No; not under the New Deal, I do not think they can wait another 6 months. And that is why I said in the beginning that I would like to get a vote right now, right today on the gentleman's bill.

Several Members rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has been very lenient this afternoon in not requiring gentlemen who wished to interrogate a speaker first to address the Chair.

Mr. FISH. I thank the Chair and I hope the Chair will protect me in my effort to make a speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair reminds the Members that those desiring to interrogate the speaker must first address the Chair and secure recognition.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, may I be recognized by the Chair?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, the Members on the Democratic side are just anxious for enlightenment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. FISH. To the gentleman who is the author of the bill. Then I must proceed.

Mr. MASSINGALE. If the gentleman would just assist us, if he is so anxious to have this bill become a law and thinks that the farmers are in peril to the extent that they cannot last over 6 months under the New Deal—I think he is nearly correct about it, but I want to ask the gentleman why he does not get busy and sign petition No. 5.

Mr. FISH. I will sign it gladly. I will sign it today.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FISH. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I am addressing the Chair. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Idaho?

Mr. FISH. Yes; for one last question.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I would like to ask the gentleman if he will not now address himself to the subject matter of the bill, discuss the issue before the House, the appropriation for the N. Y. A. and the C. C. C., rather than bring up questions entirely irrelevant to this bill.

Mr. FISH. How about the silver problem?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman will hear more of that in the future.

Mr. FISH. We are still being crucified on the cross of foreign silver. Perhaps it would be a good subject to discuss.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. For the last time.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. The gentleman stated that he was a farmer. Am I correct in assuming from his remarks that he is a cropper of the President?

Mr. FISH. No; the greatest crop the New Deal and the President raise is propaganda. They excel at that, and that is the most expensive crop in America for the taxpayers.

Seriously, the reason the Members of Congress are not signing the Massingale petition is not because they do not believe in the bill but because they know that the administration is opposed to it and that the administration is in control, and therefore they feel it is more or less an academic problem.

I see one Republican Member has just signed the petition. There goes one vote for it. I will try to persuade others. I am appealing to them to sign it to show that we Republicans are for it under a Democratic administration.

Mr. MASSINGALE rose.

Mr. FISH. No; I cannot yield further.

Mr. Chairman, no one questions the intentions of the President or of the New Deal in trying to solve the farm problem by increasing prices. They depreciated the currency, bought huge quantities of gold and silver, with the thought that it would increase farm prices. Their intentions were good, we are not questioning them, but farmers cannot make a living on good intentions. We are questioning the price of agricultural products today, and what it has been for the last 6 months, and 6 years, compared to what it was under Republican administration, not what it was in 1932, when there was an economic collapse and the banks closed, but for 10 years, from 1921 to 1931. The Democrats themselves agree that the farm prices of 1926 are what they want to get back to as fair farm prices. But you have failed to do it after 7 lean years of agricultural scarcity and destruction.

I think the Democratic New Deal farm program is one of the greatest failures of the New Deal. The gentleman has a solution, and it is a practical solution, that of setting up a two-price system.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. No; I cannot yield.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I just want to pay the gentleman a compliment.

Mr. FISH. I know that, but the gentleman has done that before. He has nominated me for Secretary of State and for everything else, but I cannot accept under a Democratic administration.

The gentleman has brought up his bill which provides for a two-price system. He says, "Let the farmers grow all they want, and we will guarantee a certain price, maybe $1.20 for wheat, 80 cents for corn, and 12 or 15 cents for cotton." These are approximate parity prices. Not exactly but approximately. Then he says, "We will have no restrictions. Grow all you want, and we will give you these guaranteed prices. If you can get more than that, God bless you, we hope you do, but we will give you those prices for what we consume in our American market."

This ought to appeal to the cotton and wheat growers. He says, "We will sell all the rest of the cotton and wheat abroad. We will not plow it under. We will sell it abroad to regain the world market for those exportable crops, and we will get whatever we can. We may get only 5 cents for cotton, 50 cents for wheat, and so forth. We will bring those hundreds of millions of dollars back to the United States and distribute them among the farmers. We will regain the world market which we have lost under a program of scarcity and will put our people back to work."

You talk about farm prices in this country, and that is one of the worst features of the failure of the New Deal farm program. But you have also lost the world markets. We want to regain those world markets for our wheat, cotton, and other farm products, and bring back that wealth to America.

That is why I am for the gentleman's bill and I wish it could be enacted into law, but it will not be under this administration. But under a Republican administration, if we fail within a year to restore farm prices by restoring purchasing power we ought to take the gentleman's bill and enact it into law. I hope the gentleman will support his own bill introduced under Republican auspices.

Mr. Chairman, I rise here today to call attention to a situation that exists throughout the country but one that particularly affects the city of New York. Merchants from the city and port of New York bought goods from Germany prior to January 1 and they paid for those goods in accordance with the British orders in council issued on November 27, 1939.

Germany has the money, but the goods bought and paid for by our American merchants are being held up by the British in Italy, in Holland, and in Belgium, in Genoa, Rotterdam, and Antwerp. The only losers and the only ones who have been and will be injured are American citizens who paid for the goods but who have not received them. Germany has the money. England cannot harm Germany because the goods have already been paid for, but the British refused to let these goods come over to America. Certificates of origin and interest have been properly filed by our importers showing when they ordered the goods and when they paid for them.

The American people are sympathetic with the British and they are tolerant, but they do not want their own merchants to be robbed and mulcted after they have paid for German goods. They see no justice in withholding their goods in foreign warehouses in neutral nations. They have a right to protest.

They have a right to petition the Congress and the State Department to insist, no matter how sympathetic we may be for the British, that our citizens and our merchants be protected. They have a right to obtain their own merchandise and the commodities they have already paid for and brought out of Germany. I insist that there shall be no more delay. These small merchants who paid five, ten, fifteen, or twenty-five thousand for goods, and cannot get them, are being ruined. They have paid their money, they have lost their merchandise and they cannot get either back. The British authorities keep on giving excuses or try to pass the buck and thereby cause delay after delay, all of which is ruinous to our own American merchants in New York and other cities.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, it is an outrageous and intolerable situation. The State Department has been created and is paid for by the American people to look after the interests of our merchants, importers, and citizens, not the interests of the British Government, even though that Government may be in a war for its own existence.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then why does not this Government levy on one of these boats they harbor at one of our docks in order to pay these merchants back? Why does the Government of the United States allow the British Government to come into the United States to recruit as they are doing today all over the United States? They do it, and everybody knows it as well as I do, so I am not saying anything out of order.

Mr. FISH. Of course, some action ought to be taken by the State Department immediately. It should not permit this delay, and if the British Government continues to ignore this unfair situation and let our merchants go bankrupt, then we ought to resort to some form of reprisal if our just demands are not complied with without further delays. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE].

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago, during the discussion I heard the name of the State of Indiana mentioned and referred to our gross-income tax now being used in my State. We are proud to say that a number of States are getting ready to adopt a similar tax law, feeling that it certainly has worked well in the State of Indiana. May I say that the gross-income tax that is today being used in the State of Indiana was brought into being while Paul McNutt was Governor of that State. Here is just one of the many things it has done for us: We were the only State in the Union at that particular time to pay the school teachers and keep our schools operating and paid $700 a year to each school teacher's salary and the first to suggest old-age pension to be paid from the gross income. So we are mighty proud of the record made in Indiana so far as that law is concerned, with but very little opposition from either business, manufacturing, or labor. They feel it is very equitable and proud of the record of Gov. Paul McNutt made as the Governor of our State; and in the event the President of the United States does not choose to run, I hope the State of Indiana may give to the Nation that outstanding citizen, Paul McNutt. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, about 3 weeks ago, Mr. Carl Mullen, president of the Indiana State Federation of Labor; Adolph Fritz, secretary of the Federation of Labor of Indiana; Charles Coombes, business agent of the carpenters' union in Lake county, my district; Ed Stearns, secretary of the carpenters' union of the Gary district; Ed Konkel, officer in the painters' and glaziers' union; Jack Mears, officer of the plumbers' and steamfitters' union of Hammond; and Frank Greenwald, representing the teamsters' and chauffeurs' union, along with others also connected with various unions who are members of the Indiana State Federation of Labor, came to Washington to make a plea for a new public-works program, realizing and appreciating the good work that had been accomplished under the Public Works Administration program, and, of course, each and every one of these men have the interests at heart of the men they represent.

These men represent a total of about 150,000 to 200,000 building-trades men. By that term I mean, of course, carpenters, plumbers, electricians, bricklayers, and all the allied crafts that enter into the picture in the construction business. They are very much worried about the future of their men, and rightly so. Banks are not making any loans on new construction, and, of course, the building-trades men suffer. So, at the suggestion of the president of the State Federation of Labor, which is an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor, I called into my office all the members of the Indiana delegation, both Democrats and Republicans, and these union men explained their situation to the Indiana delegation in Congress, which is that the majority of the men belonging to the various crafts have never applied for aid and intend never to go on relief if it is at all possible to keep from doing so; but they are being forced and crowded at this particular time to seek some kind of aid unless we get a new P. W. A.

No one can point a finger at any of the activities of the P. W. A. It was my pleasure just recently to introduce a bill similar to the Mead bill introduced in the Senate, with just this exception: That under my bill we undertake to pay the prevailing rate of wage in the particular district in which the construction is taking place, and I have also included schools.

In June 1933, President Roosevelt signed the act passed by the Congress creating the Public Works Administration. That was nearly 7 years ago. Since that time the Public Works Administration has fostered the greatest construction program in the world's history, and itself became the world's largest construction agency.

P. W. A. was charged with two important functions: First, to construct useful and public works in the interest of the general public and along this line P. W. A. has done a magnificent job; second, to increase employment by providing a stimulus to American industry.

Let us look for awhile at the results of the first of these functions—the construction of public works. Since June 1933 to date P. W. A. has made grants of $1,505,290,288 and repayable loans of $813,137,665 to aid in the construction of 16,648 non-Federal projects located in all but two of the Nation's counties, as well as in the Territories and possessions. In addition to this there have been 17,820 Federal projects constructed under the direction of various Federal agencies to which P. W. A. allocated $1,775,542,395. The estimated total construction cost of the more than 34,400 projects is $5,985,309,535. These figures, which I have just quoted, include 775 non-Federal projects still remaining to be completed authorized by the Congress under the 1938 P. W. A. Act.

I want to call your attention to the fact that while P. W. A. was making grants of more than a billion and a half dollars toward the construction of non-Federal projects, the applicants—that is, cities, towns, counties, States, and other public bodies—were contributing the major portion of the cost of the projects which amounted to $1,887,682,789. So you see, P. W. A. has enabled the Nation to literally rebuild itself by enabling cities, counties, and States to construct useful and necessary public works which, in the majority of cases, were sadly needed. The visible wealth of the Nation has been increased nearly $6,000,000,000, and the ownership of nearly $4,000,000,000 worth of non-Federal projects lies with the public bodies.

For example, P. W. A. has aided in the building of 871 sewage-disposal plants, 1,860 complete waterworks, 118 filtration plants, 227 municipal power plants, 3,060 elementary-school buildings, 2,305 high-school buildings, 1,315 college and university buildings, 105 public libraries, 102 municipal auditoriums and armories, 620 courthouses and city halls, 2,056 hospitals and institutional buildings, 131 social and recreational buildings, 378 bridges and viaducts, as well as highways, streets, grade-crossing eliminations, wharves, piers, docks, vehicular tunnels, and a host of other types. All of these projects and hundreds of others originated not with P. W. A. but with public bodies—cities, towns, counties, and other subdivisions throughout the length and breadth of the land.

From the standpoint of aiding employment P. W. A. has been eminently successful. Hundreds of thousands of men have been employed at construction sites throughout the country for the past 7 years—men who were employed not by the Federal Government or P. W. A. but by private construction. In this way skilled and unskilled workers who have never appeared on relief rolls have been given employment.

Add to this many thousands of architects, engineers, and draftsmen employed by cities, counties, and States in connection with P. W. A. projects. Through the stimulus of $3,115,149,000 in orders for materials, additional hundreds of thousands of men have been employed by the heavy-goods industries and the spending of pay rolls has aided the consumers' goods industries, which, in turn, have aided employment.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics of the United States Department of Labor has estimated that up to March 1, 1940,

P. W. A. projects have provided at construction sites a total of 2,039,826,000 man-hours of direct employment for which $1,538,208,820 were paid out in wages. The Bureau has found that every 2 man-hours of work at a construction site, 5 man-hours of employment in industry were necessary to produce, fabricate, and distribute the material going into P. W. A. projects. Applying this formula, it is estimated that P. W. A. has furnished 5,099,565,000 man-hours of indirect labor at the sources of manufacture. But this is for the past 7 years pay rolls resulting from P. W. A. projects have been spent in thousands of communities in nearly every county of the Nation. This has resulted in increased demands for consumers' goods and services, and it has been estimated that an additional 4,079,652,000 man-hours of indirect employment have been created to supply this demand.

I want to also point out that employment at construction sites of P. W. A. projects has been at prevailing wage rates, and with P. W. A.'s system of inspection, the quality of construction has shown by the thousands of P. W. A. projects now in use is, by and large, far superior to any other construction program in the country's history.

The results of the huge P. W. A. program can be divided roughly into two parts—health and education. For a number of years prior to the P. W. A. program there had been a continual decrease in hospital construction resulting in a serious shortage of hospital beds and other facilities. In 1933 the capital outlay for hospitals amounted to only 20 percent of the normal expenditures for this purpose. The accumulated shortage of hospital facilities as well as the need for modernization and the replacement of existing equipment was by the direction of the President given immediate attention by P. W. A. shortly after its organization. As of March 1, 1940, allotments had been made for 743 non-Federal hospital and allied projects involving the construction or improvement of 2,056 buildings at a cost of $397,253,706. Through the construction of these projects, P. W. A. has been responsible for the addition of approximately 110,000 hospital beds. The greatest need for hospital facilities is in the rural and semiurban sections of the country, and it has been these sections that have benefited chiefly from the hospital program, since the average hospital project has been in an average community of 20,000 population. Many communities in the United States now have hospitals where none existed before, and others have been provided with clinics and medical centers. The 110,000 beds provided by P. W. A. are equivalent to approximately four and a half years of normal expansion of such accommodations.

Another outstanding and important health measure undertaken and carried out by P. W. A. has been the program for the improvement of the Nation's sewage-disposal facilities and sewage-treatment needs.

Stream pollution, long a health menace as well as an economic problem, has been entirely eliminated in hundreds of communities through the efforts of P. W. A. In addition to these corrective measures now in effect, hundreds of other communities entirely lacking such conveniences and sanitation now have complete new sewage-disposal systems and modern treatment plants. Along this line P. W. A. has considered each project as part of the general national plan for the correction of stream pollution, thereby serving not only the urgent needs of a single community but the general welfare of other communities, particularly downstream towns and cities. Allotments have been made for 1,524 sewer projects costing $468,083,625. Many of these projects are for complete new systems in small towns and communities which had no facilities of this kind prior to the P. W. A. program. Of the total number of sewer projects, there are 871 sewage-disposal plants costing $327,401,038.

Still another phase of the P. W. A. program affecting the public health has been 2,411 water-system projects costing $310,393,801. This number includes 1,860 complete waterworks, having an estimated construction cost of $234,566,000, and the large percentage of these new waterworks are in small communities which heretofore had been dependent on unreliable and oftentimes insanitary sources for their water supply. It has been estimated that approximately one-fourth of the population of the Nation today are enjoying the benefits of more sanitary water systems constructed by P. W. A.

P. W. A. was and has been the answer to a crying need on a Nation-wide front for adequate housing facilities for the Nation's school children. From the beginning of the Republic public-school construction has never kept pace with the growth of school population. In 1926 the total outlay for schools was $400,000,000, and in 1932 it had dropped to $200,000,000, and in 1933, before P. W. A. was put under way, it had dropped to less than $100,000,000, with indications of almost complete discontinuance in 1934. During the life of P. W. A. approximately $1,200,000,000 have been spent on the school-construction portion of the building program. Of this amount, the major portion, or approximately $650,000,000, has been supplied by the communities and the balance through loans and grants by the Federal Government. In the current program school construction alone amounted to $477,000,000. Towns, cities, and counties were equipped to take advantage of the P. W. A. aid, and the records have proven that their first thought was for more and better schools. As a result, 70 percent of all school construction for the past 6 years has been P. W. A. financed, and 44 percent of all P. W. A. non-Federal projects, or slightly over 7,000, have been for educational buildings.

At the beginning of the P. W. A. program there were approximately 400,000 students who were compelled to attend school only part of the time because of the lack of seating accommodations. Thousands of children were housed in old, unsanitary buildings and portable structures. P. W. A. has been able to eliminate 1,200 one- and two-room buildings of the little "red schoolhouse" type by the construction of 704 consolidated schools. The school-construction program altogether has provided 59,615 classrooms, with facilities for two and a half million pupils. In addition to these facilities there have been constructed approximately 4,300 auditoriums, 3,500 gymnasiums, 1,800 school libraries, 890 cafeterias, and some 12,000 other units, including laboratories, study halls, and science and commercial classrooms.

In addition to the assistance given local communities in the construction of necessary educational facilities, allotments were made to provide educational institutions and facilities for the American Indian, and the school children of Alaska, the Canal Zone, Puerto Rico, and Hawaii have been aided by P. W. A.

The current program, that is, the one authorized by the 1938 act, is rapidly being completed and due to the curtailment of funds the highly efficient and skilled P. W. A. organization has been reduced nearly 80 percent. But emaciated as it is, it could on a few hours' notice spring into action should the occasion arise. With all of the accomplishments of the past 7 years, there is still much to be done along the lines of national health and sanitation, and in my estimation, the Public Works Administration is the one agency that is equipped to carry on the type of work in which they have been engaged for 7 years. Surveys have pointed out that to bring the Nation's hospital-bed supply up to normal demands, it would be necessary to increase the present capacity 160,000 beds. As indicative of the realization for the need for more hospitals I call your attention to the fact that when P. W. A., because of lack of additional funds, returned to public bodies last September more than 5,000 applications, 203 were for hospitals.

While P. W. A. sewer-system construction raised the percentage of the country's population served by adequate sewage disposal facilities from 35 to 54 percent, there are still 46 percent of the Nation's communities inadequately served by these important utilities. In like manner approximately 35 percent of the Nation's population is today dependent upon unsatisfactory sources of water supply.

Senator Mead has introduced into the Senate a bill known as S. 3269, providing $300,000,000 for the purpose of establishing a revolving fund for the making of loans to public bodies and nonprofit organizations for the construction of hospitals, water and sewage works, and works for the reduction of pollution in streams, and related facilities necessary or proper to safeguard the health of the people. I have introduced into the House a similar bill known as H. R. 8288, which I hope will receive the serious consideration of this body. My proposal has already been endorsed by the A. F. of L. of Indiana, and also the national body.

We as a Nation are not yet entirely free from the devastating effects of the depression. Industry is still in need of the stimulus provided by the material orders of the P. W. A. program, and hundreds of thousands of the type of workers employed on P. W. A. projects are in need of employment.

It is my earnest conviction that we should continue the job that we began in 1933 and that the Public Works Administration of the Federal Works Agency should again be charged with this task so that the small town, the counties, and States can complete their plans to build necessary and useful public works to take care of the need of their people.

We as a Nation should continue to build. It is the verdict of history that when a nation for any reason stops building, it dies. This was true of ancient civilizations, like Egypt, Babylon, and Tyre. This was also true of ancient Mexico and could easily be true of the United States. Wise leaders have realized that in times of stress the creative instinct of the people should be protected. It is also an axiom of common experience that construction works involving large numbers of skilled and unskilled workmen are among the most useful and efficient expedients that any Government can adopt in seasons of economic distress. The P. W. A. programs have been doing just this and this great work can be continued by the passage of the Schulte-Mead bill, known as the Health Security Act of 1940.

I now appeal to the Members of this body to kindly join in using your influence to help bring the Schulte-Mead bill out on the floor and have it passed this session of Congress, which will mean giving employment to over 1,000,000 building tradesmen throughout the United States, at but very little cost to your Government. I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN A. HALL].

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. Mr. Chairman, I realize that I start out under very much of a handicap when I attempt to speak on agriculture, because several distinguished gentlemen have pretty well covered that subject this afternoon. I had intended to wait until next week before reviewing the measure I introduced recently, but due to the fact that there is an emergency of no small severity in my own district I take this time to describe briefly the bill, H. R. 8312, otherwise known as the Hall farm bill, which I last month introduced in the House.

1935 and 1936 marked a very serious era for my locality. I live at the confluence of the Susquehanna and Chenango Rivers in up-State New York, where at that time there were floods of a very serious nature, followed some time later by a terrible drought. It is needless to say that the farmers of my locality, some 15,000 strong, have been very seriously affected. I bring this measure before the House for its consideration because I feel that although it is sectional in its provisions there will come a time when every Member of this body from an agricultural district will find that it can be used in his district.

In brief, the measure provides in connection with subsistence crops, namely, hays and fodders, that when any farm area has been decreed an emergency district by the Federal Government the Department of Agriculture shall take certain action. This measure will profit every single section of the country in times of dire stress.

Last summer, as I have mentioned, there occurred one of the most devastating droughts in the history of southern New York and northern Pennsylvania. As a result, there is today a shortage of some 50,000 tons of hay in my district alone, and in the surrounding counties there exists a much larger shortage.

In presenting this measure to the House, I ask that every Member read my bill thoroughly, as I am about to mail each Member a copy of it.

The bill provides, among other things, that the Governor of the States or States in the afflicted area shall at the request of the farm bureaus and agencies, which, of course, will have been urged to do so by the various farmers in the district—and when I use the term "district" I refer not to a congressional district but to the area that is afflicted—call upon the Secretary of Agriculture to come to their aid by providing transportation for hay from surplus areas to the local area affected.

You may say that I have included in my bill provisions which are already included in certain agricultural laws. My reply is that there is no provision that the Government may make crop loans—and by the term "crop" I mean subsistence crops, such as hays and fodders, not grains or commercial feedings of any kind—to farmers in areas where the drought or flood or other act of Nature beyond their control has precipitated itself upon the farm population. Under the Farm Security Administration at the present time a farmer may borrow upon his dairy herds or his farm to obtain hay at the existing prices. May I point out to you that under the present system and under the prevailing rate for a ton of hay in my district farmers are forced to pay from $18 to $20 a ton for hay. I know you will agree with me when I say this is economically unsound in every way.

My bill provides that the Secretary of Agriculture be empowered to set a definite price for hay in a certain locality which is afflicted, say $8 or $10 a ton, under the existing need, and allow the surplus hay to be shipped in, the Government assuming the transportation charges. This arrangement will be used only in times of dire need, and I need not say that there are plenty of brakes provided which will prevent any area from receiving this special aid unless there has been a thorough investigation of the situation and it is determined that an emergency exists.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. I gladly yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is it not a fact that the Government can obtain a greatly reduced freight rate from land-grant railroads?

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. That is true to a certain extent, but let me reply to the gentleman that I have conducted extensive research along with my local farm bureaus and I find that there is not enough difference between the prevailing transportation rate and the rate which might be provided to make any material difference, and I can assure the gentleman that we have gone into that subject not only with the Department of Agriculture but with the railroad systems.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GROSS. I want to make this observation: I have very carefully read the gentleman's bill and I think it has a great deal of merit, much more so than much of the grasshopper appropriation measures we have passed or the moneys appropriated for New England to clean up the storm.

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. I thank the gentleman, and wish to add that it is in no sense a grab-bag measure. It is based on sound economic and social propositions.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. Gladly.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman speaks of the price of hay. What does the gentleman consider to be a fair price?

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. I consider a nominal and fair price for hay to be about $10 a ton under existing economic conditions in my particular locality, and I think that is pretty generally accepted throughout the country.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. To what does the gentleman attribute the high price in his district?

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. The high price is attributable to just one thing, the fact that there is a serious shortage of hay in our locality and that there has been brought in by hay dealers from outside an inferior grade of hay, and at the same time they have demanded a very high price for it. In the event of the adoption of the policy of my bill there would be a preclusion of any such happening. There would be no possibility of anything like that which is occurring under the present situation. Incidentally, I may add to the statement that I have made by saying that I have gone into this policy thoroughly with the Department of Agriculture, and although it has not been agreed to in whole, the Department has seen fit—and I do not mean the partisan politicians which might be at the head of various bureaus, but I have talked with experts on the subject—to agree with me that such a policy is necessary to maintain the existing situations in various farm areas.

I will add that in the event the measure is passed, although it cannot be enacted in time to benefit my district, at the same time there will be other agricultural districts which will be literally saved from economic ruin by this policy because it will absolutely prohibit a repetition of the disastrous occasions which have been brought about in my own district this year. There are a great many farmers who are being forced to sell their dairy herds in my district because of the fact that they find it economically unsound to borrow money under the present conditions. You will concur with me that there is little sense in a farmer mortgaging his dairy herd and his farm for an opportunity of borrowing three or four hundred dollars to buy hay to keep his herds throughout the remainder of the winter.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. Gladly.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Does not the gentleman think that the conditions he describes go deeper than the borrowing of money? Does not the gentleman think that the profiteering of the milk dealers, the huge profits they make, and the profiteering of the people who supply the necessities to the farmers in the way of hay and other feed, enter into the problem, and does he not think that the trouble lies in that direction?

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. I say to the gentleman that although we have had a serious milk situation in our district and there have been many farmers who have been vitally affected by the low price of milk, at the same time there is just one reason for my presenting the measure at this time and that is because of the dire need which my district or your district or the district of any other agricultural Member or State may suffer in severe drought, flood, or other act of nature, and maybe next summer your district will be just as vitally affected as mine is now.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. Gladly.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman's bill is a two-way bill. It will help the people in the districts of the country where there is a scarcity of hay through an act of God, and at the same time it will help the people in other parts of the country where there is a surplus of hay.

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. I appreciate the gentleman mentioning that fact. It will do just that. I do not advocate bringing hay a great distance. My proposal is that the farmers of my district who need hay at nominal and reasonable prices and who find it economically unsound to borrow money at the existing price of hay, will be helped and it will also help surplus areas to dispose of the hay which they now have and are unable to sell.

I commend this measure to the House, and I thank each and every Member for the opportunity given to present it, because I can assure them that in my district there is vital need for it.

In closing let me say that I have been before the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture urging him, entreating him, at the behest of various committees and farm bureaus and agencies in my district, for a hearing on this bill. I shall greatly appreciate the assistance that any Member from an agricultural district will give me to get a hearing on this bill. I have the personal promise of the chairman, but I am still anxious to get a hearing so that I can present the case of the farmers who are drought-stricken and who are economically flattened by the fact that between now and pasture time they will be unable to feed their cattle on anything except through an expensive loan, which will put them into debt for a great number of years and will cause them to be unable to farm economically and profitably over a period of the next 4 or 5 years. I submit this in a nonsectional manner and ask that every Member here from an agricultural district consider it with thoroughness and openmindedness. [Applause.]

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, an amendment has been proposed to the agricultural appropriation bill now under consideration in the Senate which, if adopted, will destroy the domestic sugar industry. I believe this amendment was offered on the assumption that the conditional payments made to domestic sugar producers are a gratuity, and that the excise tax on sugar is a consumers' tax. This is an error, as any study of the present system will show. Because the conditional payments made to domestic sugar producers are published without reference to the excise tax that is levied on the sugar marketed in the United States it is assumed that these payments are gratuities. Nothing is further from the truth. Whatever may be said in regard to benefits extended to other agricultural commodities, the conditional payments to sugar producers is first collected by the Government in the form of excise taxes from the industry itself, and is not a charge against the general taxpayer.

In fact, a larger sum is collected from the industry than is paid back to the industry, leaving a considerable sum available to the Government for the expenses of administering the Sugar Act, and as a realization of the United States Treasury. At the time the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill was before the House, in early February, I was informed that excise taxes collected to date totaled $140,000,000 and only $86,000,000 had been expended, leaving a balance in the Treasury of $54,000,000.

It is obvious, therefore, that the conditional payments to sugar producers is not a gratuity nor a levy on the taxpayer, but a levy on the industry itself, returned in part to the sugar producers who comply with the various provisions of the Sugar Act, who in fact earn a refund of the tax already paid on the amount of sugar produced by them. To withhold the conditional payments, or to impose arbitrary limitations on the amount paid, without regard to compliance or production, destroys the integrity of the quota system. Such a procedure places the sugar producers in the position of having had their returns from the industry substantially reduced by an excise tax, with no compensatory offset. If it is proposed to place such limits on payments, then similar limits should be fixed on the amount of taxes to be collected.

The assumption that the excise tax is in effect a consumers' tax is based on the natural conclusion that this tax is passed on by the producer and processor to the consumer. Perhaps normally this would be the case, but the controls established in the Sugar Act prevent such a course in this instance; and the excise tax on sugar is not paid by the consumer.

I quote from a statement made by Secretary of Agriculture H. A. Wallace on March 15, 1937, in support of this contention:

> One is likely to assume that excise taxes increase prices under all conditions; but an excise tax on sugar, within certain limits, under a quota system is one of the exceptions.

Also, the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, in a report published in 1937, said:

> Since the total quota for sugar was completely filled each year, the quota system definitely limited the quantity of sugar made available for sale in the United States, regardless of the processing tax. Consumers would pay only a given price and aggregate amount for such a quantity, depending upon the existing state of demand, which is largely influenced by consumer purchasing power. Therefore, the tax did not affect the retail price in any way, at least over any appreciable period of time, and so could not have been passed on to consumers. (P. 67, "An analysis of the effect of the processing taxes levied under the Agricultural Adjustment Act," published 1937.)
> Since the tax was not borne by consumers or by refiners or distributors of cane sugar, and apparently was not borne by the manufacturers of raw sugar, it follows that the grower of cane sugar, as the residual element in the situation, did bear the burden of the tax as such.

The best proof that the consumer does not carry the burden of the excise tax is the record of the retail price of refined sugar over a number of years, under the protective-tariff system and under the quota system. The average retail price for the period 1909–13 was 5.95 cents higher than for 1935, 1936, 1938, and 1939. Over the period 1929 to 1939, inclusive, this price, the cost of sugar to the ultimate consumer, has ranged from 6.4 cents to 5 cents; but lower on the whole under the quota system, with a range of from 5.7 cents to 5.4 cents.

An American market free to all the producers of sugar in the world might give the American consumer cheaper sugar; but that lower price would be obtained only at the cost of the destruction of a great American industry. Also, the same might be said of many other American commodities, the tariff or a satisfactory substitute being necessary for their protection against foreign competition. On the other hand, America has had some bitter experiences when at the mercy of foreign producers. On several occasions when a domestic supply of sugar was lacking the price of sugar went to unreasonable heights, and complete dependence on imports would, if the past is any criterion, not help the consumer.

If it is conceded that the present system does not grant a gratuity to the sugar producers, and that the excise tax is not borne by the consumer, then the only remaining effect of the proposed limitation on conditional payments is as punitive legislation against large producers. Under the Sugar Act a sliding scale of payments is already prescribed which penalizes large producers and grants proportionately greater payments to the smaller producers.

Because the amounts paid to some producers are large, and the fact that a larger tax has already been collected on the sugar produced is rarely, if ever, mentioned, there is a tendency to fix a limit on such payments. That they were earned by compliance with the restrictions and other provisions of the Sugar Act is never stressed. No effort is made to determine the relative cost of production nor any attention paid to the number of persons employed by the larger producers and dependent for their livelihood on the prosperity of these industries. The limitation becomes simply a punishment for being big.

In this connection an excerpt from a letter by Acting Secretary of Agriculture Harry L. Brown with reference to some aspects of a proposed agricultural bill is quoted herewith as pertinent:

> By modifying the provision in section 340 (b), whereby the certificate allotments per farm would be scaled down as the total number of bushels increases. It is possible that this provision was included on the assumption that large producing units have a marked advantage from the standpoint of efficiency in production. If this assumption were correct, the ultimate effect of these scale-down provisions would be to foster the adoption of less efficient production units. On the other hand, efficiency of production seldom, if ever, increases in any given proportion to the increases in the size of the enterprise. Some small farms are low-cost producers and some large farms are high-cost producers. Consequently these scale-down provisions would not be an equitable means of avoiding excess profits. The equitable and nondiscriminatory device for this purpose is a tax on the things themselves, namely, high net incomes and excess profits.

Unfortunately, Hawaii, where plantation farms are by necessity operated in large units, is vulnerable to this sort of attack, and the large payments its producers receive are the object of much unjustifiable criticism. The truth is, Hawaii receives in conditional payments nearly $1,000,000 less than the amount of the tax collected on the sugar it produces. The industry employs over 47,000 persons, who, with their families, comprise over 100,000 people, about one-fourth of the total population. This group is directly dependent on the sugar industry for their livelihood. As the sugar industry comprises from 60 percent to 75 percent of Hawaii's economy, the welfare of the entire population of the Territory is involved with its prosperity. Limitations such as have been proposed are so drastic as to be in fact a legislative ban against the continued existence of the industry at all. Surely it cannot be seriously intended to deny economic life to Hawaii, which has in every way cooperated with other domestic producers of sugar, and asks only to be treated fairly and justly as a part of this American democracy, whose creed is "equal justice under the law."

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the bill for the extension of the reciprocal trade treaty program has passed this House and is now before the Senate, but I want to call the attention of the Members to the claims being made by the foreign traders that it was through their efforts, through their propaganda, that the reciprocal trade treaty measure was passed by this body and reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Finance.

About 2 weeks ago the New York Times carried a story, from which I will read you two paragraphs:

> Credit for the change in feeling of the Senate is claimed in part by the foreign traders who carried on an organized campaign in behalf of the trade treaties this year for the first time since the act was adopted 6 years ago. Working through civic groups, women's organizations, and similar bodies, the foreign traders have built up a strong feeling in favor of the treaties among consumers who, in turn, have brought pressure to bear on Congress.
> Effectiveness of the foreign traders' campaign, spokesmen for importers and exporters asserted, can be judged by the fact that in December the chances for Senate passage of the bill was considered so slim that the foreign traders themselves credited opponents with having at least 10 more votes than they needed to defeat the renewal bill in the Senate.

You will note that this story quotes the foreign traders as openly claiming credit for influencing the votes of more than 10 Members of the Senate on this issue.

Few persons realize the extent to which these foreign traders are working to induce the American people to buy foreign goods in preference to American-made merchandise. Government departments have had their share in the propaganda, as some of you know. On June 7, 1938, I spoke upon the floor of this House condemning the policy of the Government in going too far in recommending buying too much merchandise from foreign countries to the detriment of our industries and the workers in our own country. At that time I presented a copy of a syllabus on foreign trade used in the schools of New York City, which was prepared for the high-school division by the Board of Education of the City of New York, by the high-school coordinating committee, and the New York national foreign-trade committee, the High School Principals Association, with the cooperation of the United States Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, and the Port of New York Authority.

This syllabus was issued in the attempt to sell the idea to school children that foreign-made goods are better than those made here. The first page of the syllabus contained a statement which I want to repeat.

> All of us are attracted by new and novel things; also we believe that imported goods are better than our own. This further encourages trade between nations.

Of course, that was an outrageous thing, and I recall it to this House merely to show the kind of propaganda the foreign traders resort to, to make Americans buy foreign goods and in pressing for the continuation of the reciprocal trade treaty program.

Nobody would be foolish enough to claim that we should not have any foreign trade. That is not the question at issue. But when the largest commercial association in the country, the high-school associations, and the departments of our Government unite in promoting and advertising foreign-made goods as superior and preferable to our own, then it is time to call a halt.

This is the only country in the world where such a thing could happen. Try to picture the consequences of such a statement in any other nation. In some it would be tantamount to treason, so jealous are the authorities of their countries' manufactures. Every English boy and girl is taught to "Buy British," and this slogan is known throughout the world. British goods are advertised as being the best and a real resistance to foreign-made goods is noticeable in the British buying public.

The foreign-trade groups in America have gone to extreme ends, and boast about it, in influencing other groups in favor of the extension of these trade treaties. They induced the civic groups, women's organizations, such as the Young Women's Christian Association, and similar bodies to be placed on record in the hearings in favor of the trade treaties. So far as I can ascertain, however, the membership of these organizations has never acted upon the question. Certainly they would not willingly hurt the workers in the United States.

Long articles have been printed in leading magazines under the bylines of prominent people. One such appeared in a national weekly magazine, wherein a well-known and highly respected financier indicated clearly that his support of the trade-treaty program was based upon data issued by Department of State officials. Among other things, he wrote:

I know that the State Department figures as to the favorable working of the agreements have been challenged on some points, but I have no reason to doubt that the Department's compilations are substantially correct.

What a shame it is that before he made up his mind and before he wrote that article he did not have these compilations checked to see whether or not they represented the true facts. It is a known fact that during the 6 months beginning September 1, 1939, and ending February 1, 1940, American exports showed a marked increase over the amount during the same period a year ago. Before attributing this increase to the reciprocal trade treaty program it is wise to examine the details of our exports during this period. If we take a quick view of the circumstances we find our trade on the whole with Europe increased approximately 20 percent, Canada about 45 percent, South America about 55 percent, and Asia approximately 34 percent. Without looking any further, these percentages I have just mentioned disclose very interesting—in fact, significant—circumstances. The 20-percent increase in export trade with Europe is almost entirely due to the war. This is proved by the fact that products of such tremendous military value as aluminum increased during this 6-month period about 325 percent; raw cotton, 112 percent; aircraft, airplane engines and parts, almost 100 percent; and chemicals, approximately 65 percent. If these products for the use of destroying civilization were reduced to the normal commercial exports in a normal peaceful Europe, it appears quite obvious that our exports to Europe would show very little, if any, increase whatsoever.

Let us examine our exports to the more peaceful sections of the world, such as Canada, South America, and Asia—although we consider that there is a real war going on in Asia. Here we also find large increases in our exports such as I mentioned before. Where such marked increases occur there must be a cause for them. Is this cause the reciprocal trade treaty program? I think not, and for this reason: With the great industrial nations of the world locked in a conflict that might threaten their very existence, they cannot give attention to exports. For them the channels of trade are limited to the vital necessities for war. Their attention, their industrial life, with all of its ramifications, is riveted to one objective—winning the war. Human desires and demands never cease; they are constantly reflected in ever-changing market conditions. Markets are not static. It is perfectly obvious that with all of the industrial nations involved in war—except one—that one, which is the United States of America, would receive the large proportion of trade from the peaceful nations of the world. As the intensity of the war develops, their markets are gradually forced into the lap of the United States. This increase in trade with these sections during the 6 months mentioned is not, therefore, due to the Reciprocal Trade Treaty Act but rather to war tying up the industrial nations of Europe as well as Japan in Asia. Had the well-known financier whose support of the Reciprocal Trade Treaty Act based upon the statistical data of the Department of State given sufficient analysis and attention to the facts I have just presented, I believe his conclusions would have been different.

To illustrate another point which the financier could not have considered: Prior to a few weeks ago the proponents of the trade-treaty program compared our exports of 1937 and 1938 with our exports of 1932 and alleged that the increase in our exports since 1932 was due to our trade treaties with foreign nations. The fact is that the trade treaties were not authorized until June of 1934, and up to September of 1935 there was only one such treaty in effect a full year.

I believe no one will contend that we are going to provide jobs for our 10,000,000 of unemployed so long as we permit competitive imports to enter into American markets at less than our costs of production. Here in America we have fought hard against sweatshop conditions and impoverishing wages. We have established minimum-wage scales and maximum-hour regulations to protect our workers. We have done more to make the worker satisfied, to educate him and his family, to see that he is properly housed, and to guard his health than any other nation in the world. Now, because the foreign traders through their propaganda are admittedly successful in winning over legislators to their point of view, are we to be a party to the encouragement of these conditions abroad by admitting to our markets the products of pauper labor? Repeatedly upon this floor I have pointed out that we have the best labor in all the world—the best trained, best educated, best housed and clothed. Our workers are accustomed to a standard of living, and rightly so, that is far above that of workers abroad. It is a thing to be guarded and protected. Any influx of cheap-labor goods from abroad weakens that standard of living and undoes the good work of years in improving our standards. [Applause.]

The letter from the workers referred to and showing how they feel about these treaties is as follows:

PACIFIC MILLS WORSTED DIVISION EMPLOYEES ASSOCIATION,
Lawrence, Mass., March 13, 1940.

Hon. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MADAM: In order that you may appreciate more thoroughly the viciousness of these reciprocal-trade agreements insofar as they affect the city of Lawrence and similar centers, I am referring the following facts to you:

IMPORTS, WOOLEN PIECE GOODS

Imports increased substantially in November and December so that the total for the year was 78 percent above 1938 and 20 percent above 1937.

Wholly in chief value of wool and similar hair

1929	pounds	10,233,000
1930	do	5,182,000
1931	do	2,779,000
1932	do	1,899,000
1933	do	2,791,000
1934	do	2,485,000
1935	do	3,148,000
1936	do	4,532,000
1937	do	5,729,000
1938	do	3,865,000
1939	do	6,891,000

The above figures give the total imports of woven piece goods in pounds from 1929 through 1939. It will be observed that the imports for 1939 are higher than any year since 1929. England is making every effort to increase her exports of woolens in 1940.

It isn't necessary to go into any further statistics because the Department of Commerce in Washington is filled with those but we view with a great deal of concern the days which will follow the end of this struggle in Europe, not because we are not anxious for peace but rather because we fear an economic reaction which will be far worse than the one which followed the last World War. We read daily of special trade agreements which have been consummated between England and France on the one hand and Turkey, Rumania, and Italy on the other hand, with the result that when the war is over practically all of these countries will be committed to each other to such an extent that they will do most of the trading amongst themselves. The only contact that we will apparently have with them will be when their goods are imported into this country. In other words, it will be one-way traffic, with goods entering America and not leaving.

We trust that you will not let us down at a time when this act is the most dangerous to us. Vote to eliminate trade agreements and vote to keep American work for American workers.

Yours very truly,

PACIFIC MILLS WORSTED DIVISION
EMPLOYEES ASSOCIATION.
WILLIAM A. SHEARER, President.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER].

PARITY PAYMENTS FOR FARMERS

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, representing as I do what is largely an agricultural district in an agricultural State, it has been my privilege, and I have regarded it as a solemn duty, for the brief time that I have been a Member of this body to give considerable thought and effort to the problems of the farmers of this country. And I shall be frank enough to admit that I have been selfish enough in that consideration and effort to consider primarily the problems of the southern and more particularly the cotton farmer. I am profoundly and intensely interested in this subject, and so with your permission I should like to have your sympathetic attention and consideration of these problems for the next 15 or 20 minutes. But my chief purpose in so seeking your indulgence is to most particularly call your attention to the conference report on the Agriculture appropriation bill, which it will be the serious duty of this House to consider within the next few days. And I should also like to call your attention to one phase of that report, namely, the item appropriating $212,000,000 for parity payments which was placed in the bill by the Senate. It will be recalled that when the bill passed the House no provision was made therein for the continuation of the parity payments to the farmers. Of course this was no oversight by those of us who were so intensely interested in agriculture. But since the President had made no recommendation and the Budget had included no item therefor, it was thought that discretion would warrant no fight for this item in the consideration of the bill in the House. It was generally conceded by all interested parties that the Senate would place this item in the bill and that chances for its being written into the law would thereby be enhanced. This was not due to a lack of interest in agriculture in the House, although it is, of course, realized that because of the larger representation of States with great urban centers in the House as compared with the Senate, the representation of the farmers in the two bodies suffers by comparison. But it was hoped that between the lapse of time between the passage of the bill by the House and its passage by the Senate, those who had hoped that wartime activities would bring about an increase in the price of agricultural commodities would more forcefully realize that such a coveted event was not likely to happen.

And so, Mr. Speaker, the bill comes back from the Senate with an appropriation therein for something approaching parity payments for the farmers of this country for 1941. Realizing as I do that there is such a disparity in the representation of the rural areas I nevertheless cannot believe that this House will fail to do its duty to the farmers and to the country by failing to retain this appropriation item in the agriculture appropriation bill.

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. I yield.

Mr. RICHARDS. I understood the gentleman to say a day or two ago he was planning to call a meeting of Representatives interested in agriculture to take some steps on this subject. I want to know whether the gentleman has done anything about that, or whether he intends to, looking toward keeping these parity payments in the bill.

Mr. COLMER. I may say to the membership and to the gentleman from South Carolina that this matter is now under consideration. We hope to have a meeting or caucus of all interested Members in a few days. I have discussed it with the various leaders of the subcommittee on agricultural appropriations and of the legislative committee on agriculture, and others interested.

Mr. RICHARDS. I am glad to hear of that, as I know of no gentleman more interested in this problem than the gentleman from Mississippi, nor of anyone better qualified to lead the movement. Day in and day out he has worked for the best interests of the farmer here.

PARITY PAYMENTS BENEFICIAL TO CITY INHABITANTS

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, in this connection let me point out to those of you who represent large metropolitan centers that the urban citizens cannot be prosperous without the farmer first enjoying some form of prosperity. Our whole civilization and national life is so interwoven that the one cannot be prosperous without the other. History reflects the fact that in order for the inhabitant of New York City to enjoy a fair degree of prosperity the farmer of Georgia and Mississippi must first likewise enjoy a fair price for the commodities which he produces from the soil. So let no Member of this House representing an urban center be deluded into a state of blissful indifference to the welfare of the farmers of this country. For, verily I say to you now that if this item does not remain in this bill, your constituents who labor in the automobile factories, the shoe factories, the clothing factories, or whatever industry they are engaged in, will suffer in ratio to the degree of the inadequacy of the price that the farmer receives for his crop next year.

But, Mr. Chairman, I shall not dwell upon this longer. There should be no necessity therefor. For, after all, I am sure that we in this great representative body realize—however selfish we might be in representing our particular constituency—that in the long run whatever benefits one section of the country is bound to benefit the other. Therefore this is no sectional matter. There is no occasion for the South being arrayed against the North—or the East against the West—for it is a matter of common knowledge that parity price payments to the farmers of all sections of the country, as provided in this appropriation, can have but one result, a happier agricultural people, a more prosperous Nation, an increase in employment, and a stronger and more contented national existence.

PARITY DEFINED

Mr. Chairman, of course, the membership of this House understands what we mean by parity payments. But it would not be amiss here to call the attention of the membership to the fact that section 301 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 provides for and defines parity and parity income as follows:

> Parity as applied to prices for any agricultural commodity shall be that price for the commodity which will give to the commodity a purchasing power with respect to articles that farmers buy equivalent to the purchasing power of such commodity in the base period. The base period, except for tobacco, is the period of August 1909 to July 1914.
> Parity as applied to income for agriculture shall be that per capita net income of individuals on farms from farming operations that bears to the per capita net income of individuals not on farms the same relation as prevails during the period from August 1909 to July 1914.

But we might go a little further and ask what is meant by net income from farming operations. Net income means income that the farmer has that is available for living after he has deducted from what he received for his products the amount that he has paid for fertilizer, feed, interest, taxes, and the ordinary and incidental expenses incurred in his farming operations. The 1909 to 1914 period is used as a yardstick for measuring parity prices and income. Certainly no one can contend that the farmer is not entitled, in these days of increased prices for everything that he uses, to what he was receiving in the period from 1909 to 1914. But I call the attention of the membership of the House to the fact that this appropriation does not even do that. It is merely an attempt to reach the parity prices so arrived at. We are not asking for an appropriation here large enough to give agriculture a parity income in 1941. What we are seeking by this appropriation is sufficient money to be paid to the farmer to guarantee an income on the basic commodities of corn, wheat, cotton, rice, and tobacco to 75 percent of parity. There are many of us, frankly, who would like to see an appropriation sufficient to pay full parity prices provided for. But realizing the difficulties to be surmounted we are only asking for 75 percent of parity prices by this appropriation.

Mr. Chairman, there is no question about the necessity for this appropriation. What will happen to the farmers of this country if this appropriation is not made? It is estimated that the cotton farmer will receive around 6 to 8 cents per pound for his cotton, and the wheat farmer will receive around 30 to 45 cents per bushel for his wheat if provision is not made by this appropriation for a continuation of these payments for the next year. The already harassed farmer, harassed by an ever-increasing price that he must pay for everything that he purchases, cannot produce these basic commodities at such a price. That being true how can he be expected not only to purchase the articles that are manufactured in the cities, but how is he going to exist under such conditions?

FARM INCOME

I hope that you will bear with me further while I call your attention briefly to some statistics. What has been the average income of the farmer over the period of the past 5 years? Statistics compiled by the Department of Agriculture show that the net income of each person living on the farm for the past 5 years has been $166 per year per person. While the same statistics show that the net income of persons not engaged in farming, for the same period, has been $625 per year per person. Can any fair-minded person, therefore, for a moment, argue against this effort to approach parity payments for our farmers? Can it be argued, without the blush of shame, that this pitiable net income should be further reduced? And I hope that the Members will bear in mind that this income has been over the period of the past 5 years and takes into consideration the parity payments and other governmental subsidies. How can the farmer be expected to pay his taxes, his interest, buy new farm machinery, and send his children to school, as well as to enjoy a few of the luxuries of modern life—such as the automobile, the radio, and electricity—on an income less than that which he has been receiving for the past 5 years?

INCREASED COST IN THE PRICE OF FARMERS' PURCHASES

And in this connection may I not call your attention to a further analogy? The distinguished Secretary of Agriculture, in his testimony before the Senate Agriculture Committee, very graphically pointed out the inequality in the position of the farmer, as compared with other groups, by reading from two mail-order catalogs, such as are found in practically every farm home in the country. The catalogs were for the years 1913 and 1940, respectively. He gave, for instance, the average price that the farmer had to pay for a work shirt in 1913 as 57 cents. While in 1940 the catalog listed the same shirt as 73 cents—a 28 percent increase in the price the farmer has to pay for an ordinary work shirt today over what he paid for the same shirt in 1913.

Or to put it another way, in terms that anyone can understand, the farmer in 1913 could purchase with 8.4 pounds of hogs an average work shirt. While in 1940 he would have to sell 14 pounds of hogs to buy the same shirt. In terms of cotton—in 1913 the Mississippi farmer could, from the proceeds of 4.7 pounds of raw cotton, have purchased a work shirt. While in 1940 he would have to sell 7.2 pounds of raw cotton to purchase the same cotton shirt. This contrast could be carried on indefinitely, but with the permission of the House, which I now seek, I will insert at this point two tables, as furnished me by the Secretary of Agriculture, which most graphically illustrate this point:

TARIFF

But, Mr. Chairman, I realize that there are those here who are opposed to these payments on the ground that they are subsidies to the farmer. Well, I admit that they are subsidies, and why should not there be some sort of subsidy to the farmer? We are living in a very complex and complicated era of our civilization. We have found it necessary to subsidize many activities and endeavors that are a part of our national existence. For instance, we found it necessary to annually subsidize the air-mail service to the extent of $8,000,000. We are subsidizing our second-class mail to the extent of $87,000,000 annually. We are subsidizing our airports and airways to the extent of $50,000,000. Our waterways are being subsidized to the extent of $100,000,000. Our public-roads sytem is being annually subsidized to the extent of $1,200,000,000. What about the billions that we are appropriating annually for national defense? All of these items, the Congress has determined, are essential in this period of social and economic upheaval. But what about the gigantic subsidy in the form of tariffs which go to the industry of the country? I do not hear the opponents of these measly pittances, in the form of appropriations to the farmer, raising any question about the gigantic, if indirect, subsidies that result from the tariff. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, if it were not, in my humble judgment, for the high-tariff walls that were erected under a Republican administration, and which contributed to the collapse of our world economic structure, there possibly would be no necessity for subsidy to the farmer. Can anyone deny that the iniquitous practice of building up these veritable Chinese walls in the form of tariff barriers contributed largely to the loss of the exports of our surplus agricultural commodities? Certainly, if industry is entitled to a subsidy in the form of a tariff so as to bring about an average net income of $625 per person to those engaged in industry and other allied endeavors, no one should have the temerity to suggest that the farmer should not be entitled to a subsidy sufficient to bring his net income up to $166 per person, which is all it is hoped this appropriation would do.

PRESIDENT'S ATTITUDE

But, it will be argued here in the next few days that this item will upset the Budget, and that the President is opposed to it. Mr. Speaker, I assume that this item will upset the Budget to an extent. But, so far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing for it to be upset to that extent. As a matter of fact, while we prate about balancing the Budget we all know that the Budget would not be balanced even if the farmer were made to make this additional sacrifice. And, I might mention that the farmer is the only one who has been asked to sacrifice in order to balance the Budget; and, so far as I am concerned, I am not willing to be a party to making the farmer the proverbial goat of this drive to retrench and economize. But, it will be argued again that the President is opposed to this item for parity payments. I do not think that anyone has a right to quote the President to that effect. We do know that the President, in his message on the Budget, said:

> I have not, however, included estimates for new appropriations for parity payments in 1941. I am influenced by the hope that next year's crops can be sold by their producers for at least 75 percent of parity. I do not suggest in any way the abandonment of the policy of parity payments heretofore adopted, and future events may call for some appropriation to this end. I note, however, in passing, that the Congress has failed to make any provision for the financing of these payments already made or obligated for 1938 and 1939 crops.

But it will be borne in mind that this message was sent to the Congress several weeks ago when the President, like everyone else, hoped that there might be an increase in the price of agricultural commodities as a result of war activities abroad which would justify the leaving out of this item from the Budget. But we know now that no such thing has happened. Nor do we have any reason to believe that it will happen. On the contrary, all indications point to the fact that the European countries will utilize their credit in this country for the purchase of arms and ammunition rather than agricultural commodities.

Let us analyze the President's statement in the Budget, which reads in part as follows:

> I am influenced by the hope that next year's crops can be sold by their producers for at least 75 percent of parity.

Can it be said that this is an argument against parity? On the contrary, it is an argument for parity, for does it not follow that if this appropriation remains in the bill and the price of agricultural commodities should rise sharply enough to meet the President's hope "for at least 75 percent of parity" then there would be no necessity for using the appropriation.

However, I am in accord with the President in his statement to the effect that there should be some provision made for placing parity payments on a more substantial basis. I think that we should work out some comprehensive and effective legislation of a self-liquidating nature which would insure not 75 percent of parity but full parity prices. And that on a permanent basis rather than on a piecemeal basis, asking Congress for these appropriations from year to year.

Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in this permanent legislation. I have discussed it with members of the House Agriculture Committee. In fact, they are considering legislation to that end now. It so happens that about 2 years ago I collaborated with two of my distinguished colleagues, the gentlemen from Texas, Messrs. PATMAN and POAGE, and we jointly introduced such a bill. The difficulty of this legislation was that it was more or less confined to cotton. But it is safe to say that those of us interested are going to do everything within our power, without pride of authorship, to bring about such legislation.

CONCLUSION

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, allow me to say that this Congress has heretofore recognized the necessity for parity payments. The Congress has provided for such payments by appropriate legislation. This is merely an appropriation carrying out the mandate of Congress to provide such payments by a sufficient appropriation. If there was necessity for parity payments in 1938, 1939, and 1940, there is certainly necessity for parity payments in 1941. The Congress will be most derelict in its duty to the farmer and to the country if it fails to make the necessary appropriation available for these parity payments.

Mr. Chairman, last fall the President of the United States called the Congress into extraordinary session for the purpose of enacting a neutrality bill that would keep this country out of war so far as it was humanly possible by legislation to do so. The Congress enacted that legislation. You and I were primarily interested in keeping this country out of war. We said by that legislation that we were willing to make substantial economic sacrifices in order to keep out of war. We did make the greatest and most colossal sacrifice that any powerful Nation like ours has ever made in an effort to keep out of war and to prevent millions of young Americans from spilling their blood on the altar of the god of war. But may I not point out to you that possibly among the chief sufferers and among those who were called upon to make the greatest sacrifices were the farmers of this country when by virtue of this neutrality law we kept our ships from going to the ports of belligerent nations and required cash payments for our products, thereby lessening the opportunity of the farmers of this country to dispose of their surplus agricultural commodities. Shall we now deny them this appropriation to partially off-set that sacrifice? The farmers of America have throughout the ages demonstrated their patriotism and their loyalty to this country from the Minute Men of '76 down the years through the last great World War. Let us not, in this effort to prevent this country from becoming drawn into this war, turn the back of our hands to the farmers by requiring them to make all of the sacrifices. I hope in common fairness and justice to that great class of our patriotic American citizenship—the farmers of America, who number 25 percent of our population—that this House will appropriate these necessary funds for these necessary parity payments. [Applause.]

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. MILLS of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, the three great fundamental problems before the United States are the farm problem, unemployment, and the industrial question. True enough, Congress has endeavored to bring the price of farm products to parity, or a level with manufactured products, but to this end we have only reached our objective to about 75 percent, taking into consideration all farm commodities; that is, when the great mass of the farming people need $1 worth of merchandise they are only able to buy 75 cents worth. However, in the case of the cotton farmer, he is only able to purchase 55 cents worth, considering the price he received for his 1939 cotton crop. So let us turn the page and note the public workingman's problem. Do you know what we will find? Approximately 11,000,000 men unemployed. Yet in our beautiful land of America, where there is too much to eat, too much to wear, and too much of everything to supply the demands, we find people hungry, undernourished, poorly clad, and without the very necessities of life. Therefore it is not enough to paint an unpleasing picture or situation and sit idly by and see our farmers till the soil and at the close of the year's hard task be forced to accept for his produce—cotton, cottonseed, corn, and other commodities—a price far less than the cost of production. Therefore we must come to the rescue of our unfortunate farmers and laboring men of America by showing that Congress has an interest in that they may enjoy some of the pleasures and happiness that God intended for them to enjoy.

I hesitate to state it, but the farming question is becoming a deplorable problem, and unless Congress now undertakes a sound program dealing with the subject in a more comprehensive manner, not forgetting labor, agriculture, and industry, I say disaster is looming directly at every man's door.

Now, let no one say I am undertaking to depreciate certain benefits from the Agricultural Adjustment Act, such as soil conservation, the purchasing of surplus commodities, and other recourses available the last several years, but the fact remains they have not solved the farm problem, and instead they have failed by a wide margin to bring farm prices or the farm income up to parity or near parity. Why, cottonseed sold from approximately $12 per ton at the opening of the 1939 season to $24 per ton at the close of the season. Why, so frightful was this condition in the South until the farmer had to make financial arrangements whereby he could harvest his crop, whereas the farmer has always enjoyed a price for his seed that would enable him to pay for his ginning as well as the harvesting of his crop. So far the bait that has been sugar-coated and handed to the American farmer are only efforts, it appears to me, to redeem certain national political campaign pledges. I say they have had a fair and exhaustive trial, but in no respect does the present agricultural program assure the American farmer a price for his products on a par basis of cost, and this statement can well be borne out by the following table prepared and submitted by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics.

Prices received by farmers for specified commodities on Nov. 15, 1919 and 1939, and parity price Nov. 15, 1939

Commodity	Unit	Prices received by farmers on Nov. 15		Parity price, Nov. 15, 1939

Wool, per pound	Cents	51.0	27.6	23.4

You will note in the middle column, or column 2, is the price we are paying the farmer, and in column 3 is the price we promised him, whereas in column 1 is the price the farmer received in 1919. It is true and we acknowledge without the agricultural measures we have had prices would be far less; but do you think it is fair for farmers to collect one-half of his pay for his day's work?

Further, the national income for 1939 was $67,608,000,000, whereas the farming population, consisting of approximately one-third of the Nation's people, only received $4,458,000,000, which is less than 7 percent of the national income. So farm prices and farm income have been steadily dropping for 5 years, according to the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, while labor and industry costs entering into farm necessities have been rising to such a degree until it is almost impossible for the farmer to continue; and at this point I would like to quote from several of our leading agricultural authorities relative to our present farm program.

William Hirth, president of the Missouri Farmers Association and chairman of the historic Corn Belt Committee, who led the fight for the McNary-Haugen bill, and without whose support it could not have been passed, says:

> Agriculture is facing a new crisis. Already Secretary Wallace has sounded a warning that there is no assurance that the new Congress will be willing to keep on appropriating hundreds of millions of dollars * * * and thus it is not unlikely that the farm relief of recent years, economically unsound * * * as it has been, will come to an end and the farmers will once more be left to root hog or die. * * * Will the Democratic leaders have the courage to tell the consumers of the Nation that they should be willing to pay the farmer cost of production, plus a reasonable profit, for the products of his toil? Or, to put it another way, when they tell our millions of city workers that they are entitled to an American standard of living, will they have the honesty and courage to tell them that they should be willing to concede the same kind of living standard to the farmer? * * * If the farm men and women of the United States were willing to ignore partisan politics and would speak with one voice, they would make demands for economic justice to agriculture which neither party would dare ignore, and the time is close at hand when farmers must act in this manner if the Republic is to be preserved.

And I quote from a statement made by Earl Smith, of Illinois, who is one of the most able farm leaders of America:

> Everything yet done by Congress for the solution of the farm problem has been to appease the farmer rather than directed fully to the solution of the agricultural problem.

Edward A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, writes:

> I am willing to support any feasible and reasonable farm program and support any and all reasonable expenditures in behalf of agriculture, if only there is some prospect that a solution will be found. In the light of the experience of the last few years, with generous appropriations to carry out a program for curtailing supply and expanding demand, is there anyone so bold as to insist that we have found the solution, or, if not, approximate solution? It is results that we are after, and I believe I express the sentiment of a majority of farmers that they seek results rather than experimentation.

Louis J. Taber, master of the National Grange, said at the seventy-third annual convention of the Grange:

> We have not yet solved our farm problem. The farmer is not receiving his share of the national income. Although he has educated, housed, clothed, and fed 31 percent of the youth of the land, the prices he has received for the last 10 years equal only 78 percent of the prices he has paid for commodities and services used in rural life.

Prices paid the farmer for what he sells are so low that when the year's accounting is taken he has not enough money to pay his taxes and interest, and as a result a percentage of our farmers throughout the Nation are losing their homes, and this can be well borne out by the fact that the big life-insurance companies of this country are farming 29,000,000 acres of land, and it might be well to note in 1937 the biggest single beneficiary of the New Deal's program was the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. An Agricultural Department report to Congress revealed this company received $257,095 in A. A. A. benefits on farms which it owns. Nearly all the top payments went to life-insurance companies, which have become large-scale owners of farms through mortgage foreclosures. The Federal monopoly committee evidence indicated recently that active competition among insurance companies for farm mortgages during the period following the World War made insurance companies the largest farmers in the United States. Therefore, it is very evident that in the light of experience of the last few years, with generous appropriations to carry out a program for curtailing production and undertaking to expand demand or undertaking to increase consumption at the cost of production, we have not discovered a proper solution, so I believe the Agricultural Committee should bring to this House a bill in this present session of Congress that will at least guarantee cost of production. However, in the meantime, we must increase the present agricultural appropriation bill which is pending before Congress at least $800,000,000, whereby Congress may be able to carry out our contract with the American farmer. The farming people of the Nation have shown their willingness to participate in the present agricultural program through cooperation, knowing, however, the program did not give agriculture proper recognition, but the poor farmer has accepted part of the loaf as a lamb being led to the slaughter pen without a cry. So if this present Congress should not appropriate the necessary funds to carry out our contract we will have broken faith in that the farmers were led to believe they would be paid certain benefits through participation.

I believe it is a well-established principle, through the economic relationship of business, labor, and agriculture, that for a people to be prosperous economically the farmer must be given cost of production plus a profit for his produce, labor a decent wage, and business a profit. Why, you wouldn't ask a manufacturing concern to operate without paying operating cost. Then after cost of production—certainly no program can have a healthful life, whether it be agriculture, industry, or labor, unless a fair margin of profit is realized. No one would deny or neglect to accept this philosophy; therefore the paramount question arises, What method of approach will be accepted as a permanent cure for agriculture? Well, admitting first the farmer is entitled to parity, to which there is no disagreeing opinion, we must then consider production, but at no time are we to have curtailment of production during the years we actually cultivate the land, but, to the contrary, permit a farmer to produce all he may.

You see, under the present program a farmer is assigned a certain acreage allotment and is given, in addition, certain small benefit payments, but the big objection to the present agricultural program is that thousands of our farmers are losing their homes each year; in fact, 40,000 families each year are becoming tenant families and certain tenants and sharecroppers, as well as certain landowners, today are actually in need of the very necessities of life, such as food and clothes. I repeat again, I personally do not depreciate soil-conservation, purchasing of surplus commodities, and farm-tenant legislation but favor them. However, one step, and a proper one, is to give agriculture an even keel with industry. The country and Congress must accept Alexander Hamilton's views on the question of tariff or else it will be too late to plant corn after harvesting; then I believe we will have made the first step toward a sound and appreciative agricultural program. Hamilton, the first advocate of a protective tariff in this country, recognized that the farmer, as well as the manufacturer, needs Government assistance when he suggested that the farmer be paid a bounty as an offset to the tariff. I read a statement from Alexander Hamilton, as follows:

> The true way to conciliate these two interests is to lay a duty on foreign manufactures of the material, the growth of which is desired to be encouraged, and to apply the produce of that duty, by way of bounty, either upon the production of the material itself or upon its manufacture at home, or upon both. In this disposition of the thing the manufacturer commences his enterprise under every advantage which is attainable as to quantity or price of the raw material, and the farmer, if the bounty be immediately to him, is enabled by it to enter into a successful competition with the foreign material.

Therefore, I insist the farmer should have an offset to the tariff and be put on an equality with industry, as he is equally in need of this protection. I would like to quote at this point from Mr. MARVIN JONES, chairman of the Agriculture Committee, House of Representatives, as of February 8, 1938, on the subject of tariff.

> I believe in the philosophy of a tariff for all or a tariff for none.

Second, we recognize the law of scarcity and demand; therefore, I believe it a necessity for the fields to lie idle every seventh year by declaring a cotton holiday and during this year when the land is not being cultivated we can pay to the landowner, including the tenant and sharecropper, a sum equal to an average to his 6-year income.

Now assuming that agricultural production will be cared for in the manner specified in the Bible and given an offset to the tariff, we would raise all the cotton that we could raise, all the corn, wheat, and everything else that we could raise. Let us say, for example, that we raised more cotton than we could use, but this is only a gesture as if everybody could buy all the towels, all the sheets, all the bedding, all the clothing, all the carpets, all the window curtains, and all of everything else they reasonably need America would consume 20,000,000 bales of cotton per year without having to sell a bale to the foreign countries. The same would be true of all other farm products.

But for the sake of argument, let us say, however, that there would be a surplus, and I hope there will be, because it will do the country good to have a big surplus in case of famine, war, or calamity. Let us take cotton for an example, by saying the United States will have a market for 10,000,000 bales and that we raise 15,000,000 bales of cotton. We will store 5,000,000 bales in warehouses provided by the Government. If the next year we raise 15,000,000 bales of cotton and only need 10,000,000, we will store another 5,000,000 bales of cotton and the Government will care for that. When we reach the year when we have enough cotton to last for 12 or 18 months as we have in store presently we will plant no more cotton for that year.

So I contend if we would recognize this law of practice and at the same time give the farmer an offset to the tariff the farmer would be immediately placed on equality with industry, giving this great mass of people the first breath of hope, cheer, and happiness. [Applause.]

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK] as he may desire.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, the bill as presented to us provides $85,000,000 for the National Youth Administration, which is the full amount of the Budget estimate for the coming year. While it is true that that amount is $4,000,000 more than the Appropriations Committee wrote into the bill a year ago for the National Youth Administration, it is also true that it is $15,000,000 less than was appropriated last year for the N. Y. A. In this case it is a Budget cut, whereas a year ago there was a committee cut. Several of us who are very vitally interested in this appropriation remember that the Budget last year recommended $123,000,000 for this work, and when the committee bill was before the House it contained an item for $81,000,000 in the printed draft. Some of us at that time felt that the Budget estimate was nearer right than the committee provision.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] and several other gentlemen, of whom I was one, made an effort last year to amend the bill and raise it to the $123,000,000 which the President had approved. We failed on the first amendment, but did get an amendment added which increased the amount by $19,000,000, thus appropriating $100,000,000 for the present year for the National Youth Administration. I have talked with several gentlemen who feel an amendment should be offered to increase the amount in the bill now before the House.

In former sessions I have received many communications from my constituents asking me to support a liberal N. Y. A. appropriation. Perhaps it is because I have been a schoolman and am known to sympathize with the program that schoolmen of Arizona have contacted me so freely on this item. It has been the schoolmen heretofore, from the president of the State university down to classroom teachers, who have asked me to work for a generous N. Y. A. support. However, this year I have received communications from parents and ministers of the gospel and educational lay members. Their urging is very significant.

Heretofore, I have thought mostly of the fine, constructive work which this fund has done for young people in high schools and colleges. I have commented on what I have seen in my own experience with small colleges in the West. I now am agreeably surprised to learn that the N. Y. A. program has been greatly expanded beyond that which I knew as dean of a teachers college. I am surprised and pleased to see how much "out of school" aid has been given. I am also pleased to see that young people have not been discriminated against because of race or color, which is as it should be. I learned that in Arizona in 1 year 63 young colored persons have been located in private employment by this agency, and 96 young colored students have had opportunity to pay a part of their expenses in high school and college.

I do not have the figures at hand concerning Mexican students, but I know positively that, at the small college where I worked before coming to Congress, worthy young Mexicans were given impartial consideration such as was accorded all other students, and they participated in the benefits of the program as did all others. I have many times before indicated to the Members that some of the best students graduating from my college were enabled to complete their college work through this program of Government aid. I know that it has been a wise investment.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. COOPER, having resumed the chair, Mr. BUCK, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 9007, had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by printing a radio address by the Honorable Gifford Pinchot, former Governor of Pennsylvania and also the first Chief Forester of this country, on the subject of the farmer and the Forest Service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in the remarks I made on the bill under consideration today a letter from the Pacific Mills, Worsted Division, Employees Association, on the subject of the reciprocal trade agreement policy and the very objectionable part that the foreign traders have played in securing the passage of that bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a proclamation regarding cancer control, issued by the President yesterday under the provisions of Public Resolution 82, Seventy-fifth Congress, which I introduced and was successful in securing the passage of.

I also call the attention of the House to the bill, H. R. 4585, which, if passed, I think would very materially lessen the dread disease, cancer. I hope it will be given consideration at this session.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER] may be given an indefinite leave of absence because of serious injury suffered in an automobile accident last evening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY] may be given leave of absence for the next 2 or 3 days on account of official business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GRIFFITH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short table which summarizes the current operations of the National Youth Administration in Louisiana and the program of the National Youth Administration in my district.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GRIFFITH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] may extend his own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. SHEPPARD]?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BURGIN, for 10 days, on account of illness.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 1398. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917, as amended, to increase the penalties for peacetime violations of such act; and

S. 1750. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to convey to the town of Marmet, W. Va., two tracts of land to be used for municipal purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, March 25, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold hearings at 10 a. m. on the following dates on the matters named:

Wednesday, March 27, 1940:

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold public hearings on Wednesday, March 27, 1940, at 10 a. m., on the following bills providing for Government aid in the lumber industry: H. R. 7463 (ANGELL) and H. R. 7505 (BOYKIN).

Tuesday, April 2, 1940:

H. R. 7169, authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to establish additional boards of local inspectors in the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation.

Tuesday, April 9, 1940:

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold public hearings on Tuesday, April 9, 1940, at 10 a. m., on the following bill: H. R. 7637, relative to liability of vessels in collision.

Tuesday, April 16, 1940:

H. R. 8475, to define "American fishery."

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization Wednesday, March 27, 1940, at 10:30 a. m., for the public consideration of H. R. 4221, Naturalization not denied alien because on relief, and H. R. 7239, to naturalize Filipinos.

COMMITTEE ON PATENTS

The Committee on Patents will hold hearings Thursday, March 21, 1940, at 10:30 a. m., on S. 2689, to amend section 33 of the Copyright Act of March 4, 1909, relating to unlawful importation of copyrighted works.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

The hearings scheduled on the dates below have now been indefinitely postponed until further notice:

The Committee on Patents will hold hearings Wednesday and Thursday, April 10 and 11, 1940, at 10:30 a. m. each day, on H. R. 8441, to afford greater protection to the purchaser of patent rights; H. R. 8442, to prohibit proof of acts done by an inventor in foreign countries; H. R. 8443, to give the Commissioner of Patents power to protect inventors by establishing adequate standards of professional conduct among attorneys; and H. R. 8444, to permit the assignee of an application for letters patent to make certain supplemental applications.

COMMITTEE ON INSULAR AFFAIRS

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Insular Affairs on Friday, March 22, 1940, at 10 a. m., for the consideration of H. R. 8239, creating the Puerto Rico Water Resources Authority, and for other purposes.

COMMITTEE ON FLOOD CONTROL

SCHEDULE OF HEARINGS ON FLOOD-CONTROL BILL OF 1940 BEGINNING MARCH 18, 1940, AT 10 A. M., DAILY

The hearings will be on reports submitted by the Chief of Engineers since the Flood Control Act of June 28, 1938, and on amendments to existing law. The committee plans to report an omnibus bill with authorizations of approximately one hundred and fifty to one hundred and seventy-five million dollars covering the principal regions of the country.

1. Monday, March 18: Maj. Gen. Julian L. Schley, Chief of Engineers, has been requested to make a general statement, with his recommendations covering a general flood-control bill and the projects that should be included in the bill. He, the president of the Mississippi River Commission, the assistants to the Chief of Engineers, the division engineers, and the district engineers will be requested to submit additional statements as individual projects are considered and as desired by the committee.

2. Tuesday, March 19: Sponsors and representatives of the Corps of Engineers, from New England, New York, and the Atlantic seaboard on all reported projects and pending bills.

3. Wednesday, March 20: Sponsors and representatives of the Corps of Engineers, from the upper Ohio and tributaries, on additional authorizations for levees, flood walls, and reservoirs.

4. Thursday, March 21: Sponsors and representatives of the Corps of Engineers, from the lower Ohio and tributaries, on additional authorizations for levees, flood walls, and reservoirs.

5. Friday, March 22: Sponsors and representatives of the Corps of Engineers, for the upper Mississippi and tributaries, and Missouri River and tributaries.

6. Saturday, March 23: Sponsors and representatives of the Corps of Engineers for projects on the Arkansas River and tributaries.

7. Monday, March 25: Sponsors and representatives of the Corps of Engineers for projects on the White River and tributaries.

SENATE

FRIDAY, MARCH 22, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, March 4, 1940)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., Chaplain of the House of Representatives, offered the following prayer:

O Thou who hast borne our griefs and carried our sorrows, Thou who wast wounded for our transgressions and bruised for our iniquities, consider and hear us. Allow not the clouds and the darkness to be around about Thy throne. We bow and bend at the altar of prayer, mercy, and supplication. We unveil the cross and behold infinite love struggling for infinite expression.

God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish but have everlasting life.

Not unto us, O Lord, but unto Thy holy name be glory and honor, both now and ever. We pray that Thy holy truth may become coextensive with the being of man throughout the wide earth. O, may the throngs touch the hem of Thy garment, that the pangs of hate and paralyzing fear may no longer stain the hearts of men.

We tarry a moment as we vision the rugged brow of Calvary clothed in darkness and blackness because of human weakness and sin. God help us to glimpse and to vision at its foot the glory, the promise, the faith, and the hope of a new coming day. In Thy holy name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Thursday, March 21, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN DISBURSING AGENTS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation for the relief of certain disbursing agents and certifying officers of the Indian Service, the United States Veterans' Administration, and the Treasury Department, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution of the Council of the City of Cambridge, Mass., favoring increased appropriations for the W. P. A. so as to maintain present quotas and avoid lay-offs, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Local No. 65 (C. I. O.), United Wholesale and Warehouse Employees, of New York, N. Y., protesting against involvement of the United States in war, and opposing all loans to belligerent countries, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a memorial from Local No. 65 (C. I. O.), United Wholesale and Warehouse Employees, of New York, N. Y., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to establish a merit-rating plan for unemployment insurance benefits, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WALSH presented a resolution of the Council of the City of Quincy, Mass., favoring additional appropriations for the W. P. A. in the State of Massachusetts, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WILEY presented resolutions adopted by the Polish-American Citizens Club, of Milwaukee, Wis., favoring appropriations for Polish relief and the rendering of aid to the people of Poland, and the exiles therefrom, suffering as a result of the twofold invasion of that country, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BARKLEY presented the following resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Kentucky, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration:

House Resolution 125

Concurrent resolution requesting the Government of the United States to cause the deportation of undesirable aliens carrying on un-American and subversive activities

Whereas the American Government has proved to be the best ever conceived by man, being capable of amendment and adaptation to meet every human need and condition; and

Whereas the citizens of this Nation are capable of making such changes, adjustments, and adaptations as they may desire and as may be needed, without suggestions, advice, or attempted compulsion of aliens or agents of any foreign government; and

Whereas there are in this country many persons engaged in un-American, subversive, and destructive activities seeking to change our form of government and to undermine the very foundations of our liberties, peace, happiness, and well-being, and much of this un-American and destructive activity was and is being initiated, carried on, and financed by aliens who enjoy the protection of the American flag and the blessing of our free institutions; and

Whereas in these days of wars, international chaos, domestic agitation, and uncertainty it behooves the American people to zealously guard and protect the institutions that have made this the greatest nation in the history of mankind; and

Whereas these problems are of vital concern to the cities of Kentucky as they are to all other American citizens: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky:

1. That we respectfully and urgently request our National Government to use all available means to speedily deport all aliens who are engaged in un-American and subversive activities and who may be advocating or seeking to change, modify, or overthrow our form of government and institutions by force or otherwise, or who are members of or affiliated in any way with any organization engaged in such activities, or that is supported and financed in whole or in part by aliens or by any foreign government.

2. If existing laws do not confer sufficient authority for the deportation of the aliens referred to in this resolution, we respectfully request the National Congress to speedily enact necessary legislation.

3. A copy of this resolution shall be sent by the secretary of state to the President of the United States, to the clerk of the United States Senate, to the Clerk of the United States House of Representatives, to the Secretary of Labor, and to the Kentucky representatives in the United States Senate and the United States House of Representatives.

I, George Glenn Hatcher, secretary of state of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing copy of House Resolution No. 125 is a true and correct copy of said resolution.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal.

Done at Frankfort, Ky., this 18th day of March 1940.

[SEAL] GEORGE GLENN HATCHER,
Secretary of State, Commonwealth of Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY also presented the following resolutions of the General Assembly of the State of Kentucky, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce:

House Resolution 106

A resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to take such steps as are necessary to cause the East Fork of Clarks River to be drained as a health project from the north line of Calloway County to Bryants Ford on said river near the northeast and southeast corners of Graves and McCracken Counties

Whereas by reason of erosion upon a scale that cannot be controlled by private enterprise the channel of the East Fork of Clarks River has been filled from the north boundary of Calloway County to Bryants Ford on said river, thereby creating a slash or pond about 20 miles long that stands practically all the year, which has become a breeding place for multiplied millions of mosquitoes that spread malaria fever over a large portion of Marshall, a part of Calloway, Graves, and McCracken Counties; and

Whereas the cost of draining said territory, if done under any of the drainage acts of Kentucky, would amount to confiscation of all the land that would be affected as a drainage project under the drainage laws of Kentucky, and cannot so be done; and

Whereas the existence of said slash or pond constitutes a menace to all the people living in the surrounding territory that can be reached by the flight of mosquitoes or to which they can be brought by wind: Therefore be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky:

SECTION 1. That the Congress of the United States of America be petitioned to take such steps as are necessary to cause the East Fork of Clarks River to be drained from the north boundary line of Calloway County to Bryants Ford on said river as a necessary health project.

SEC. 2. That each United States Senator and Representative in the Kentucky delegation be urged to use his personal efforts to secure the action herein contemplated.

SEC. 3. That the secretary of state be directed to certify a copy of this resolution to each member of the Kentucky delegation in the Congress of the United States.

I, George Glenn Hatcher, secretary of state of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing copy of House Resolution No. 106 is a true and correct copy as it appears on the records of this office.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the official seal of this office.

Done at Frankfort, Ky., this 18th day of March 1940.

[SEAL] GEORGE GLENN HATCHER,
Secretary of State, Commonwealth of Kentucky.

House Resolution 122

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to have a survey made of the Rough River Basin and a drainage and reclamation project set up and prosecuted in that river basin

Whereas by erosion and from other causes Rough River and its many tributaries have so filled that the channel no longer affords sufficient drainage, and as a result thousands of acres of good farm lands are being flooded each year and the crops destroyed; and

Whereas this situation exists in the entire Rough River Basin, which includes many thousands of acres of rich farm lands and vitally affects the health, prosperity, and happiness of hundreds of farm families and others; and

Whereas this overflow carries much poor subsoil from the surrounding hill country, depositing same on level bottom land, and is gradually destroying the fertility of much of said land; and

Whereas there is no apparent remedy for this situation except a thorough dredging and straightening of Rough River and its tributaries; and

Whereas the cost of such a drainage and reclamation project would be far beyond the ability and resources of the landowners and counties involved: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky:

1. That the Congress of the United States is hereby memorialized to take the necessary steps to have a complete survey made of the entire Rough River Basin and to set up and prosecute to completion a drainage and reclamation project that would give the needed relief.

2. That each of Kentucky's Senators and Representatives in the United States Congress are requested and urged to personally look into this situation and do everything possible to secure the result requested.

3. That the secretary of state is hereby directed to mail a certified copy of this resolution to each Member of the Kentucky delegation in the United States Congress and to the Clerk of each House.

I, George Glenn Hatcher, secretary of state of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing copy of House Resolution No. 122 is a true and correct copy of said resolution as it appears on the records of this office.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal.

Done at Frankfort, Ky., this 18th day of March 1940.

[SEAL] GEORGE GLENN HATCHER,
Secretary of State, Commonwealth of Kentucky.

APPROPRIATION FOR BOOKS FOR THE ADULT BLIND

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, on yesterday I introduced a bill—S. 3645—to amend the act entitled "An act to provide books for the adult blind," approved March 3, 1931, under the provisions of which the annual appropriation for the purchase of sound-reproduction records known as talking books is authorized to be increased by $75,000.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Library a resolution adopted by the executive committee of the American Foundation for the Blind, and a statement by Robert B. Irwin, executive director, regarding the need for such legislation.

There being no objection, the matter was referred to the Committee on the Library and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN FOUNDATION FOR THE BLIND, INC.,
New York, N. Y., March 19, 1940.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WAGNER: As you know, the majority of blind people, because of a dull sense of touch or for some other cause, cannot read with their fingers. For this reason the American Foundation for the Blind developed a method of producing books on long-playing phonograph records. Thanks to the cooperation of yourself and others, Congress now makes an annual appropriation of $175,000 for the production of these so-called talking books for the blind. These are circulated by the Library of Congress to the blind people of the country just as Braille books are circulated.

There are now about 400 talking-book titles available in the libraries for the blind. The number is increasing at the rate of from 60 to 80 titles per year. The reading tastes of blind people are as varied as those of seeing persons and few care to read all the books in any library. While the blind people are grateful for the talking-book libraries, they are constantly clamoring for a more rapid increase in the collection of titles. At the present rate many years will elapse before a library of even modest proportions can be accumulated.

I am writing to ask if you will not sponsor a bill authorizing an increase in the talking-book appropriation from $175,000 to $250,000 per annum. Attached is a copy of a proposed bill which has been endorsed by the American Foundation for the Blind, and to which we sincerely hope you will find it possible to give your powerful support.

Very sincerely yours,

R. B. IRWIN, Executive Director.

P. S.: I am attaching a more extended statement regarding the need for such legislation.

R. B. I.

Resolution adopted by the executive committee of the American Foundation for the Blind, March 19, 1940

Whereas because of a dull sense of touch and for other reasons less than one-fourth of the blind people in the United States can make use of books in raised type; and

Whereas the majority of blind readers depend upon books on sound-reproduction records for their reading matter; and

Whereas a generation will pass before the present annual appropriation will make available even a modest library of sound-reproduction records for the blind: Be it

Resolved, That the executive committee approve action by Congress increasing the annual appropriation to the Library of Congress for sound-reproduction records from $175,000 to $250,000.

INCREASE IN TALKING-BOOK APPROPRIATION DESIRABLE

About 12 years ago the American Foundation for the Blind made a study of the library service for the blind in this country. This study disclosed that library service for blind people was woefully inadequate, and that not more than 10 percent of the blind people of this country were making any use of such library service as existed. Since the number of blind people is so small in any one community, even in the large cities, it was decided that 15 or 20 libraries could adequately serve the entire United States. This meant that most libraries for the blind must serve a territory larger than the taxing unit supporting such library.

A plan was evolved, therefore, by which the Federal Government would supply Braille books to regional libraries through the Library of Congress, and in return the regional libraries—usually branches of city public libraries—would serve a considerable territory, often including several States. The original law authorized an appropriation of $100,000 annually for embossed books, making possible the publication of about 200 titles each year.

In order to reach the large number of blind people who, because of a dull sense of touch or for some other reason, cannot learn to read with their fingers, the foundation set up a studio in which it developed a method of economically recording books on phonograph records. In 1933 Congress, at the request of the American Foundation for the Blind, authorized an annual appropriation to the Library of Congress with which to establish libraries of sound-reproduction records known as talking books. This appropriation is now $175,000 annually. The foundation made its studio available to the Library of Congress on a nonprofit basis in order that the appropriation would procure a maximum number of titles with the funds appropriated.

Since that time about 400 talking-book titles—all kinds, large and small—have been added to the libraries. With the present appropriation about 60 to 80 titles can be published each year. As the reading tastes of blind people are as broad as those of the seeing, few, if any, blind people will care to read all the books in the library. At the present rate of production the number of titles in another 10 years will not exceed more than 1,000 or 1,200. A generation will pass before talking-book readers may hope for a library of even modest proportions.

Sightless people throughout the country are clamoring for a substantial increase in the talking-book appropriation for at least the next few years. The two national organizations of professional workers for the blind, the American Association of Workers for the Blind and the American Association of Instructors of the Blind, are urging that the annual appropriation for talking books for the blind be increased from $175,000 to $250,000.

The American Foundation for the Blind heartily endorses this proposal, and respectfully urges that the present law be amended authorizing such an increased appropriation by the present session of Congress.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. CLARK of Missouri, from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, to which was recommitted the bill (H. R. 5584) to amend the Canal Zone Code, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1336) thereon.

Mr. HILL, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 3552) to authorize the construction of works for flood control and other purposes on Autauga Creek at Prattville, Ala., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1337) thereon.

Mr. VAN NUYS, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8150) providing for the barring of claims against the United States, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1338) thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on March 21, 1940, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 1398. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917, as amended, to increase the penalties for peacetime violations of such act; and

S. 1750. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to convey to the town of Marmet, W. Va., two tracts of land to be used for municipal purposes.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of several postmasters.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BAILEY:

S. 3649. A bill for the relief of Harry D. Gann; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SCHWELLENBACH:

S. 3650. A bill to require the payment of prevailing rates of wages on Federal public works in Alaska and Hawaii; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. AUSTIN (for Mr. BARBOUR):

S. 3651. A bill to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to furnish additional statistical information and marketing service for the benefit of the poultry industry, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

S. 3652. A bill for the relief of Richard L. Byrd; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 3653. A bill for the relief of Algy Fred Giles; and

S. 3654. A bill to amend section 10, National Defense Act, as amended, with relation to the maximum authorized enlisted strength of the Medical Department of the Regular Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 3655. A bill relating to personal-injury suits by seamen, and to amend the act of March 4, 1915 (ch. 153, S. 136, 38 Stat. 1185; act of June 5, 1920, ch. 250, art. 33, 41 Stat. 1007); to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. PEPPER:

S. 3656. A bill to prohibit common carriers and other carriers from owning or acquiring any interest in a newspaper published in the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion by Mr. MEAD, the Committee on Banking and currency was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 3269) to authorize loans to public bodies and nonprofit organizations for hospital, water, sewer, stream-pollution control, and related projects and facilities, and making an appropriation therefor, and it was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT—AMENDMENT

Mr. GURNEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 407) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CLARK of Idaho submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 8745, the Interior Department appropriation bill, 1941, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 6, line 18, after "1941", insert the following clause:
"For the detection, prevention, and suppression of fires on lands within grazing districts, including the maintenance of patrols, the employment of field personnel, and purchase of necessary equipment, $130,000."

ADDITIONAL COPIES OF HEARINGS ON SILVER

Mr. PITTMAN submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 41), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That, in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2, of the Printing Act approved March 1, 1907, the Special Committee on the Investigation of Silver, United States Senate, be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to have printed in one volume for its use 1,500 additional copies of the hearings held before said committee pursuant to the resolution (S. Res. No. 187, 74th Cong., 1st sess.) authorizing a special committee of the Senate to investigate the administration, and the economic and commercial effect, of the Silver Purchase Act of 1934.

OTTER CREEK AT RUTLAND, VT. (S. DOC. NO. 171)

Mr. BAILEY presented a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report dated February 27, 1940, from the Chief of Engineers of the Army on the reexamination of Otter Creek at Rutland, Vt., which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

NORTHEAST (CAPE FEAR) RIVER, N. C. (S. DOC. NO. 170)

Mr. BAILEY presented a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report dated February 27, 1940, from the Chief of Engineers of the Army on the reexamination of Northeast (Cape Fear) River, N. C., which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8202) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, just before the Senate recessed yesterday, I moved to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI of the Senate, so that I might offer an amendment to the pending measure.

It is not my purpose to speak at any length with regard to the amendment, because I think it is very simple and has much merit. As a matter of fact, even though I should remain in the Senate for the balance of my natural life, I never expect to present to this body a proposal which has more merit, more equity, and more justice than the amendment I propose to offer to this bill.

As the Senate is aware, the sugar producers of our Nation are now operating under the so-called Sugar Act of 1937. Section 509 of that act provides that in case of emergency the President has a right to suspend certain sections of the act, particularly sections 2 and 3, which give to the Secretary of Agriculture the right to fix the quota of sugar to be produced and marketed in the United States.

Pursuant to section 509, the President, on September 11 of last year, suspended the quota provisions of the act. The suspension occurred just about a week before the Louisiana sugar planters and farmers began the planting of their sugarcane crops for 1940.

As Senators may know, when sugarcane is planted in Florida and in Louisiana, the cane itself is planted—that is, the growing stalk—and from that planting are harvested three or four successive crops of sugarcane. It is unlike the planting of beets, where the seed is planted and new seed must be planted each year.

When the President issued the proclamation suspending the quota provisions of the act under date of September 11, the Agriculture Department notified every sugar farmer in my State and in Florida that the sugar quotas were no longer in effect; that there was no prospect of having any quota for 1940; and, as a matter of fact, it was the consensus of opinion at the time that because of the war the sugar quotas would not be restored.

I desire now to quote from several telegrams that were sent by the Department of Agriculture to the farmers of my State and Florida advising them of the suspension of the quotas. One in particular from Dr. Bernhardt, head of the Sugar Division, under date of September 23, 1939, stated:

> Producers desiring to change from paragraph (a) of the 1939 proportionate share determination to some other option may do so, provided compliance with that option can be established beyond a reasonable doubt.

The effect of that telegram was to permit the production of more sugar, because under the sugar program from 1939 a farmer has one of two options to exercise in complying with the 1939 quota provision: He could take a direct cut of 25 percent on his 1939 acreage, and a like cut in 1940, or he could harvest all of his 1939 crop of cane and defer his entire cut until 1940. I repeat, the purpose of the telegram that I have just read was simply to give to the farmers of Louisiana and Florida the right to harvest and process into sugar all of the cane planted in 1939 and to take their cut, if any, in 1940. Why? Because of the war. Prices were going up. Sugar farmers were being encouraged to produce more sugar.

The next telegram, sent by Dr. Bernhardt, was under date of October 2, 1939, and in that telegram, among other things, he stated:

> In view of the suspension of quotas, no program of payments under the provisions of title III of the Sugar Act is in effect or contemplated at this time for the 1940 crop in any producing area.

This telegram was sent to all sugar planters. County agents throughout the State further told the farmers that since there was no quota, and none was contemplated for 1940, and since it was evident that the war would continue, they could safely plant sugarcane in excess of their proportionate shares. Pursuant to that advice emanating from an official source, the farmers of my State did plant excess acreage, and I submit that they had a perfect right to do so, because the quotas were not then in effect, and according to officials of the Department of Agriculture none were contemplated for 1940.

Under date of December 26 of last year, the quota system, as we know, was restored in this country, with the result that it was necessary for the Department of Agriculture to again put into effect quota regulations which had been issued prior to the date when the President suspended the quotas. This is what is going to happen as a consequence. Sugarcane farmers of my State who planted sugarcane in excess of their proportionate share, at a time when they had been advised they had the right to do so—at a time when they thought that if the war continued the quotas would not be restored—those farmers who planted in good faith will be forced to plow up every acre of that cane which is in excess of their proportionate shares unless my amendment is adopted. As I will show, my amendment does not provide for any increased expenditure; it does not increase the appropriation one copper cent; on the contrary, as I will point out to the Senate, it will reduce it.

In the proclamation issued by the President on September 11 he said, among other things:

> It should also be noted that domestic sugar producers will continue to receive payments under the 1939 conditional payment program now in effect. Producers will, of course, understand that under provisions of the Sugar Act it should not be assumed that payments can be made with respect to future crops so long as quotas may be continued in suspension. Nor should anyone assume that increased acreage planted under the stimulus of war conditions can be made permanent for purposes of determining future allotments.

In other words, when the President suspended the quota he anticipated that, because the war was on, the American sugar farmers would naturally increase their plantings. He so said, as above indicated in the statement released by him on the day upon which he issued his proclamation.

When the quota was restored my people, of course, were very much distressed. They called on me and on my colleague, the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], and every Congressman from the State, to relieve their situation. I took the matter up with the Department, and the Department stated to me that the only way by which it could be empowered to afford relief to the Louisiana and Florida sugar planters was through the adoption by Congress of a resolution authorizing such relief. Therefore when I returned to the Senate on January 4 of this year I introduced Senate Resolution 190. The purpose of the resolution was to provide that the sugar farmers of my State would receive benefit payments on all cane then growing and which was planted prior to January 1, 1940. I felt at the time, and I feel now, that since the sugarcane was planted in good faith, and at a time when there were no quotas in effect and none contemplated, we should be paid on the entire amount of cane planted even though it might be in excess of the proportionate shares.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Will not the Senator from Louisiana tell the Senate what disposition was made of the resolution he offered, to which he has just referred?

Mr. ELLENDER. I am coming to that. With the Senate's permission and kind indulgence, I expect to indicate every step taken by me, in order to place the facts of this matter fairly and squarely before the Senate.

The Department refused to give an O. K., as it were, to the resolution, contending—and there is merit to the contention—that a good many sugar planters in Florida and a good many in Louisiana had taken a 25-percent cut in 1939, and some had deferred the cut to 1940, and that therefore it would be unjust to treat both groups of planters alike; and I agree with that. The Department countered by saying, in effect:

> We are anxious to prevent a plow-up campaign. We are willing to help, but in justice to those farmers who took their cut in 1939 we propose to limit the benefit payments to sugarcane produced from the proportionate-share acreage established for 1940, and penalize excess planting according to a certain schedule—

Which schedule I shall submit to the Senate in a few moments.

After I received an unfavorable report on the resolution to which I have just referred, I offered Senate Resolution 225, and in that resolution it was provided that benefit payments be made on all of the sugarcane produced on the 1940 proportionate-share acreage; and further, that sugarcane farmers be permitted to market and reduce to sugar all cane produced on the excess acreage, but without benefit payments on such excess cane. It was when I presented that latter proposal to the Department that the Department countered with certain penalty provisions, portions of which are incorporated in the amendment that I hope to present to the Senate.

At first the Department suggested a penalty along this line, that an allowance be made of 10 percent of each farmer's proportionate share; that is, that there be no penalty on 110 percent of the proportionate-share acreage harvested, but on any acreage in excess of 110 percent of the proportionate share there be imposed a penalty of $20 an acre. I took the matter up with the Department, and pointed out that such a penalty provision would result in many farmers, and particularly small farmers, owing the Government. So we discussed the matter further, and before I was able to obtain a compromise agreement from the Department. I offered the amendment which forms the basis of my motion to suspend the rules.

It will be noted in the amendment that on the first 25 acres above the proportionate share there would be no penalty. On the next 100 acres above the proportionate share there would be a penalty of $5 per acre.

On the next 500 acres there would be a penalty of $10; on the next 500 acres a penalty of $15; and on anything above the aggregate acreage I have just mentioned, which is 1,125 acres, a penalty of $20 an acre.

After I introduced the amendment, I sent it over to the Department and the Department officials felt that if the amendment remained as I have offered it, it would tend to complicate matters from an administrative standpoint, and they preferred to go back to the 10-percent allowance which they first suggested. So, after a further discussion with the Department officials, it was finally agreed to approve an amendment to permit all cane planted prior to January 1, 1940, to be ground into sugar, and that each farmer would receive benefit payments only on cane harvested from his proportionate share acreage for 1940. And as to the excess acreage there would be an allowance free from any penalty of 10 percent on the proportionate acreage or a minimum of 25 acres. In other words, it was contemplated that a minimum of 25 acres in any event would be allowed to a farmer without the imposition of a penalty, and on the first 500 acres in excess of the 10 percent there would be a penalty of $10 per acre, and on all acreage in excess of that, the penalty would be $20. That is how I expect to modify the amendment which is now pending if the rule is suspended. And at this point,

I will read to the Senate the text of the modified amendment, which I will ask the Senate to adopt:

On page 82, line 14, before the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That no payment under the Sugar Act of 1937 with respect to the 1940 crop shall be withheld from any producer in the mainland cane-sugar area, because of the marketing (or processing) of sugarcane in excess of the proportionate share for the farm, if the acreage of sugarcane grown on the farm and marketed (or processed) for sugar in the crop year 1940 is not in excess of the acreage of sugarcane for sugar planted prior to January 1, 1940, but payments shall be made only with respect to the proportionate share acreage established for the farm under the provisions of such act, and the following deductions shall be made from such payments on account of any acreage of sugarcane grown on the farm and marketed (or processed) for sugar in the crop year 1940 which is in excess of (1) 110 percent of the proportionate share for the farm, or (2) the proportionate share for the farm plus 25 acres, whichever is the greater; for so much of such excess as does not exceed 500 acres, a deduction of $10 per acre; for so much of such excess as exceeds 500 acres, a deduction of $20 per acre."

That, Senators, is the proposition which has been agreed to, and which has been recommended by the Department of Agriculture.

I have taken the matter up with the Department on many occasions; I have consulted quite a number of Senators whom I thought might be interested in the proposition, and 4 or 5 days ago, at the suggestion of the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], Dr. Bernhart and two of his associates, Messrs. LaGuardia and Bagwell, were called upon, and we had a meeting in the office of the senior Senator from Mississippi. The senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] was present, as well as the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON]. At that meeting we entered into a full discussion of this proposition. The Sugar Division of the Department of Agriculture favors this amendment. They see merit in it and feel that the only way by which the sugarcane planters of my State can be afforded relief is by the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator says that the Sugar Division of the Department favors this proposal. Does the Senator mean that they favor it as a separate proposition to be presented in the manner the Senator has presented it?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes. The Department, as I understand, feels that this proposal can stand on its own feet, and that even though the amendment were submitted in connection with a sugar bill—I presume that is what the Senator from Washington had in mind——

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH (interposing). That is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. For 1941 or future years, that this situation could not be corrected. I may say to the Senator from Washington that, of course, we could add this amendment to a sugar bill, but the point is that the farmers of my State today are confronted with the proposition of having to destroy their cane within the next 30 days in order to be able to comply with the regulations which would make it possible for them to collect benefit payments on this year's crop.

Mr. President, that is the situation, and I fear that if this proposition is deferred and not taken up until a sugar bill is considered and passed by Congress, which may not be until some time in June or July, it will be too late. The farmers will have been forced to plow up their excess acreage, and a great and irreparable damage will have been inflicted, unjustly I say, upon them.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I understand that the additional sugar produced will have to be carried over into 1941 without disturbing the 1940 marketing quota. Is that correct?

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Well, what happens to the sugar farmers of the Senator's State in 1941?

Mr. ELLENDER. They will get correspondingly less acreage in 1941 should a sugar bill be enacted providing for the quota system.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will you not get very substantially less acreage? In other words, are you not just postponing your problem for 1 year?

Mr. ELLENDER. No, I doubt it. In further answer to the Senator from Michigan, I may say that during the past winter the farmers of Louisiana have been confronted with the worst weather conditions they have faced since they have been engaged in the production of sugar.

We have had the most severe cold weather during last January and February of record. For a period of over 2 weeks the thermometer registered from 14° to 22° above zero, and in some instances the ground froze as deep as 4 inches, thereby affecting the planted sugarcane as well as the stools from which stubble cane grows.

In direct answer to the Senator from Michigan, I will say that it is estimated that with this additional acreage and under normal weather conditions we might produce as much as 35,000 to 40,000 tons of sugar in excess of what we would normally produce on the 1940 proportionate-share acreage. But I venture to say that, from reports which I have before me from the United States sugar station located in south Louisiana, the loss to the Louisiana sugar producers in 1940 will be in some cases as much as 35 percent, due to the abnormal weather conditions to which I have just referred.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. Permit me to complete my statement. I sincerely believe that, with the variable weather conditions that are confronting the farmers of Louisiana today, the production of sugar on the additional acreage will not be as great as that which would be produced on the proportionate share acreage under favorable weather conditions. So I will say to the Senator from Michigan that I do not believe that the farmers will produce a greater amount of sugar with this additional acreage than on the proportionate share acreage under normal conditions. On the other hand, if the Lord is good to us from now on and revives some of the damaged stools and plant cane, so that we can produce a normal crop, there may be an excess of 35,000 to 40,000 tons of sugar. Our sugar is produced from mid-October, in November, and December. We grind the bulk of our cane in November and December. And if anyone will suffer by virtue of this excess cane sugar, we will be the ones, because it will be charged against our quota for 1941 should the present Sugar Act be continued or a revised bill enacted.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of course, there may be some other sufferers, incidentally, but in the event that you confront this carry-over, do I understand that the Louisiana area is prepared to accept this substantially reduced quota in 1941?

Mr. ELLENDER. Well, the sugar farmers will be bound to if there is a sugar bill enacted with the same provisions as are contained in the present law.

Mr. VANDENBERG. They will be bound to, but they will be bound to ask their distinguished Senator to rise once more in the Senate and ask for further relief or revision.

Mr. ELLENDER. I suppose that the Senator from Michigan has in mind the fact that last year I fought that battle as well as humanly possible on the Senate floor, and asked for relief for the sugarcane growers. I may say to the Senator that the situation in that case was not the same as now prevails. In 1938 the sugar farmers of my State were allocated a certain number of acres to plant, and quite naturally none of them expected to obtain less for their 1939 planting than was allocated to each of them in the prior year. But the trouble was that the allocation of acreage for 1939 was made late in 1938, after the plantings for 1939 had been completed. We came to the Congress for relief. We could not obtain it. As a result of that situation the planters of my State were compelled to plow up as much as 30,000 acres of growing sugarcane. But the situation then differs from the present, in that when they planted for the 1939 crop the law was in effect, the quotas were in effect, although the Department had not announced any reduction in acreage. And I would like to point out, further, to the Senator from Michigan that by virtue of that plow-up campaign, whereby approximately 30,000 acres of cane were destroyed, my State was denied a potential revenue in excess of $5,000,000. In other words, there was $5,000,000 destroyed, which would have meant employment and purchasing power to the rural population of Louisiana. But the proposition that confronts us today is totally different, in that there was no law on the statute books and there was no prohibition at the time with respect to the planting of this excess acreage. As I pointed out a while ago, the President of the United States had suspended sections 2 and 3 of the act during the entire planting season of sugarcane in Louisiana.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I desire to make clear in my own mind just what the Senator's estimate of the excess production will be, weather permitting. I understood him to say that it will be between 35,000 and 40,000 tons above the normal production.

Mr. ELLENDER. Weather permitting, yes; under normal conditions. I think that is about the estimate of the Department.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The estimate of the Department, I may say to the Senator, was 50,000 to 60,000 tons.

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; that was the estimate made at the meeting I attended.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator feels that this would be corrected only by future legislation?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes; because the present law expires, as I understood, in December of this year.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. And, of course, if there happens to be no sugar bill reenacted, necessarily there will not be any quota, and the planters of my State as well as the sugar-beet growers of the Senator's State will not be affected.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I assume the Senator is desirous of having the sugar bill reenacted?

Mr. ELLENDER. Positively. I will say to the Senator from Wyoming and to the Senator from Colorado that I have heard, on two or three occasions, that there was no disposition on the part of the junior Senator from Louisiana to have a sugar bill, but I wish to affirm that I am very much interested in a sugar bill, and that as far as I am personally concerned I shall do all I can to have one enacted, because I sincerely believe that the best way by which we can take care of the sugar farmers of both Wyoming and Louisiana, and in fact the sugar farmers of the Nation, is under the quota system. I want it understood, however, that I desire a much larger quota for continental producers than is now provided by law. Rather than reenact the present law, I would much prefer no law at all on the subject, but a restoration of the tariff system for the protection of sugar producers.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator realizes that if this excess of which he speaks were allowed to come into existence without a solution of other immediately pressing problems of a like character, those who are growing sugar beets in many States of the Union would be facing exactly the same dilemma that the farmers of Louisiana are now facing, and that the sugar-beet areas would be confronted with the necessity of curtailing their acreage.

Mr. ELLENDER. No. There is no comparison, Senator. I should like to have the attention of the Senators from California.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Before the Senator proceeds, let me say that that is a position with which I do not agree. I think it will be possible for us later to demonstrate that unless the whole sugar problem is settled, with all the elements in it, including the planters in Louisiana, sitting down together, the planters in beet-sugar areas will be bound to suffer materially. I thank the Senator for permitting me to interrupt him.

Mr. ELLENDER. Of course, I cannot agree with the distinguished Senator from Wyoming. The proposal which I now present to the Senate would not give to my people the same relief as the Department has been able to afford to the sugar-beet growers. California planted her beet crop during the time that the President had suspended the quota system. In order to get around the difficulties which confronted the California growers, the Minnesota growers, and some growers in Colorado, the Department issued rulings under which the farmers would be entitled to benefit payments with respect to all beets that had then been planted and were then under contract, even though the amount planted was in excess of their pro-rata share.

Then the flood came in California several weeks ago, and under date of March 9, 1940, the Sugar Division issued the following release:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 9, 1940.

The Sugar Division announced today that the sugar-beet proportionate share (acreage allotment) for any farm for the 1940 crop will be the acreage of sugar beets planted on the farm for the production of sugar. This supersedes previous announcements regarding proportionate shares which were necessary because of early sugar-beet plantings in certain areas.

It will be noted from this announcement, issued by the Department of Agriculture, that there is no limitation on the 1940 plantings of beets in the United States. Every farmer in the State of Nebraska may plant beets to the extent of his ability. The same thing is true of Idaho and of every other State in the Union.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I shall be glad to yield in a moment.

Mr. President, there is no prohibition whatsoever against the planting of sugar beets in 1940. Furthermore, under the law, the Government will make benefit payments on every pound of sugar that is produced on this acreage.

Senators, I plead for my people. I plead for the farmers of Louisiana. I am not asking that we be permitted to collect benefit payments from the Government on the excess acreage, but merely that our farmers be permitted to harvest and reduce to sugar the cane now planted on said excess acreage. That is all I am asking. I do not want the farmers of my State to be compelled to plow up cane which was legally planted by them in good faith, and I am pleading with Senators not to permit that to happen. It would mean the destruction of more than 40,000 acres of cane which were planted by my people in good faith and at a cost of $28 to $35 an acre. Just think of the tremendous out-of-pocket loss these farmers will have to stand if my amendment is not adopted—40,000 acres at $35 per acre means a total actual loss of $1,400,000, and a potential loss of property in excess of $6,000,000. Will any friend of the farmer refuse to support legislation to protect the American farmers against such a loss? It is unbelievable to me that anyone will oppose such a fair and just proposal.

The sugar-beet growers have not yet planted their crops. Only a third of the beet area has been planted. Two-thirds remains to be planted; and there is no restriction. The beet growers may plant all they wish. They may plant to the limit, and the Government will pay them on every pound of sugar they produce. In the case of the sugarcane farmer, we shall have to destroy cane which we have already planted, and which we rightfully planted. Otherwise we cannot receive benefit payments. I say again that such discrimination is unfair, and all I am asking is justice.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I ask the Senator if there is not a limitation upon the marketing allotments?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. So exactly the same situation exists——

Mr. ELLENDER. If the Senator will permit me, under the law, if the production of sugar on the excess acreage is less than the marketing quota fixed for processors, of course, it may be marketed. However, the law provides that a processor may not sell except within his quota limit, and that quota limit is fixed by the Department of Agriculture under a formula written in the law. So any excess sugar produced from this acreage, whether on the proportionate share or on the additional acreage, may not be marketed. It is carried over, and that sugar is credited against Louisiana or Florida.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does not the same situation exist with respect to the beet-sugar area?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. So the problem is exactly the same in both areas?

Mr. ELLENDER. Certainly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The amount of sugar which may be marketed is limited by the quota; and if plantings are allowed in excess of the acreage which produces the quota, whether they be allowed in Louisiana or in the beet-sugar areas, they are bound to produce an excess inventory which will smash the price of sugar for the Louisiana planter as well as for the beet planter. Is not that correct?

Mr. ELLENDER. Would the Senator advocate——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Is not that correct?

Mr. ELLENDER. I would not say so; not under the conditions which exist in my State today. I would not admit that, because, as I shall point out in a few minutes, on the additional acreage which we are trying to save, and on our proportionate acreage, the loss in sugar production will be from 8 to 35 percent. In my humble opinion—I may be mistaken, but I do not think so—the entire production on the whole acreage planted to cane in Louisiana prior to January 1, 1940, will not be what the production would have been on the proportionate share acreage if weather conditions had been normal.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I understand the Senator's contention; but perhaps he is overly pessimistic in his prophecy. Perhaps the weather will permit the Louisiana planters to produce what the Department of Agriculture estimates will be their excess, namely, from 50,000 to 60,000 tons above their already increased quota.

Mr. ELLENDER. I will say to the Senator that the estimates of the Department are based on normal or near-normal conditions. Last week we had a freeze in Louisiana which affected all the cane. We have had as much as 14 inches of rainfall within 48 hours. Does the Senator know that the planters of my State are now 4 or 5 weeks behind schedule, and that the reason why they are so far behind is that they cannot work their cane because of unfavorable weather conditions? With the adverse weather conditions now prevailing in Louisiana the sugarcane will not mature in sufficient time for a normal harvest. Farmers will be confronted with cold weather and with other difficulties, which are bound to reduce the production of sugar to the extent I have just indicated to the Senator.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him at this point, since he is talking about bad weather, I should like to read from the announcement of the Department of Agriculture Sugar Division of March 9, 1940. The announcement deals with the beet-sugar area. In that announcement the Sugar Division says:

> In view of unfavorable climatic conditions, such as floods in some areas and drought conditions in others, as well as other factors which affect adversely the sugar-beet crop, it is no longer expected that the 1940 crop will produce an amount of sugar which, when added to current supplies, will be more than is required to meet the continental beet area's quota and carry-over requirements.

Let me say to the Senator that I appreciate and thoroughly sympathize with the quandary in which the planters of Louisiana find themselves, and I should like very much to be able to assist the Senator in obtaining relief for that area; but it is my contention that the Senator is dealing with only one small fraction of one of the most complicated problems in agriculture in this country. There are beet-sugar farmers throughout the West, there are cane farmers in Florida, there are beet farmers in the Middle West who are confronted with almost the identical problem which the Senator from Louisiana outlines, in a little different way.

My contention is that if we deal with one factor of this complicated problem by way of a rider to the pending bill such action will necessarily compel those of us who represent other sugar areas to seek legislation upon the matter, because we dare not have one small factor handled and allow others to remain without attention.

I am ready to cooperate with the Senator from Louisiana in urging the Department of Agriculture and the State Department to cooperate immediately in bringing in a sugar bill. The problem confronts us, as the Senator has so well said. The sugar legislation ceases to operate this year. We must legislate within the next month or so; and it is of the utmost importance to all areas concerned that that task should be undertaken immediately, not upon the floor of the Senate but where it ought to be handled, namely, in a committee.

Mr. ELLENDER. In answer to the Senator from Wyoming, I will say that his immediate problem has been met by the Department. Somehow the Department has found in the law a provision by which, on account of floods, climatic conditions, and so forth, his farmer constituents are given carte blanche to plant and cultivate and receive Government payments on all sugar beets produced.

As I said a while ago, there is no prohibition against beet planting. All I am asking is that the sugarcane farmers be put in the same boat. I have taken the matter up with the Department; but, somehow, under the law, the Department is unable to give us relief—because, I am told, of the difference in the method of planting, cultivating, and so forth, as between sugar beets and sugarcane.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the beet growers did not regard the action of the Department as a gift in any sense of the word. Many of them are fearful that the effect of the release with respect to plantings was rather to serve the Cuban interests than to serve the domestic interests in the United States.

Mr. ELLENDER. I cannot quite follow the Senator as to how the Cuban interests could be served in this instance, because my amendment does not affect Cuba in any manner. It simply puts the Louisiana sugar planter on the same basis on which the beet farmer has been placed by regulation, with this exception, that the beet farmer will receive payments on all he produces and the cane farmer will receive benefits on his proportionate acreage only and will be penalized on his excess acreage.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I should like to try to understand the situation. As I understood the Senator's proposal, it is that by reason of the declaration suspending the quotas at the time of the outbreak of war the cane growers of his State proceeded to plant cane without regard to quotas.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct.

Mr. BYRNES. That now they are confronted with the situation that the quota again having been applied, and their acreage being in excess of the quota, they must plow up some of that cane, or do what the Senator asks that they be permitted to do—grind the cane and carry it over to next year.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct.

Mr. BYRNES. But I understood that if it should be carried over, the sugar carried into next year could not be marketed except as part of the quota to which you would be entitled anyway if the program continues.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct.

Mr. BYRNES. Then, for the life of me, I cannot see how it affects Cuba or the beet-sugar States. The question presented seems to be whether we should, by not acting at this time force you to plow up the cane and destroy it, or else pay you benefits now and deduct the quantity of sugar from the quota you would get next year. Is that right?

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct.

Mr. BYRNES. There is no question about the correctness of my statement that it would not exceed the quota you would be entitled to next year?

Mr. ELLENDER. No question at all.

Now let me make a statement to the Senator in further answer to the argument of the Senator from Wyoming as to the effect of this excess sugar on the markets. As the Senator from South Carolina has correctly stated, the amount of sugar that goes on the market, that will affect the market, is fixed under the act, and any excess must be carried over. It cannot be sold. Therefore it cannot affect the market.

Now permit me to illustrate to the Senate the discrepancy which exists between the status of beet people and that of the sugarcane people. I am not trying to find fault with what the sugar-beet people received. I am glad they got what they are now receiving. I will join with them in getting more, because I feel that this country of ours should be permitted to produce at least 40 percent of our sugar requirements. Continental producers ought to produce that much sugar.

Listen to this, Senators: When the act went into effect in 1937——

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, while the Senator is talking on that subject, will he state the percentage of domestic consumption which is domestically produced?

Mr. ELLENDER. Under the act, domestic producers, that is, continental producers, may supply between 28 and 29 percent of our requirements. That is all they may produce.

In 1937 the acreage harvested in the beet area was 755,000 acres, and the amount of sugar produced was 1,374,990 tons. In Louisiana, for the same year, the acreage harvested was 254,000, and the production was 405,000 tons.

In 1938 the harvested acreage in the sugar-beet area was increased to 930,000 acres, and on that acreage was produced 1,803,000 tons of sugar. In Louisiana in 1938 the acreage was fixed at 270,000 acres, with a production of 492,000 tons of sugar; and listen to this, Senators:

In 1939 the acreage for the beet producers was increased from 930,000 to 1,030,000 acres, upon which was produced 1,756,383 tons of sugar, or 36.43 percent more acreage than was harvested in 1937.

Now, let us see what happened in Louisiana. In 1939 our acreage was cut down to 238,000 acres, or 6.3 percent under the 1937 acreage, and for this year the beet farmers are given carte blanche, as it were, unlimited acreage to produce unlimited amounts of sugar, and the Government is going to pay them on every pound they produce in 1940 and let——

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. ELLENDER. Gladly.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the Senator allow me to make what I think is a needed correction?

Mr. ELLENDER. I gladly yield to the Senator.

Mr. ADAMS. Day before yesterday the Secretary of Agriculture issued a bulletin in which he limited the beet production in the domestic areas to 1,549,898 tons. In other words, the producers are to be cut down more than 200,000 tons below what they produced in the 2 preceding years.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator refers to the 1940 beet-sugar marketing quotas, and not grower allotments.

Mr. ADAMS. So that cut is being applied to the beet area, and yet the Senator wishes to increase the production in the competing areas.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. ELLENDER. Just a minute. But, Mr. President, when the beet growers are permitted unlimited acreage, I grant to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] that the same condition which will face his farmers because of increased acreage will face our growers. The sugar carried over because of the production of more sugar than can be marketed under the act will, of course, decrease their acreage for next year. You are faced with that proposition to a greater extent than would be Louisiana if we were permitted to harvest these few excess acres of sugarcane.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President——

Mr. ELLENDER. Just a moment. As I just stated, the beet farmers may produce on an unlimited acreage. They produced in 1938 on 930,000 acres 1,803,000 tons of sugar, and it is possible that on an unlimited acreage they might produce as much as 1,800,000 or probably 2,000,000 tons of sugar; and, of course, if the Lord is good to them, and they should produce that much sugar, they would necessarily have to decrease their acreage in proportion to the extent of the carry-over of sugar for the succeeding year. By the same token, I say that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] and the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] are correct from that standpoint, that the Louisiana farmers will be faced with the same proposition, if we have favorable weather conditions, under which we produce as much as fifty to sixty thousand tons of sugar more than we would have produced on the proportionate share average. Should such a production occur our farmers will be the sufferers in being compelled to take a cut in acreage in 1941.

I now yield to the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, the Senator, of course, is technically correct when he states that a regulation or an order has been issued allowing the beet areas to plant an unlimited acreage. Why such an order was issued no one knows. It is a snare and a delusion; but I think the impression one is likely to get from that technical truth is quite misleading, because the actual plant of sugar beets is dependent upon contracts with the processors, which are signed in advance.

Mr. ELLENDER. We face the same condition.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. No farmer goes out and just plants sugar beets. He has his organization, and they make a contract with the processors in that area; and the processor must have a factory in that area or it is uneconomic, of course, for the farmer to plant sugar beets.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is our condition.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Exactly. So the processor bases the contracts with the grower entirely upon his marketing quotas. As a practical matter, the processor is not going to contract for any more sugar acres than he thinks he can market under existing quotas. The Senator knows, I am sure, that we have a carry-over of something like—I may be only approximately correct—a million tons.

Mr. ELLENDER. One million three hundred and fifty thousand tons.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. We have a carry-over of 1,350,000 tons of sugar overhanging the market today, which the processors are holding in storage because last year and the year before they undertook to contract for too much acreage in the beet area. So this order allowing the beet producers to grow an unlimited number of acres of sugar is nothing but a sham, because the processor will contract only for the necessary amount of acreage to produce the amount of refined sugar he thinks he can sell. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. ELLENDER. I presume so, unless he would be willing to increase his stocks.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. And, as a practical matter, the beet grower cannot plant any more acres than the processor will contract to buy from him.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct. The same proposition faces us. No sugarcane farmer desires to plant cane unless he can contract with a processor to grind his cane and convert it into sugar.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. That is exactly the point we make.

Mr. ELLENDER. Our farmers in Louisiana do not grow cane unless they have a contract with a factory to grind it, as I just stated.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Yes; but if I correctly understood the Senator, he undertook to say that we had unlimited production; and the impression—I am sure the Senator did not mean to leave a misleading impression—was that as a practical matter we could plant more acres than the processor would contract for.

Mr. ELLENDER. Certainly; but I desire to point out the proposition to the Senator, and I do say that you have no limitation, according to the announcement of the Secretary of Agriculture which I read to the Senate a short while ago.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. That is true. As a practical matter, however, we do.

Mr. ELLENDER. I understand; but your constituents may plant all they desire, all they can contract for, and they will be paid on the entire amount of sugar processed. There is no limitation whatever if they can find someone to process their beets.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. But as a matter of fact we cannot do so, except legally.

Mr. ELLENDER. And, as I understand the situation today with reference to the sugar-beet producers, less than one-third of the beet-sugar acreage has been planted up to now. I may be wrong, but I understand they are planning to plant all they can.

As I recall, some time ago the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] desired a greater sugar-beet acreage for the State of Nebraska; and under the ruling that was issued by the Department under date of March 9, the beet farmers of Nebraska may now plant as many acres as they desire, as many acres as they can contract for, and they are going to be paid out of the Federal Treasury a subsidy on every pound of sugar they produce.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. It does not do the farmer any good to plant a lot of beets unless he can have somebody to process those beets into sugar. Unfortunately, the farmer himself cannot make sugar out of his beets. It costs a lot of money to put up a sugar factory. To say to him, "You may plant as many acres of beets as you desire" does not mean anything to him unless he can sell the beets. He cannot sell the beets unless there is a factory which has enough capacity to make sugar out of the beets; so that does not means anything to him.

Mr. ELLENDER. I believe the statement I made before I yielded to the Senator indicated that the farmers of Nebraska had the right to unlimited plantings provided they could get contracts from the manufacturers of sugar to convert the beets into sugar.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator further yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. If the farmer could process his own beets into sugar, then this unlimited ability to plant would be fine. Nobody will build a factory, however, unless he knows that he is going to get beets to manufacture into sugar through his factory. When there is a limitation on that, in effect it is a limitation on the farmer's ability to sell—not any limitation on his ability to produce—but he would be foolish, indeed, to raise a lot of beets if he knew in advance that he was not going to have any way of processing them and getting sugar out of them. It would be perfectly silly and foolish for him to do so. On the other hand, the men who have money to invest in a factory will not build it unless they are assured that they are going to have a sufficient quota to make sugar out of all the beets in that vicinity that they can handle.

Mr. ELLENDER. I realize that, and we in Louisiana are faced with the same condition.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the Senator permit me to make a comment to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield first to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. I wish to make a very brief comment, particularly on what the Senator from Nebraska stated. I ask the Senator from Louisiana if this is not the situation: That there is an American market for sugar; that we have turned over to Cuba something like 45 percent of the total market, and have retained for the United States something like 55 percent for the cane area and the beet area. We have all protested against that situation. I think that Nebraska and Florida should have a part of that market, and that it ought to be taken from Cuba. But what we are concerned with here, it seems to me, is not the situation as the Senator from Nebraska points it out or as the Senator from Colorado points it out. I do not quite agree with the Senator from Idaho. It is absolutely true, as the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Nebraska have said, that the marketing limitation does prevent the planting of any more beets than the factory will take. That is a fact, and I grant that to be true. But I am a little sympathetic with the situation which faces the Senator from Louisiana. The farmers in his State do not plant a crop in the spring which is developed during the summer months and is harvested in the fall, as is the situation in Idaho, in Michigan, and in Colorado, but they plant a crop which lasts for 3 years. When they plant their sugarcane, it is not for 1 year, it is not for 2 years, it is for 3 years; and in perfect good faith the Louisiana planters planted their sugarcane crop, assuming that the crop would bear its sugar for a period of 3 years.

I understand that the Senator from Louisiana has agreed substantially with those in the Department who have approved his amendment, that if the amendment shall be agreed to and become the law, Louisiana will not use the fact that their situation will be serious in 1941, if weather conditions make it so, as the basis for an argument that Louisiana should have a larger share of the 1941 market than they have under the provisions of the sugar law.

The market is divided between the American sugar producers, domestic beet 41.72 percent, mainland cane 11.31 percent. That is the share each class gets. I understand that the Senator is willing to say that he will not use the fact that the Louisiana planters may have a profit in 1941 as to the marketing of their sugar—as the basis for an argument that their share of the 1941 crop should be increased. If that is a fact, and I understand it to be so——

Mr. ELLENDER. That is a fact.

Mr. BROWN. That being a fact, I do not think that, as the representative of a good many sugar-producing people in Michigan, I should stand here and say that I am going to make these Louisiana planters plow up a large amount of sugarcane they have planted, if they will say to us, as the Senator has under my questioning, that they are not going to use the situation which may possibly confront them in 1941 as the basis for an attempt to grab a larger share of the 1941 marketing quota. I accept that assurance in good faith, and I say that if that is the situation, we should alleviate this condition in Louisiana, and permit the farmers there to go on with their crop, which, as I have said, is a 3-year and not a 1-year crop, as is the case in the beet-producing areas, and we should permit them to recover the benefit payments which come under the Sugar Act. Have I stated the matter fairly?

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator has, and I thank him very kindly.

Mr. BROWN. As my colleague stated this morning, and I think my colleague puts his finger on the vital thing, if the situation in Louisiana in 1941 is not to be made the basis for a demand for a larger share of the 1941 market, I, as a representative in part of the State of Michigan, am willing to accept the Senator's amendment.

Mr. ELLENDER. I thank the Senator. Now, I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. My inquiry is now stale. I desired to ask a question which was pertinent to what the Senator from Nebraska was saying.

Mr. ELLENDER. I am so sorry.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield to me?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I am not unsympathetic, if I may say so to my distinguished colleague from Michigan, with the situation in which Louisiana may find herself. I think that is a fair statement. Let me say to the Senator, however, that, as he well knows, we have been working for a great many months on general sugar legislation, which will have to be passed in some form or other before the present session ends. We have met with Members of Congress from the Senator's State of Louisiana a great many times, and we think a bill has been introduced in the House now, I think by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. JONES], which is fairly satisfactory. That bill as presently introduced contemplates taking approximately 200,000 tons of sugar from Cuba's allotment. Probably amendments will be proposed, either in the House or in the Senate, which will take even a larger quantity over a period of time, but at least 200,000 tons will be taken this year. If Cuba's quota should be decreased and the mainland and possibly to Territorial quotas of the United States could be thereby increased, a part of the problem which confronts the constituents of the Senator from Louisiana will have been solved.

Mr. ELLENDER. If I may interrupt, our present situation cannot be solved by adding to the present quota for the reason that under any law which might be passed by Congress, increasing the domestic quotas, any additional sugar would have to be prorated among all the farmers.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Of course, it would.

Mr. ELLENDER. In the present situation there are some farmers who planted a little bit more than their quota would ordinarily be, and that is why the suggested amendment would do them no good if it is tacked on another bill, and an attempt made to solve the problem in a future sugar bill.

The situation which confronts us today is this: Unless this legislation is made possible within the next 30 days, farmers will have to destroy the excess cane in order to receive benefit payments on their 1940 crop; and, as the Senator from Michigan correctly pointed out, when we plant sugarcane in Louisiana it is planted this year and harvested over a period of 3 successive years. First there are the plant-cane stalks, then first-year stubble stalks, then second-year stubble stalks. The destruction of that plant cane means to the average farmer that he is out nothing short of $28 to $35 per acre of actual loss. The cane that was planted in the fall of 1939, when there was no quota, when the quota was suspended, would have to be destroyed; and what would be the result? The farmer would lose not only the crop of plant cane that he would have harvested in the fall of 1940 from that planting but also the crop of first-stubble cane that he would have harvested in the fall of 1941, as well as the crop of second-stubble cane in the fall of 1942.

Next year this situation can be well met, even under the present law, because by September, when we plant again, the farmer could be advised of his acreage allotment for 1941 and he could destroy second-year stubbles and reduce his planting, and he would come out on an even basis.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I am not unsympathetic with the Senator's position——

Mr. ELLENDER. I thank the Senator. However, what I desire is not sympathy but votes. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I may say to the Senator that I am opposed generally to this method of legislating, however.

Mr. ELLENDER. If the Senator will permit me, I cannot see any connection between the proposal I am making to the Senate today and a new sugar bill. As I suggested to the Senator from Colorado, I am willing to pull off my coat and fight as hard as I can for a sugar bill. We must enact a sugar bill. I believe in the quota system, and the only way by which we can continue under it is to have another sugar bill passed. But the situation of the Louisiana sugar farmers needs immediate attention.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Does the Senator think it is so serious that action must be taken within 30 days?

Mr. ELLENDER. The Department has already given orders to destroy the sugarcane under penalty that the farmers will not get benefit payments for 1940. It is different from the position in which the Senator's constituents find themselves. If they had to plow up their excess acreage, all they would lose would be a few pounds of beet seed. In our case we will lose three crops if we have to destroy the cane we planted last fall.

In view of conditions in agriculture today, and in view of the fact that last year Louisiana cane growers were cut down to a minimum and had to plow up 30,000 acres, I say to the Senator from Idaho that to make them plow up again would simply mean that they could not stand the burden, and it would put many of them out of business, which I know the Senator would not want to have occur.

I plead with my colleagues to adopt my amendment without delay. I cannot see how it will disturb any beet growers. It cannot affect them, because, as I see it, the adoption of this amendment would simply put the sugarcane growers in practically the same condition in which the beet growers are, with this exception—that the beet farmers are going to receive benefit payments on everything they produce in 1940, and we are willing to receive benefit payments on only that cane grown on proportionate share acreage, and in addition be penalized for the acreage harvested in excess of our proportionate shares.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado and Mr. BROWN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield first to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I wish to challenge the statement of the Senator from Louisiana that the only thing the beet farmer would lose would be the seed. I know the Senator from Louisiana is a good farmer, and he must know that there is such a thing as crop rotation, and that the beet farmers can afford to plant beets only in their most fertile and best-prepared fields. It takes years to prepare a field for beet planting. They have to rotate with legumes and other crops, they have to plant alfalfa, and they have to plow under crops to make the ground ready for the growing of beets.

Mr. ELLENDER. Is there not anything else which could be planted?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Soil Conservation Service places restrictions upon beet growers. When the farmers get an order from the Federal Government in March allowing them to increase their acreage they cannot proceed to plant new acreage to beets which they have not planned to plant, because it is necessary to prepare the soil over a period of 5 years of crop rotation.

Mr. ELLENDER. We are faced with the same conditions. We have to plant legumes, we have to ditch our land, and we have to work it for a period of 2 or 3 years before we put in a cane crop. But the point I am making is that we would not only lose that, but we would also lose the seed cane that is already in the ground, and upon which we anticipate at least three crops of sugarcane. That is the situation which confronts us today, and I know the Senator from Colorado will agree with me that it is a most serious one.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask a question at that point?

Mr. ELLENDER. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not very familiar with the Senator's amendment I am sorry to say. I heard it read, but I have not looked into it since, and I cannot quite understand it. If the Senator's amendment should become law, would it mean that the sugar quota coming to the beet-sugar area, for instance, would be lessened?

Mr. ELLENDER. No.

Mr. NORRIS. What are we to do about the increased production in Louisiana above the quota?

Mr. ELLENDER. That would be charged to us, because it would be carried over to next year.

Mr. NORRIS. When is it to be taken care of?

Mr. ELLENDER. Next year.

Mr. NORRIS Next year?

Mr. ELLENDER. Exactly.

Mr. NORRIS. Is that provided for in the amendment?

Mr. ELLENDER. No; that is in the law. In other words, this would be the effect of my amendment. Under the present law, in order for a farmer to receive benefit payments from the Government, he must not plant in excess of the acreage assigned to him; otherwise he does not get the payments.

Mr. WILEY. The cane-sugar farmer?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes; and the sugar-beet farmer as well. When the quota was off, after being suspended by the President, some sugarcane farmers planted in excess of their proportionate share acreage.

The effect of my amendment will be to give authority to the Treasurer of the United States to pay to the sugar farmers of Louisiana and Florida benefit payments on all sugarcane grown on their 1940 proportionate share acreage and as to the cane on the excess acreage they will be permitted to have it ground into sugar; provided, however, that they pay the penalties imposed in my amendment which are to be deducted from the benefit payments made to them on their proportionate share acreage. That is what my amendment amounts to, and nothing else.

In some cases the amount of penalties assessed, if the farmer chooses to produce sugar on that excess acreage, will equal the amount of benefit payments he would be entitled to receive from his proportionate share acreage.

Further answering the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY]—I am sorry he is not in the Chamber at the moment—I will say that the imposition of penalties will have a tendency of cutting down sugar production in Louisiana and Florida because no farmer would want to leave standing an acre of cane, for instance, second-year stubble, where the net revenue he would get from that cane after harvesting it would be less than the $20 penalty imposed under my amendment. And I am confident that under this penalty system quite a few thousand acres of second-year stubble will be destroyed. I, of course, dislike the penalty feature, but my amendment represents the best bargain I could obtain from the Sugar Division.

As I said a while ago, the appropriation which is to be made to pay sugar producers for 1940 will benefit because quite a number of farmers in Louisiana and Florida will take advantage of the option of cultivating their excess sugarcane acreage and making it into sugar, and permit the Government to deduct from their benefit payments whatever amount the penalty imposed by my amendment adds up to in their particular cases.

I repeat that the fund which is now being appropriated to pay the sugarcane farmers of my State will benefit under my proposed amendment. The amount expended in benefit payments will be reduced by several thousand dollars because I am sure that quite a number of Louisiana farmers will prefer to cultivate some of their excess cane acreage and accept the penalty.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Would not the complete result be this: In the first place, your farmers have planted an excess acreage?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. They ought not to have done that, of course.

Mr. ELLENDER. Oh, yes. They acted in good faith. There was no quota at the time they made their plantings. The quota provisions of the act were suspended. There was no law in effect.

Mr. NORRIS. I assume that might occur because it is a 3-year crop.

Mr. ELLENDER. No; the quota was suspended.

Mr. ADAMS. Is the Senator correct that title III was suspended? Title III contains the limitation on the cultivation. Title III was not suspended, but only title II of the Sugar Act was suspended.

Mr. ELLENDER. The quota was suspended; and I read to the Senate a few minutes ago a telegram that was sent by Dr. Bernhardt, of the Sugar Division, advising that at that time the Department did not contemplate a 1940 quota. His exact words were:

> In view of the suspension of quotas, no program or payments under the provisions of title III of the Sugar Act is in effect or contemplated at this time for the 1940 crop in any producing area.

Mr. ADAMS. Title III was not suspended. Only title II was suspended. I will be glad to read it to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana will result in increased production in Louisiana, we will say. If we are to have quotas on sugar, and the amount that the American producer of sugar can produce is limited, and then if one section of the country overlaps and goes beyond its quota, will it not affect the other sugar producers, and they will not get the same quota they otherwise would receive?

Mr. ELLENDER. No, sir, it cannot, Senator, and I will state the reason. Let us say that the law as it is now written should be extended into the next year. Here is what would happen. If Louisiana produces in excess of its marketing quota, any excess is carried into the next year, so that when the acreage is fixed for next year, Louisiana's acreage is reduced in proportion to the amount of excess sugar her processors have on hand. It does not affect the area of the Senator from Nebraska. The same situation exists in the beet area. If in the beet area there is sugar produced far in excess of its marketing quota of sugar, the following year its acreage would be, of course, in proportion to the excess sugar it has on hand. In other words, the larger the carry-over in either the beet area or the sugarcane area, the less will be the acreage the following year.

The two territories are treated separately. We in the cane-sugar area have to suffer in succeeding years, depending on the amount of carry-over sugar we have on hand, and likewise the sugar-beet farmers suffer in loss of acreage in proportion to the carry-over sugar in their industry. That is why I cannot for the life of me see why my good friends who represent those who produce beet sugar should object to this proposal, because it does not affect them.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DANAHER in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The thing I cannot understand about the Senator's argument is this. The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] earlier in the Senator's remarks asked the Senator whether you were not simply postponing your problem from this year to next year, and that next year you would have the added burden, and the Senator from Louisiana explained in answer to that question, that an excessive freeze occurred in Louisiana this year, and therefore it probably would not mean an additional problem next year. But the Senator explained that in Louisiana a 3-year crop is obtained. If you carry along your excessive planting, due to the situation last fall, you may be able to rely upon this freeze as far as this year is concerned, but can you possibly rely upon this year's freeze in washing out your problem in the second year and the third year? Will you not certainly in the second and the third years be met with the same problem?

Mr. ELLENDER. No; for this reason, Senator: That each year we destroy a third of our crop. When the proposition faces us next year, we will, under ordinary planting practices, destroy one-third of our cane; that is, the second stubble of this year will become third stubble next year, and in Louisiana it is customary to destroy third stubble. Next year, if we have to reduce, we can simply make no new plantings or reduce our new plantings. And so the monetary loss will not be as great, the Senator can readily see, as it would be if we are forced now to destroy plant cane that will be good for 3 years. Senators, if we are permitted not to destroy the cane planted this year, then if the law which is now on the statute books happens to be reenacted next year, in the ordinary course of sugar culture, we are going to have to destroy one-third of our acreage. And the only thing the farmer will have to do will be to plant less cane next year, and the loss will be what he would naturally lose; that is, the stools from one-third the acreage.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Does that mean that you are objecting to destroying it now, but are going to destroy it next year? What is the difference between destruction at one time and destruction at another time?

Mr. ELLENDER. No. If we destroy a stubble cane that has produced two crops, our loss will not be great, but this year many farmers will be called upon to destroy a great deal of new plant cane that has never produced anything. As I pointed out a while ago, cane produces at least three crops.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Why would you not destroy more of the stubble cane this year of your second-year cane and leave that which is excess planting remain?

Mr. ELLENDER. Because in some cases certain farmers had less than 25 percent of their acreage in sugar and they naturally increased their plantings. They complied with the requirements of the Department in not destroying their cane last year, expecting to take advantage of the situation this year, and, of course, under the rulings of the Department, if the quota system had not been lifted a good many farmers would have had to destroy the first year stools. But under the proposition as it now stands I can assure Senators that thousands of acres of cane planted this year, that never produced a stalk of cane, are going to be destroyed if this amendment is not adopted.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GURNEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Does the Senator know whether there is power in the Sugar Division of the Department of Agriculture to tide the farmers of the Senator's State over until the sugar bill can get over from the House?

Mr. ELLENDER. I would not ask the Senate to adopt my amendment if that were possible.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Does not the Sugar Section of the Department of Agriculture have power to relieve the farmers of Louisiana for a month or two?

Mr. ELLENDER. Of course, they could, Senator, but it would probably be postponing the agony. There is no assurance that can be given that cane will not be destroyed. If the cane is not cultivated now, it is bound to suffer in the future, and no farmer wants to invest more money today if there is a chance that the cane has to be destroyed in the future. In other words, as I pointed out a while ago, we are faced with a loss of from $28 to $35 an acre, besides all the work that has been done for 1 or 2 years on the land. That cane is planted. It is there. It has to be worked today and tomorrow. And if the farmer cultivates that cane, it means that he has to put out more money. And unless there is assurance now that his additional expenditure of labor and money will not go by the wayside, and this money he has to spend to cultivate the crop will not be lost, he will have no incentive. That is why I say that immediate action should be taken, because if that cane is permitted to remain in the ground uncultivated, it will deteriorate further. That is why it is imperative that help be rendered now.

As I stated to the Senate previously, and I repeat, I cannot understand how my amendment can affect the sugar-beet growers. On the contrary, as I see it, all of us would be in the same boat; this proposition simply means that the sugar-cane farmers are going to be put on the same level as the sugar-beet farmers. There will not be any difference. If the sugar-beet farmers this year produce in excess of their quota, they will have to carry that excess into next year; and if cane growers are permitted to produce sugar from this excess planting, our own carry-over is increased likewise, and we shall have to suffer next year. And overproduction in one area cannot affect the other.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Does it occur to the Senator from Louisiana that the farmers of Idaho are just an anxious about the sugar legislation as the farmers of Louisiana? We are now planting our sugar beets. We do not know how many acres of sugar beets to plant. The quota has been raised, but the processor does not know how much to contract for.

Mr. ELLENDER. But the proposition is this: That the dilemma facing you is not the law itself. It is a question of the factories you have in your area which are willing to contract with your farmers. In our case the farmers who have planted their cane in good faith have contracts with processors to grind the cane and make it into sugar, and those contracts are valid, and I repeat that it would be a crime to destroy that cane.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Is it the Senator's contention that if you produce this excess sugar this year it will be carried over to next year?

Mr. ELLENDER. That is if we are blessed with normal yields, but all evidence points to a much smaller yield per acre this year. But the only persons who will be affected by that increase in production, even if we have an increase, will be the Louisiana farmers, not the farmers of the Senator's State. It will simply mean that if on this excess acreage there is produced more sugar than our marketing quota we will be penalized by having our acreage reduced for the following year.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. What happens to the sugar producer is that the carry-over reduces the price. The price is now very low.

Mr. ELLENDER. Of course the price now is very low, but I cannot see how my amendment could have any detrimental effect on the price of sugar.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. A carry-over of sugar reduces the price, which affects the beet grower as well as the cane grower.

Mr. ELLENDER. Even though under normal conditions we should produce 50,000 tons of sugar on the excess acreage, that would not be enough to satisfy the palate of the people of this country for 48 hours; and it cannot possibly affect the market value. Our sugar experts agree to that proposition.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. It is the extra amount which always ruins the market.

Mr. ELLENDER. I understand; but the amount is very small, and that amount would not be placed on the market, except within our marketing quota.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. However, the principle is the same. This legislation has been pending all winter. Our people in the West are very much interested and very anxious to have legislation come over from the House. If the administration will cooperate, that legislation can come over in 2 or 3 days. It is ready; and when it comes to the Senate I am sure we can dispose of it. The Senator's people will not be hurt at all. But if we go ahead and accept the amendment——

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator knows that we cannot propose sugar legislation on this side because of the tax provisions.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. I understand that.

Mr. ELLENDER. It must originate on the other side. If I felt in my heart that the bill would come over from the House within 30 or 40 days, I should not be alarmed. But with the opposition to the bill which comes from many sources, I fear that the bill may not come over to the Senate until May or June, which, of course, would be too late. The horse would then be dead.

Mr. President, I believe the Senate thoroughly understands the situation which confronts my people, and I am very hopeful that it will stand by me. As I said when I started this debate, even though I should stay in the Senate for the remainder of my natural life, I do not expect to offer a proposal to this body which has more merit than the pending amendment.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I was on my feet some time ago to bring this matter up. I have been impressed with one argument which has been advanced by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and others who indicate some apparent opposition to the amendment, and that is the argument that it ought to be the subject of a general consideration of the sugar question. I admit that there is some merit in that contention.

On the other hand, I recognize the very difficult problem presented by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER]. I do not agree with the view that we shall not have sugar legislation in this session. As was intimated a short time ago, we cannot originate such legislation.

However, two bills are pending in the House, and I have been assured—not by the Secretary of Agriculture, but by the head of the Sugar Division in the Department of Agriculture—that the Department is desirous of having sugar legislation in one of two forms—either a general bill or a continuing resolution—with some consideration for some changes which I think should be made in section 201 of the act, both with regard to the price section and with regard to the allotment of the market between foreign producers and those in the United States. I think the principal difficulties are involved in the two questions which I have just suggested.

I notice that the chairman of the Finance Committee [Mr. HARRISON] is in the Chamber. He honored me by having me report the sugar bill of 1937, and with my feeble ability I handled the bill on the floor. I ask the Senator from Mississippi, the chairman of the Finance Committee, whether or not in his judgment there will be any delay whatsoever in the consideration of any bill affecting the sugar situation which may come over from the House of Representatives.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may answer that question?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, I am extremely interested in the passage of legislation affecting the sugar quota. I think one of the most difficult tasks we ever had was in the passage of the original Jones-Costigan Act; and yet I think it accomplished quite as much for producers of both sugar beets and sugarcane as any legislation we have ever passed.

I am intensely interested in the measure coming over to us from the House. I shall cooperate to the limit to see that some legislation passes at this session. In this connection I will say that when the amendment was first offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] I was skeptical of it. In the first place, I was afraid that it would require too much time and would delay other legislation and that perhaps it was best to handle the matter in one piece of legislation.

As stated by the Senator from Louisiana, I went into an investigation of this amendment and consulted with the experts of the Agricultural Department. I was impressed with the justice of the proposed legislation. I know the Department of Agriculture favors it. Because of the emergency situation, the Department thinks it ought to be tied onto this bill. For that reason I shall vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana. I shall vote not only for the motion to suspend the rule but also for the amendment itself.

I will say to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], who so ably handled the past quota legislation, and to those interested from the sugar-beet area, as well as the sugarcane area, that I shall lend every cooperation toward expediting the legislation when the bill comes over from the House. I regret that there is any division between the sugar-beet people and the sugarcane people, or between them and any representative who feels sympathetic to Puerto Rico or other sugar-producing areas. The way to pass sugar legislation is through cooperation and pulling together. For that reason I regret that a fight over the amendment has arisen in the Senate.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his contribution. I am certain he expresses the hope of all of us that we shall have sugar legislation at this session. I think it is absolutely essential to the continuance of the industry.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I ask the Senator from Louisiana to yield in order that I may address an inquiry to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course, it is very encouraging to have the announcement of the Senator from Mississippi that he will be very glad to cooperate in facilitating the passage of sugar legislation. I should expect such a statement from the Senator from Mississippi, because it can be said without question that it was his cooperation, both in 1934 and 1937, which made possible the legislation first called the Jones-Costigan Act, and the continuing act, called the Sugar Act of 1937.

That legislation has been extremely beneficial to all the elements of the sugar industry, including producers of cane and producers of sugar beets; but, unfortunately, a feeling has grown up in the country that some obstacle of some kind, not altogether clear, has arisen in the way of enactment of legislation at this session. It is impossible to put our fingers upon it, but the feeling exists.

As several Senators have already announced, ever since the beginning of this session those of us who represent the sugar-producing States have been in conference in an effort to work out some form of legislation. Several weeks ago Representative CUMMINGS, of Colorado, introduced in the House a bill to provide for a substitute for the legislation which expires this year. As yet there has been no report on that bill.

Only a few moments ago, in the course of this debate, I went to the telephone to talk with the head of the Sugar Division to find out when a report may be expected. I find that the bill has not reached the Sugar Division for analysis. Where is the obstacle? The bill has been before the Committee on Agriculture in the House for several weeks, and no progress has been made.

I ask the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] whether or not there is any possibility of his advising us what we may expect with respect to early action by the Department of Agriculture and the administration in connection with a recommendation for legislation. It is perfectly obvious that we cannot legislate unless we have cooperation among all concerned, including the planters of Louisiana, with whom we have always previously cooperated, the State Department, representing the very difficult conditions which exist in Cuba—which I recognize—the processors, the refiners, and also the vast labor interests involved in this matter, the refinery workers in the United States, both in the beet-sugar refineries and in the refineries along the Atlantic seaboard.

Over and above all that, we have great areas of land in the United States which are capable of producing sugar. I see the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] in the Chamber. In his State new reclamation projects which are ideally suited to the production of sugar beets are now open for operation, and yet those areas may not produce sugar beets because of the marketing allotments. It is said on the floor that the Department has lifted the restrictions upon planting, but of what use is the lifting of the restrictions upon planting if the sugar to be produced may not be sold? That limitation exists. So what hope have we for early action?

Mr. HARRISON. In answer to the Senator's question, I can see no reason why sugar legislation should not be passed at this session unless those interested in it from the sugar-beet areas and from the sugarcane areas fall out among themselves. I have found that when they get together they are very effective, and usually they obtain what they want. I could not go so far as to say that I want to increase the burden upon the consumers——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I must interrupt the Senator, because there never has been a time within my knowledge when the domestic producers of sugar beets or sugarcane have ever wanted to place any burden upon the consumers. That is a complete misrepresentation of the attitude of our producers. All they want is a fair price.

Mr. ELLENDER. A fair return for their crops.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In the legislation which is now upon the statute books we agreed very gladly to the provisions which were intended to guarantee to the consumer that there should not be an excessive price. The danger to the consumer, Mr. President, arises not from anything that the domestic producers of cane or sugar beets will do. It arises from the danger that the domestic consumer in the United States will be made dependent upon supplies from foreign areas; and then, as in the past, the domestic consumer will be confronted by the danger of a greatly increased price for the product.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I understand the Senator's viewpoint, and that of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER]. In former days I have had many discussions on the floor about the tariff on sugar, but I think the present arrangement of quota systems is fine. If the bill now in the House passes the House, I shall call the Finance Committee together as soon as possible and help to put through the legislation at this session.

I have had no indication as to what the administration or the Agriculture Department desire; but it is my belief—and, of course, I cannot understand why there should be a contrary viewpoint—that they would want the bill to pass. The present measure has done well, and it expires at the end of this year. I am very hopeful that the bill will pass.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. I have been very much interested in hearing these comments on the sugar bill; and I hope the same enthusiasm that is manifested for the passage of that bill will be entertained and expressed by Senators to see to it that the areas of this country which are capable of producing sugar for domestic consumption have an opportunity to do it. So far as the junior Senator from Florida is concerned, he will cooperate with anyone in the Senate in an effort to obtain in the coming sugar legislation a fair opportunity for those who are fitted by nature to grow sugar in this country to do so.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I do not know that I can add more to this debate than I have up to the present time. If there is any doubt in the mind of any Senator as to the purport of this amendment of mine, I shall be glad to answer any questions on the subject. I stated on several occasions during the debate that I had reports from my State showing the injurious effect of the recent cold on the cane crop. The report that I have here comes from Mr. George Arceneaux, who is the agronomist at the United States sugarcane experiment station at Houma, La. It is headed:

REPORT ON COLD DAMAGE TO SUGARCANE ON HOUMA EXPERIMENT STATION AND SURROUNDING PLANTATIONS—PLANT CANE

Studies conducted immediately after the January freezes indicated that while the shoots had been frozen back to a depth of 1½ to 2 inches below the ground surface, very few of the plants had been destroyed.

Germination to date indicates fairly normal stands of plant cane, but the crop is from 2 to 3 weeks late. It is estimated that this disadvantage in itself will probably account for a reduction in yield of sugar per acre of from 5 to 8 percent. Actual yields to be obtained, however, will obviously depend greatly on weather conditions between now and harvest.

STUBBLE CANE

As I indicated a while ago with reference to the difference between plant cane and stubble cane, as a rule one-third of our plantings is plant cane and two-thirds is stubble. Now, I am going to read to the Senate the effect that the recent cold had on stubble cane:

Counts made immediately after the January freeze showed that from 12 to 30 percent of buds below the ground surface were dead. Weather conditions since the freeze have been on the whole unfavorable, and observations at this time indicate that an additional 3 to 5 percent of the underground buds have died.

In other words, it means that from 15 to 35 percent of the buds underground are actually dead, and, of course, cannot be revived.

From 10 to 20 percent of the buds still viable are located within a region of the old stubble piece which shows evidence of freeze injury. It is feared that with continued cold, wet weather, extensive stubble deterioration may occur, with consequent loss of many of the buds now viable.

Stubble cane is germinating very slowly, and the crop has been retarded even more than plant cane. Stubble has unquestionably been damaged more severely than plant cane, but it is considered impossible at this time to estimate accurately the probable effect in terms of percent of yield reduction. With warm, dry weather during the next 4 or 5 weeks, the resulting reduction in yield would probably not exceed 10 to 15 percent. On the other hand, should the weather continue cold and wet, we can expect exceedingly gappy stands. Under such conditions I consider it possible that the eventual yield of sugar per acre from stubble cane may be reduced as much as 20 to 30 percent.

Mr. President, from that investigation made by the United States Government sugar station in Louisiana, I am convinced that the sugar farmers of my State stand to lose from 10 to as much as 30 percent of their production; and I repeat to the Senate that even though this amendment of mine be accepted, the probabilities are that the production on this excess acreage will not equal what the normal production would have been on our proportionate-share acreage. Therefore I plead with you that this amendment will not increase our sugar surplus, and will not hurt the beet people in the least; and, as I have pointed out on many occasions during this debate, I am convinced that some of the beet people are unduly alarmed about the situation. The amendment cannot affect them; it cannot affect their sugar prices; and I urge that the Senate vote to suspend the rule so that I may offer my proposed amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] to suspend the rules in order to permit him to offer the amendment heretofore submitted by him, which will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 80, line 4, before the period, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Provided further, That no payment under the Sugar Act of 1937 with respect to the 1940 crop shall be withheld from any producer in the mainland cane-sugar area, because of the marketing (or processing) of sugarcane in excess of the proportionate share for the farm, if the acreage of sugarcane grown on the farm and marketed (or processed) for sugar in the crop year 1940 is not in excess of the acreage of sugarcane for sugar planted prior to January 1, 1940: Provided, however, That payments shall be made only with respect to the proportionate share acreage established for the farm under the provisions of such act, and the following deductions shall be made from such payments on account of the excess of the acreage of sugarcane grown on the farm and marketed (or processed) for sugar in the crop year 1940 over the proportionate share for the farm. For so much of such excess as does not exceed 25 acres, no deduction; for so much of such excess as exceeds 25 acres but does not exceed 125 acres, a deduction of $5 per acre; for so much of such excess as exceeds 125 acres but does not exceed 625 acres, a deduction of $10 per acre; for so much of such excess as exceeds 625 acres but does not exceed 1,125 acres, a deduction of $15 per acre; for so much of excess as exceeds 1,125 acres, a deduction of $20 per acre.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the remark recently made by the chairman of the Finance Committee [Mr. HARRISON] is a very pertinent remark—that the sugar people should cooperate. What brings about our trouble here is failure to cooperate. One group of sugar producers come in and seek to attach to an appropriation bill a measure to meet, not the combined or cooperated needs, but one particular need.

I am convinced that we ought not to seek to attach general legislation of this kind to an appropriation bill. I think this discussion rather definitely discloses the impropriety of doing so. There has been no hearing. No testimony has been taken. We are dependent upon disputed facts on the floor of the Senate as to something which affects a great industry, and I am concerned that the sugar people shall work together.

I am not contending essentially against the situation in Louisiana. I am saying that Louisiana and Michigan and Colorado should all go before the Agricultural Committee or the Finance Committee, present their problems, and work out a bill that we can all get behind, where we will have the full statements of fact; where we will have the experts; where we will have the representatives of cane growers and the representatives of beet growers, rather than to come in and attach as a rider to an appropriation bill a partial sugar bill.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator attended the conference to which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] referred, when Dr. Bernhardt and several others attended?

Mr. ADAMS. I did.

Mr. ELLENDER. Does the Senator recall Dr. Bernhardt's statement that even though a sugar bill was passed by the Senate, the distress incident to the Louisiana situation could not be cured by such a bill?

Mr. ADAMS. I do not recall his saying so, but if he did say so, I do not think the statement is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator understands that if an additional quota, let us say, is allowed to Louisiana, the quota would have to be distributed among all the farmers on a certain proportionate basis.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator from Louisiana that in considering a sugar bill which affects the beet people and all, I am perfectly willing to have the identical amendment which the Senator is now submitting considered in connection with that bill.

Mr. ELLENDER. I appreciate that statement, Mr. President. What I fear is that it may take too long to do that. It may take 60 days or 90 days.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, of course, I am a member of the Appropriations Committee. I have two interests as I think of appropriation bills and their proper treatment representing as I do a beet-growing area. This is a problem that arose on the 27th of December of last year. If the Senator from Louisiana had seen fit to introduce a bill on the subject, it could very properly have gone through the regular course and gone through hearings. I know the Senator from Louisiana was busy; I know he met obstacles; but the opportunity is still available to the Senator to introduce the measure as an independent bill and have it go through the regular legislative process. But as a member of the Appropriations Committee, interested in that, I cannot approve the development of the practice of putting general legislation—I do not mean merely an item of legislation such as we put on from time to time, but a general bit of legislation connected with other legislation—on an appropriation bill and carrying it through.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, am I to understand the Senator from Colorado to mean that if the proposal I am now advancing to the Senate were incorporated in a separate bill, he would urge no objection to its passage? As the Senator might know, I have such a bill pending.

Mr. ADAMS. I might offer amendments to it in order to protect our beet people.

Mr. ELLENDER. Of course, the amendments would be such that the bill probably would meet the same fate that Senate bill 69 met at the hands of the House last time.

Mr. ADAMS. Not at all; no. The Senator and I are both at the mercy of the House.

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes; I understand.

Mr. ADAMS. This amendment will be at the mercy of the House when it goes across. The judgment of the House cannot be escaped by attaching the matter to an appropriation bill as an amendment.

Mr. ELLENDER. I understand that.

Mr. ADAMS. As a matter of fact, I am inclined to think the Senator will find a harsher judgment of the House in this procedure than if the matter came across in a separate bill, because I know the members of the Appropriations Committee and their disposition to fight legislation on appropriation bills. I know what they will do. They will submit this amendment to a separate vote of the House. That is an inevitable situation. It will not just go before the House voting yea or nay on the appropriation bill. Under their practice, whenever legislation comes from the Senate on an appropriation bill, it is submitted as a matter of their rule as well as a matter of course to a separate vote in the House, and a controversy arises on the floor of the House.

Mr. ELLENDER. Would not that take place, and does it not take place in cases in which the appropriation involved would be increased by virtue of such legislation?

Mr. ADAMS. Oh, no! Whenever general legislation is placed by the Senate on an appropriation bill the rules of the House require the submission of that particular amendment to a vote of the House.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator concedes that if this amendment should be adopted it would have a tendency to decrease the appropriation provided for sugarcane growers in Louisiana, does he not?

Mr. ADAMS. I do not think it would; no. I should think the reverse would be true; and yet that is one of the things that bothers me. The matter has not been worked out. I will say to the Senator that I do not care about the payment feature. As a matter of fact, I hope the growers of Louisiana will be liberally treated. I would rather they got more than less. As I say, I am not concerned with the payment feature. I am concerned with the quantity of sugar. My people, the representatives of the beet-sugar growers in the western country, say to me they are afraid this amendment will be detrimental not because of the increased payments but because there will be produced 60,000 tons of marketable sugar—I do not mean legally—but sugar, even though you seek to warehouse it and say, "We will not sell it," has its effect upon the market; and the beet grower is paid upon the price at which sugar sells. Roughly, the grower of beets in my State and in all the Western States gets 50 percent of what the sugar brings.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. I grant that the amendment which the Senator from Louisiana proposes is probably legislation.

Mr. ADAMS. Not probably, but certainly.

Mr. BROWN. It seems to me, however, that by any rule of logic, aside perhaps from the strict rules of the Appropriations Committee, when the amendment treats with the disposition of the $46,000,000 which is provided for on page 82 of the bill, it certainly logically attaches itself to the expenditure of that money; and while it might be in violation of the strict rules of the Appropriations Committee, it certainly addresses itself to the precise subject to which this legislation addresses itself.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator that the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana is an amendment of subdivision (c) of section 301 of the Sugar Act of 1937. It is a definite amendment of a provision of the law. That law says that benefit payments shall not be made unless there is compliance with the limitations on the production. The amendment provides that that provision of this subsection shall not apply to excess production of sugarcane in violation of the section, provided the sugarcane was planted prior to January 1, 1940.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator will admit that it relates to the $46,675,000, which is raised by reason of a processing tax upon the very sugar which is here produced, because it disposes of that fund of money, in part, to the Louisiana cane growers. It takes from them something out of this $46,000,000 which, were it not for this situation, they would otherwise receive.

Mr. ADAMS. No. As a matter of fact, it gives to them something which they would not get under the law as it stands. It is not a limitation upon an appropriation; it is an expansion. As I have said, I hope they will get it.

Mr. BROWN. Not an expansion of the amount of money, but of the use of the money; it does not make the amount any larger.

Mr. ADAMS. It does not make the amount any larger, but the amendment in turn provides "That no payment under the Sugar Act of 1937, with respect to the 1940 crop, shall be withheld from any producer" because he has produced sugarcane "in excess of the proportionate share for the farm." In other words, it amends the limitation of the conditional-payment provision which would prevent payments being made for the excess. It does not affect the amount of the appropriation at all; it merely makes certain people eligible for payments for which they are not eligible this moment.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator will admit that it is not totally unrelated to the $46,000,000 about which we are talking.

Mr. ADAMS. Of course not, but I am trying to say to the Senator and others that the concern of the beet people is not over the money. Our people are concerned over the increased production of sugar. I am perfectly willing to have the Louisiana producers paid for plowing up, but what we are concerned about—and I am speaking of the advices I receive from beet growers—is that 60,000 tons would be put on the market as the result of the adoption of the amendment, which would have two effects, one being the probable lowering of the price of sugar in the American market because of increase in the supply. The Senator knows that the suspension of title II of the act resulted in something over 300,000 tons of sugar being brought into the United States from Puerto Rico.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. How would this amendment increase the marketing quota of the sugar of Louisiana?

Mr. ADAMS. No one said it would.

Mr. OVERTON. Then how would it affect the price of sugar produced from beets? Under the amendment, the Louisiana growers could process cane into sugar and get the benefit payments, yet they could not market the sugar in excess of the marketing quota; so how would it affect the beet people?

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator is not conscious of the persuasiveness of the Senators from Louisiana. I am. Let us assume that Louisiana has 60,000 tons of sugar which perhaps they are not able to sell today. I have not a doubt in the world but that when the able and persuasive and eloquent Senators from Louisiana appeal to the Senate for legislation enabling their farmers to market this extra sugar which they process, because of all of these untoward circumstances, Congress will yield and the 60,000 tons will go on the market.

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator's objection is that he anticipates that at some time in the future Congress will increase the marketing quota for Louisiana.

Mr. ADAMS. No; I am not concerned about the marketing quota for Louisiana.

Mr. OVERTON. Louisiana cannot market its sugar except within the confines of the marketing quota.

Mr. ADAMS. That is correct, but Louisiana does not have a specific State-wide marketing quota. This is the practical situation which I was trying to outline when I yielded to the Senator——

Mr. OVERTON. One more question, and I will not further take up the Senator's time. I just got out of a sick bed to come here and vote on this matter. I think the Senator has gotten the wrong impression of the amendment. It cannot affect the sugar-beet market, because it does not increase the quota of Louisiana. It merely gives the right to the grower to go ahead and process sugar.

Mr. ADAMS. The theory of the Sugar Act of 1937, and the theory of the prior act, was to restrict marketing, and also to restrict production. They are so closely allied that if the sugar is produced it inevitably affects the market. By reason of the suspension of the quota by the President, a large amount of sugar came into the United States, so that there was a great deal of sugar hanging over the market; that is, there was a bit of hysteria because of the recollection of the sugar situation during the World War, and the housewives said, "We are not going to be caught this time," and they went out to the stores and began to buy hundred-pound sacks of sugar. Fearful of a speculative movement the President suspended the quota. Added to the domestic supply were the 300,000 tons from Puerto Rico, and some storage sugar which has been released. So the Department of Agriculture has fixed the marketing quota for the coming year at the lowest point at which it has ever been fixed.

The beet-sugar people produced last year or the year before 1,803,000 tons, and in the other year 1,700,000 tons, or a little over. They are restricted under the new limitation to 1,549,000 tons. In other words, the beet people are being held down to a limit due to the suspension of the quota, the same problem, in its effect, Louisiana is confronting. We are being told we cannot sell, therefore we cannot plant. In other words, we are held down more than 200,000 tons below what we have been producing. There are farms ready to produce, and factories ready to process. The farmers cannot sell to the factory, which is their only market, if the factory cannot market the sugar.

Mr. OVERTON. Louisiana is under the same limitation.

Mr. ADAMS. Being in the same situation, I think we should all act under the same law. I do not think we should start in and take out one class of farmers who are in trouble and leave the others out on the ocean without life preservers.

Mr. OVERTON. Louisiana is not trying to market any additional sugar at all.

Mr. ADAMS. It is going to produce it.

Mr. OVERTON. We merely want the farmers there to get the benefit payments under the law.

Mr. ADAMS. And produce 60,000 tons of sugar additional.

Mr. OVERTON. That may be very true; but it is to be carried over.

Mr. ADAMS. If the Senator's theory is correct, perhaps it can be carried over.

Mr. OVERTON. The farmers in the beet area are getting benefit payments on all they produce, are they not?

Mr. ADAMS. They have been, but they may not get them if they produce the same amount of sugar this year they produced last year. Under the marketing quota we would have 250,000 tons upon which we would not get benefit payments.

Mr. OVERTON. Louisiana farmers want to be paid just as the beet farmers are.

Mr. ADAMS. We are in entire accord, and the only way to accomplish that is to work it out in one bill, at one time, so that we can sit down and each take care of the other.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. With further reference to the appropriation under the bill, it is true that my amendment seeks to amend the present Sugar Act; but, in all events, whether the amendment shall be adopted or not, the only payments which could be made to the farmers of my State under the existing law would be on their proportionate share, and the only way by which they could obtain those payments would be by destroying the cane on the excess acreage. The Senator admits that, does he not?

Mr. ADAMS. Not eliminate them by order, as has been thought, apparently from what has been said in the discussion, by an order of the Department of Agriculture, but eliminate them in order to qualify. It has to be a voluntary action by the planters.

Mr. ELLENDER. If the planter does not destroy voluntarily, as the Senator would have it, he will be precluded from marketing the sugar, will he not?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes. The Senator is presenting an amendment to an appropriation bill seeking to have the troubles of his constituents cared for and leaving us out on a limb.

Mr. ELLENDER. I cannot agree that we would be leaving the Senator's constituents out on a limb because under the provisions of the rule which was issued on March 9 by the Department giving the beet people the right to produce and to receive payments on all of their acreage——

Mr. ADAMS. That is only true with a limitation—provided the amount they produce does not exceed the reduced beet-sugar quota.

Mr. ELLENDER. There is no limitation.

Mr. ADAMS. Oh, yes. The farmer cannot sell to the factory an additional amount of sugar beets to enable him to produce this quota. Every acre of beets they produce in excess of the amount which could be sold when reduced to sugar is simply lost.

Mr. ELLENDER. I quote from a memorandum which I hold in my hand, which states:

> Official figures issued on February 21 by the Sugar Division show that the carry-over of beet sugar on January 1, 1940, was 1,356,000 tons, which is about the same as in 1938 but is almost 300,000 tons greater than in 1937, 400,000 tons greater than in 1936, and 435,000 tons greater than in 1935. Therefore the carry-over is apparently well above normal.

The Senator does admit that on this excess sugar the beet people have been paid their benefit payments?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; but we are concerned with the next year; we are not concerned with the last year.

Mr. ELLENDER. By the same token, if the beet acreage which is planted this year in Colorado and other beet-producing States is manufactured into sugar, the Senator concedes that under the present regulation every beet farmer will be paid a benefit payment on every pound of sugar he produces.

Mr. ADAMS. No. It just depends. If they keep within the quota, they will be paid.

Mr. ELLENDER. I know; but if the beet factory grinds the beets into sugar——

Mr. ADAMS. Of course, they will not buy the beets from the farmer unless they can sell the sugar.

Mr. ELLENDER. As I interpret the ruling which I have read and placed in the RECORD——

Mr. ADAMS. I am talking about the Department of Agriculture, which, under the statute, has the right to fix the quotas for the domestic area, and they have reduced the quota for domestic beets to 1,549,000, the lowest it has ever been.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is the marketing quota.

Mr. ADAMS. That is the marketing quota. But you cannot sell to the factories sugar beets which will produce more than the marketing quota.

Mr. ELLENDER. I do not see how the Senator can reach that conclusion when, as a matter of fact, there is on hand today 1,356,000 tons of beet sugar, which is a carry-over, and upon which he admits that benefit payments have already been made.

Mr. ADAMS. That has nothing to do with the crop that is to be raised next year.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] has the floor.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In connection with the colloquy which has just been going on, I desire to call the Senator's attention to the provision of section 302 (a) of the Sugar Act, reading as follows:

> The amount of sugar or liquid sugar with respect to which payments may be made shall be the amount of sugar or liquid sugar commercially recoverable, as determined by the Secretary, from the sugar beets or sugarcane grown on the farm and marketed (or processed by the producer) not in excess of the proportionate share for the farm, as determined by the Secretary.

And so forth. So that the benefit payment is clearly tied to the marketing quota, and the marketing quota, as the Senator from Colorado has so clearly pointed out, has been established, so there is no possibility of any benefit payments upon sugar that is not marketed.

Mr. ADAMS. I will add to the remarks of the Senator from Wyoming that the Sugar Act of 1937 was based on a minimum domestically produced quota of 371,715 tons, and this allocation is right at the lowest possible point that the Secretary of Agriculture could put it under the statute, and then he has put the apportionment to the sugar-producing areas down simply to make up this minimum.

If I may make a few general observations about the sugar business and the thing that causes all this difficulty, the sugar production in the United States is regarded, and has been regarded, as some kind of a stepchild. Here we are in this very bill making appropriations of hundreds of millions of dollars to aid in the disposal of surplus commodities. Here is a great commodity, of which we produce less than is required. We are producing only 28 or 29 percent of what we consume, and our trouble rises out of the fact that the Government of the United States and the Congress puts limitations on the production of this vital necessity of life.

One day they say to us, "You can only produce 420,000 tons of cane sugar in the United States. You can only produce one and one-half million tons of beet sugar." If they would do the fair thing, they would say to the people of Louisiana and to the people of Colorado, "Produce all that your fields can produce and then we will go abroad for the deficiency."

As it is, it seems as if the first consideration was being given to some foreign areas. The prevalent idea seems to be that one dollar's worth of foreign trade is worth more than a dollar's worth of domestic trade—that it is better to buy a dollar's worth of sugar from Cuba than a dollar's worth of sugar from Louisiana. Of the dollar that is sent to Cuba, perhaps 30 cents comes back. For the dollar that is spent in Louisiana, 100 cents of it is spent in the United States. Yet we are here contending with one another over the opportunity to produce of crop of which there is a deficiency in the United States.

Mr. President, we have that fundamental difficulty. It is an outrageous thing that we must contend over the right to supply that which the American people need.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I am in thorough accord with what the Senator has just said, and in connection with his statement will he permit me to read into the RECORD from a table showing the number of sugar mills in Cuba and their production for 1938? Senators, listen to these facts: The number of mills in Cuba aggregates 174. The number of mills that are owned and controlled by United States citizens is 67. The production of sugar from those 67 mills aggregates 55.75 percent of the entire production of the island.

Mr. President, the table shows that Cuban capital owns about 55 mills and the percentage of production of sugar on the island by Cuban-owned mills amounts to 22.2 percent.

The other mills on the island belong to citizens of Spain, Canada, England, France, and Holland. These figures show that in respect to the entire production of sugar in Cuba 55 percent of any tariff differentials that accrue to Cuba find their way back to New York.

Mr. President, I ask that this table be inserted in the RECORD at this point in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

Sugar mills in Cuba and their production, 1938

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, may I further interrupt the Senator?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. ELLENDER. With respect to the question asked by the Senator from Wyoming a moment ago, is it not a fact that the beet producer is paid on whatever acreage is allotted to him?

Mr. ADAMS. No; he is paid on his tonnage. He is paid on his sugar basis. He is paid 60 cents per 100 pounds on his sugar basis. Is that not correct?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes. But on the sugar, though, that is produced on his allotted acreage. Is that not true?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, that is not exactly true.

Mr. ELLENDER. Why is it not?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Because the law specifies that the payment shall be made not alone upon the allotted acreage, but upon the sugar on allotted acreage which is marketed or processed. And since the Secretary has definitely fixed the amount which may be marketed, the condition in the beet area is exactly the same as was just described by the colleague of the Senator from Louisiana with respect to the situation in Louisiana. The Senator says to us in justification of the amendment which he desires—and I sympathize with the Senator's position—that though fifty or sixty thousand extra tons may be produced it will not enter marketing allotment. Is not that the Senator's position?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The same thing applies in the beet area.

Mr. ELLENDER. It will not enter the marketing for that year. But I will say to the Senator that if production of sugar in Louisiana is made on the allotted acreage, in excess of the marketing quota, the farmers of Louisiana will be paid on that to the same extent as the farmers of the Senator's State will be paid. I can show the figures to prove that the production of sugarcane on the allotted acreage in Louisiana was far in excess of the marketing quota fixed by the Department. The sugar farmers of my State were paid on that amount. By the same token I can give the figures with reference to beets, and here they are: In 1938 the marketing allotments for the beet area amounted to 1,584,083 tons of sugar. The beet farmers produced in that year a total of 1,802,269 tons of sugar. Likewise, in 1939 the marketing allotments were 1,566,719 tons, and the beet growers produced a total of 1,753,390 tons. The beet growers received benefit payments on every pound of sugar produced in 1938 and 1939, although production in each year was considerably in excess of the Department's marketing allotments.

In other words, the way the law has been administered by the Department is that when once a given acreage is allotted to farmers, if the amount of sugar produced on that given acreage is in excess of the marketing quota, the farmer is paid on the total produced at the rate of 60 cents per hundred pounds of sugar. That is the way the act has been administered in the States. I can produce facts and figures to show that within the last 3 years the acreage in Louisiana has varied from 275,000 acres to two-hundred-and-thirty-thousand-odd acres, and that the production on that acreage was in excess of the marketing quota. Yet our farmers were paid on that excess production. The same thing has resulted in the case of the beet producers, as I have just indicated. So that when the Senator says that although the beet farmers of the Nation can produce on this allotted acreage, that their payments are relegated to the amount of sugar marketed, I think he is in error, with all due respect to him. The Sugar Division has announced, under its regulation of March 9, that the proportionate share or acreage allotment for any farm for the 1940 crop will be the acreage of sugar beets that is planted on the farm for the production of sugar and my contention is that he will be paid on all sugar manufactured.

Mr. ADAMS. Which has nothing to do with the payments. That is, they are only paid within the limits of their marketable quotas.

Mr. ELLENDER. That may result from the fact that the processor will not take the beets, but if the processor does take the beets and does reduce the beets to sugar, then the farmer will have complied with the law.

The marketing figures as I recall, for my State and for the State of Florida, are fixed at 420,000 tons.

Mr. ADAMS. Four hundred and twenty thousand one hundred and sixty-seven tons.

Mr. ELLENDER. If 500,000 tons of sugar is produced this year on the proportionate share of acreage, does the Senator from Colorado contend that the sugar producers of my State and those of the State of Florida will not be paid on that 500,000 tons?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; they will not be paid, of course, unless the law is changed.

Mr. ELLENDER. My contention is that even with the beet producers, if the amount of acreage, which is unlimited, is planted, and it is harvested and produced into sugar by the sugar-beet factories all over the country, the Treasury will pay to each and every farmer who produces those beets at the rate of 60 cents per hundred pounds.

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; but the Senator is assuming the impossible thing that it will be processed. Of course, what we are trying to say is that the factory will not make contracts for beets which will produce sugar in excess of the marketing quota.

May I make another general observation or two, because I am anxious to have the very eloquent and ardent support of the Senator behind efforts to remedy the evils of the general situation? That is what I am concerned about.

Mr. President, we are told frequently that the people of the United States are being robbed in behalf of the sugar producers. I suppose that the tariff walls result in a tax upon the American people of anywhere from $6,000,000,000 to $10,000,000,000 in increased prices of what they buy.

I am familiar with the sugar-beet situation. Our people raise a ton of beets and are reasonably content if they obtain six and one-half dollars a ton. It is an expensive crop to raise. It involves the finest kind of land. The crop must be rotated for at least 2 years out of 3. It requires three or four processes—the cultivating, the planting, the thinning, and the topping, and going through the factory.

Take a crop like alfalfa, which requires merely water, and of which two or three crops a year are obtained. If you were to try to contract with the farmer for six and a half dollars a ton in advance, he would say the price was absurd. Try to contract for any of these crops of that kind, and you will find that the price paid for sugar beets is the lowest price paid for any agricultural crop.

Then go beyond that. Here is an expensive process of manufacture. When the factory ends with the sugar beet it is ready for the table, and you can buy the completed product of the beet for 5 cents a pound.

It has gone through expensive processes of cultivation and factory manufacturing and requires no cooking or further household processing. There is not a single thing that goes on the American table with respect to which there is so little spread between the cost of the product on the table and its cost of production. Think of other great crops—onions, cauliflower, cabbage, and so forth. The producers would not think of selling them at $6.50 a ton; and yet that is all we are fighting for in the beet area. We are fighting for three-tenths of a cent a pound for a crop which costs a great deal to produce. It is an essential crop in wartime and peacetime.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. LEE. What is the average production per acre of sugar beets?

Mr. ADAMS. Probably from 10 to 12 tons per acre, and probably 290 pounds of sugar per ton. For purposes of computation, if the Senator takes 300 pounds he will have an outside figure. I think in our State sugar beets are paid for on the basis of about 280 pounds of sugar per ton. When we are asking a little Government aid to further an industry which is an essential industry, a minority industry, we should not be confronted with opposition to its expansion. The Senator from Louisiana and others know that we have met constant opposition to the expansion of this industry. The opposition has been open.

Sugar is the only product which receives a Government benefit which more than pays its way. Some $47,000,000 is paid out in benefit payments; and the Government, after it has collected its excise taxes, has $20,000,000 left in the Treasury. In other words, the sugar industry, of all industries, is the only one which pays its own benefit payments.

Mr. President, I am not opposing the purpose of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER]. I think we should all get together; get behind a bill to take care of the injustices to the industry and expedite it. I am very reluctant to have the sugar matter taken up piecemeal.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I have listened with much interest to the discussion which has taken place upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER]. I heartily agree with the sentiment expressed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] that the sugar industry in America is entitled to every consideration which can be extended to it. It is certainly vital to the welfare of our own people to be able to have a domestic source of sugar which is dependable and reliable. No portion of agriculture is entitled to more consideration at the hands of the Government than that portion devoted to the production of sugar.

Relative to the particular amendment, as I understand the facts—and I have conferred with representatives of the Department of Agriculture for corroboration of the technical aspects of the question—the amendment is a very much more harmless proposal than some of our friends fear.

The existing law provides that if a producer of sugarcane or beets plants and proposes to harvest more than the quota which is allowed to him, he thereby cuts himself off from the privilege of enjoying benefit payments for the production in which he is engaged. Suppose that in the State of Florida, therefore, a sugar producer has a quota of 16,000 acres, and suppose that instead of confining his acreage to 16,000 acres he plants and proposes to harvest 19,000 acres, or 3,000 acres in excess of the quota allowed to him. He would not be able, by planting the excess, cultivating it, and harvesting it, to obtain any benefit payments whatever, even on his quota of 16,000 acres.

This amendment proposes to make it possible for the grower in the case I put to obtain benefit payments upon his quota acreage of 16,000 acres, by allowing the Government to impose a penalty upon him for his excess acreage. The amount of the penalty is graduated in the amendment itself. Suppose that the producer were entitled to $400,000 in benefit payments upon his 16,000 acres. He would not receive the $400,000 which he would have received if he had had only 16,000 acres. He would receive a lesser sum than the $400,000, the amount to be determined by the principle laid down in the amendment. In other words, the penalty for the excess would be subtracted from the payments he would have received for his quota acreage.

It may be asked, "How does the producer come out? Would he better have conformed to his quota, or would he profit by having an acreage in excess of his quota?" In the words of the Department itself, he would have less money in benefit payments with the Ellender amendment in effect than he would have had in benefit payments had he produced only his quota acreage. The only benefit he receives is that he is not cut off entirely from receiving any benefit payments merely because his acreage happens to exceed his quota. If he has some reasonable justification for having planted, harvested, and made sugar out of the excess acreage planted, he ought not to be penalized.

So it seems to me it is only a question of determining whether or not in a proper case, when a man has a proper excuse, he shall be permitted to obtain a part of the benefit payments which he would have obtained had he confined himself to his quota acreage; but remember, Senators, that he will not receive for the excess acreage—the 19,000 acres in the case I put—as much money in benefit payments under the Ellender amendment as he would have received if he had planted only the 16,000 acres, or his quota acreage.

Why should anyone complain about that? In my State of Florida, for example, many of the sugarcane growers planted a larger acreage than might have been their quota acreage. They were therefore in a class which would probably not have received benefit payments. However, nature intervened, and a cold spell diminished their production. For the current year their producing acreage will actually be smaller than the quota acreage, so they have a perfect justification for favoring the Ellender amendment. Yet, literally and technically following the existing law, they would not be able to obtain any benefit payments at all, in spite of the fact that their harvested acreage is not in excess of their quota acreage.

What benefit, then, is to be derived from the Ellender amendment? Why favor it? I have stated one reason why we favor it. It is to make it possible for the grower who has an excess acreage not to lose all his benefit payments, as the law now contemplates, but to receive what he would have received had he conformed to his quota less the penalties which the Ellender amendment imposes.

A second advantage which he might obtain is his ability to market the production which might come from the excess acreage. But his marketing quota is not enlarged by the Ellender amendment. He has no marketing quota under the Ellender amendment that he does not have under other authority, so under the Ellender amendment he cannot possibly gain a dime by the sale of the sugar which he might produce from his excess acreage over his quota acreage.

Why should anybody say that the Ellender amendment is not a desirable or fair amendment? How can anyone else be hurt by it? Our friends who grow sugar beets do not care how much cane we grow in Florida or Louisiana. They are not affected. They do not come in competition with it unless the cane sugar actually goes into the market; and we are not proposing by the Ellender amendment to put any cane sugar in the market, because the amount of sugar we can put in the market is limited by a marketing quota, and not by our growing quota. Therefore our sugar-beet friends are not affected by the benefit payments we received; and we are not receiving as much as we would have received if we had conformed to the quota we had. So they cannot complain, as taxpayers or consumers, that we are receiving more money than we should have received from benefit payments. They cannot complain of competition, because the Ellender amendment does not propose to enlarge our marketing quota at all. I, therefore, cannot quite follow the argument of our friends that somehow or other the beet industry is being adversely affected by the Ellender proposal.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think the Senator misunderstands the position taken by those of us who come from the sugar-beet area. We are not complaining particularly about relief being granted Louisiana planters. We are more alarmed by handling the matter piecemeal. The planters in Louisiana and Florida, as well as farmers who grow sugar beets, will all suffer. Our contention is not that Louisiana should not receive relief. I should be very glad to see Louisiana receive relief.

Mr. PEPPER. Florida is similarly affected.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes; but if the action is taken in this manner, we shall all suffer—Florida, Louisiana, and the sugar-beet areas as well.

We are pleading for the handling of this matter not upon the floor, where it obviously cannot be handled, but in committee. We are asking that the Department of Agriculture cooperate with us in handling the matter at the earliest possible date.

Let me say to the Senator that I am very fearful that the conditions presented to us point directly to the complete suspension of the Sugar Act, or rather, I should say, point to an intention on the part of the Department to allow the Sugar Act to fail completely. That is what I am fearful of.

Therefore I feel that we should undertake to handle this matter as we have handled it in the past, working together, because we certainly have legislation which has been beneficial to the producers of sugarcane and of sugar beets. It has been beneficial to farmers throughout the United States, and it has been altogether satisfactory to the consumer. So let not the Senator feel that we are criticizing the cane areas. Not at all. We want to cooperate with the cane areas, and we are asking the representatives of the cane areas to help us, and not to take benefits for themselves and allow us to take all the losses.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, of course, the Senator knows that this amendment applies only to a peculiar situation; but it applies similarly to those who come within the class.

This amendment does not propose a new theory about sugar legislation. It does not purport to be a revision of our existing law on the subject. It simply deals with a particular situation which is a present hardship upon certain areas of the country, and it proposes to deal with it in a certain way. Our friends in the beet industry should not complain when we ask for help for ourselves, unless they as citizens have some reason to object, or unless they as beet-sugar producers have some reason to object.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida further yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. PEPPER. Just a minute. So I should appreciate it if the able Senator from Wyoming would particularize any reason why he, as a citizen or as a representative of a beet-producing State, should object to the Ellender amendment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the answer, I think, is quite simple. I have already indicated it.

I hold in my hand the bill introduced by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], who is the author of this amendment—a bill which he introduced in the spring of last year. This is Senate Bill 69, relating to the apportionment of shares of the sugar crop for 1939 and 1940.

As the Senator from Louisiana will acknowledge, that bill, introduced by him, was sent to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry—not to the Committee on Finance, which has handled all the sugar legislation. It was reported out of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry before the Department of Agriculture had made any comment at all upon the bill; and it was here upon the floor, upon the Calendar of the Senate, before any of us representing the beet-growing States had any knowledge of the fact that the bill had been introduced and had come out of the committee. It was a complete surprise to us. Then, as now, we took the position that the bill was dealing with only a fraction of a great and complicated problem; and that it was necessary, in justice to all who are interested in the sugar industry and to all who are dependent upon the sugar industry, that there should be other amendments in addition to those requested by the Senator from Louisiana.

We did not fight his bill. We did not fight his amendment. We asked only that while he was getting the benefits he desired for the cane areas we should get protection also. Therefore we tried to legislate upon the floor of the Senate and we added amendments, and the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Florida were good enough to cooperate with us in securing these additional amendments.

The bill was passed by the Senate on March 23, 1939. It went over to the House of Representatives, and since that moment it has been reposing in a pigeonhole in the Committee on Agriculture.

So I say to the Senator from Florida and to the Senator from Louisiana that what we fear is the failure of all legislation. The Senator has alluded to the announcement made by the Department of Agriculture just the other day, on March 9, which reads, in part, as follows:

> The Sugar Division announced today that the sugar beet proportionate share—acreage allotment—for any farm for the 1940 crop will be the acreage of sugar beets planted on the farm for the production of sugar. This supersedes previous announcements regarding proportionate shares which were necessary because of early sugar-beet plantings in certain areas.
> In view of unfavorable climatic conditions, such as floods in some areas and drought conditions in others, as well as other factors which affect adversely the sugar-beet crop, it is no longer expected that the 1940 crop will produce an amount of sugar which, when added to current supplies, will be more than is required to meet the continental beet area's quota and carry-over requirements.

Reading that announcement—I have not read it all—conveys to my mind only one thought, and that is that the Sugar Division of the Department of Agriculture in giving out that statement, was anticipating the complete failure of sugar legislation. That is what we are fearful of; and we are fearful that the planters of Louisiana and the planters of Florida will go down with the farmers who raise sugar beets, all together, unless we here stand together now upon the floor of the Senate and defend this industry in which we are all equally interested.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, it seems that the argument of my able friend from Wyoming comes down to this: "Because we want to put some pressure on the Department of Agriculture to do something that we would like to see done in the future, we think perhaps we had better not agree to this amendment, in spite of the fact that we have no objection to the merit of this particular amendment." It comes down to this: Just because we cannot get all the amendments we would like to have upon a full consideration of this subject, we are not going to let you have an amendment that perhaps we admit is a fair and meritorious amendment.

I rather think that argument is not altogether becoming to the able Senator from Wyoming. I mean by that that the argument does not deal quite fairly with this individual amendment. We have not dealt conclusively and comprehensively with the whole farm problem here, yet we are considering a bill on agriculture.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Inasmuch as the Senator alludes to the manner or motive or circumstance under which the Senator from Wyoming presents his argument, and expresses the opinion that it is not becoming to the Senator, I will say that we are contending for the rule by which the Senate is governed. This legislation upon an appropriation bill—all legislation upon an appropriation bill—is condemned by the rules of the Senate. Will the Senator say that it is unbecoming of a Member of this body to ask that the rules be upheld?

What was the purpose of the rule? The purpose of the rule was to prevent inadequate, improper, and sometimes impossible legislation upon the floor of the Senate. There is only one way to legislate effectively, and that is by taking problems into the committees which are equipped to pass upon them.

Mr. President, I feel that the Senator from Wyoming is acting in an altogether becoming manner in attempting to sustain the rules of the Senate.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the deftness of the able Senator from Wyoming was never better illustrated than by the rapidity with which he has changed his position. Instead of opposing the Ellender amendment because he was speaking in defense of the great sugar industry of this country, about which just a few moments ago he so eloquently spoke to his colleagues, he now opposes the Ellender amendment because he is a purist for parliamentary procedure.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator does not think I have abandoned the other argument; does he?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. PEPPER. I do. I think, therefore, that since the Senator has rather widely diffused the opposition that he has to this amendment, perhaps it is not as thick in any particular place as it might have been were it more minutely concentrated.

The Senator, of course, understood by my remarks that what I meant to say was that I did not think it was fair to say to the Senator from Louisiana and to those of us who have his point of view, "You cannot have your amendment adopted because we cannot at the same time have adopted all amendments on the subject which should be adopted."

Relative to whether or not the Senator from Louisiana is about to violate the rules of the Senate, let me say that the Senator from Louisiana has proceeded literally and strictly in accordance with the rules of this body. He gave notice that his amendment would be subject to a point of order. Did he not move a suspension of the rules, and that is in accordance with the rules—to give notice and move a suspension—and if he is awarded the suspension he seeks, it will take a two-thirds vote of the Senate. But I contend that the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], which was adopted to the agricultural bill in identically the same way that the Senator from Louisiana proposes to have his amendment adopted, was adopted just as much in accordance with the rules of the Senate, just as much in pursuance of legitimate parliamentary procedure, as any other amendment which has been adopted to this bill.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. PEPPER. I do.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I inquire of the Senator from Florida if he did not, on an occasion last week, very ably and eloquently argue that because we were not covering the whole question of purity in politics we should not enact the Hatch bill, just because the Senate was not willing to take up certain other additional questions in reference to the Hatch bill? And is not that in analogy with the situation today?

Mr. PEPPER. No; I will say to the able Senator from Washington that I do not think he has suggested an analogy. What the Senator from Florida complained about in regard to the Hatch bill was that it affirmatively contained an erroneous principle, and that that erroneous principle should not be enacted into law; and I opposed the adoption of that principle. In this case I say that the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana proposes a correct principle. It proposes to relieve unfairness and hardship, and I think it is a desirable policy for Congress to adopt. Therefore I favor it.

Mr. President, the whole sugar question is not without difficulty. A great many persons think the Sugar Act is one of the best pieces of legislation this administration has proposed; and in many respects that is true. Unfortunately, it does have a characteristic which I think is not altogether desirable in American policy. That is, it tends to limit to a certain number of persons and to a certain acreage the production of a vital necessity to the people of the United States.

My State of Florida, for example, happens by nature, by climate, to be very well fitted for the production of sugarcane. A great deal of benefit has come to the sugarcane industry from experiments which have been carried on in that State, which have been made possible by Federal and State appropriations; but we have literally hundreds of thousands of acres which are ideally fitted in soil type and in climatic conditions for the production of sugarcane out of which sugar will be produced. Yet by virtue of this law which provides a quota system, and by virtue of the principle of the historical base, which is a necessary incident of the quota system, we are permitted to grow only a small percentage of the sugar which is consumed in the State of Florida alone. Many times, therefore, the producers of sugar in Florida have sought an opportunity to grow sugar even without benefit payments; and we have repeatedly contended here that it might perhaps be a desirable policy not to burden the consumer excessively with a tax which goes to the support of this industry, and remove another class of restraints for a little while, and let something like natural equilibrium come about in sugar production in this country.

There is, however, a very peculiar situation which exists. The beet industry, which exists in many of the States of the Union, is not favored in a good many respects as the sugarcane area is in Florida. They have to have a subsidy to live, and we do not. Therefore, because they have to have a subsidy to live, we have to have a quota in order to be able to produce sugar; but we from Louisiana and Florida are four Senators, and the Senate has already observed today the number and the ability of the Senators who come from the beet area.

There are at least 10 or 12 States, if I am not in error, which are interested directly in beet-sugar production, and just two States largely interested in sugarcane production. When a bill is to be written it is not the Senators from Louisiana or the Senators from Florida who are generally called into consultation and conference; it is a group of our friends from the beet States. They get together and generally decide and determine what kind of a bill we should have. About all we can do is just come along, or butt our heads up against a legislative wall. The same condition exists in the House of Representatives. Florida has 5 Representatives in the House, and the beet area has very many more than that. Our voice is scarcely heard, in the first place, and never heeded, in the second place. So a State which is capable of producing several hundred thousand tons of sugar is permitted to produce only about 60,000 tons a year. The tragedy of it is that I can see no opportunity for anyone else in Florida in the future, who is not already engaged in the production of sugar, to get into that industry. In other words, it amounts in substance to a certificate of public convenience and necessity to produce sugar to those who are already engaged in that enterprise. That is the vice of the quota system. Many times it operates to give a monopoly to one corporation or to a small group of individuals, to the absolute exclusion of other citizens who wish to engage in the enterprise of growing sugarcane. I do not know any way whereby they can get a larger opportunity to grow sugar under such a law as that which is now on the statute books.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the list of payments made in Florida discloses that the United States Sugar Corporation draws from the Federal Treasury $430,000 a year, which is proof that what the Senator has said is true, that under the act as it is now operating, monopolistic production of sugar is promoted.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the situation to which the Senator has just referred has been one which has caused no little embarrassment to me, representing the State of Florida, as I do. The benefit payment of $430,000 to the United States Sugar Corporation is, I believe—and the Senator from Virginia will correct me if I am in error—the highest amount received by any domestic sugar producer.

Mr. President, I went before the Committee on Finance of the Senate when the last sugar bill was being considered, as Senators on the floor now will attest, and I stated:

> I do not favor monopoly in my State any more than I favor monopoly in any other Senator's State, and I want provision made, therefore, in this bill for new producers to get into the industry of sugarcane production.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. The tenor of the remarks of the Senator from Florida makes our position on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana even more emphatic. It is perfectly evident that the Senator from Florida is interested only in general sugar legislation to the extent that it can give Florida unlimited production, and that is the difficulty with which we from the beet areas have always been confronted. We have found, and the Senator from Idaho found when he was a Member of the House of Representatives, that we never did receive cooperation from the Representatives of Louisiana and Florida, and that there is only one thing in which they have been interested, so far as general legislation regarding sugar is concerned, and that is unlimited production, by which they felt they could develop and monopolize the sugar market of the country. That is why we sometimes wonder whether we will get cooperation later, in having general sugar legislation enacted, from the Senators from Florida and the Senators from Louisiana. Consequently we are very fearful of letting an amendment which has for its objective a temporary and an immediate benefit to the State of Louisiana, and perhaps to the State of Florida, being enacted under suspension of the rules in the manner proposed.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I thank the able Senator from Idaho. There are two questions involved in the discussion, of course. The first one is the question of general sugar legislation. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that I know that there are limitations to the length of time in which a natural situation can be upset, in other words, an unnatural situation be preserved. In the long run, the areas which are adapted by nature to the production of a given commodity are going to come to be the producers of that commodity. In the long run, under the handicaps of competition, those which are best favored by natural conditions will longest survive. So I know that the Senator from Idaho and the other proponents of sugar legislation do not mean, as was intimated in the argument of the Senator from Idaho, that they have to resort to sugar legislation in order to enable the beet area to keep abreast of the cane area, in competition in sugar production, because the cane area has a natural advantage.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. If the Senator will yield further, of course, as long as we continue to give 40 percent of our entire domestic market to Cuba—and that is what is done—this difficulty will exist. If we could obtain the entire domestic market for the cane and the beet area, then I think all the problem would be solved.

Mr. PEPPER. I do not favor, and I shall not at any time favor, legislation which discriminates against an area which is fitted by nature and by nature's law for the production of sugarcane. Obviously no Senator, it would seem to me, could insist upon that legislative attitude.

When general legislation shall be proposed later I shall insist that some consideration be given, in the allotment of quotas, to ability to produce sugarcane, to fitness to produce it, and therefore fitness to produce sugar. I do not mean that I would expect the beet industry to diminish abruptly, or perhaps at any time, whatever production it now has. It does not mean that I think that Florida or Louisiana or any other State should have a monopoly of the sugar market, but I do think that sugar legislation cannot rest, so far as the quota is concerned, upon the historical basis alone, because that ignores the essential principle of fitness by nature to produce the commodity.

Florida just happened to have gotten into sugar production later than certain other areas, but we are not willing to close the doors forever on Florida's expansion because someone else happened to get a little ahead of us in the production of sugar. That is not in accordance with the essential freedom of American institutions. Some procedure must be worked out which will allow new producers to come into the field. Here I am, a Senator from Florida, going before a Senate committee asking that some way be worked out whereby other people in Florida can produce and sell sugar, and I cannot get that done, and therefore two corporations essentially produce practically all the sugar that is produced in the State of Florida. We do not want to preserve that condition. We want to give the other fellows at least a reasonable chance to come in—not all at one time, but gradually, and in a way that is fair to all.

So I am in favor of proper sugar legislation, and I will help as best I can to secure the passage of a fair sugar bill, but I do expect that any future sugar legislation shall give due consideration to the ability of Florida to produce sugarcane in fair proportion to other areas which can produce sugar economically.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. In other words, the Senator from Florida takes the same attitude toward legislation which he criticizes most of us who represent beet-growing States for taking against both Louisiana and Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. I am afraid I do not get the suggestion the Senator seeks to make. I shall be glad if he will repeat it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. If the Senator will read the record of his speech, I think he will find it.

Mr. PEPPER. I shall not only read the record of it but, if I find any error, I shall apologize to the Senator from Washington, or if I have been guilty of any inconsistency in logic, I shall attempt to make a proper correction.

We were engaged in a discussion of general sugar legislation, and I was expressing some views which I happened personally to entertain about general sugar legislation, which led me to a brief criticism of the existing law; to point out briefly the defects in the existing law, and to state the conclusion that I would support sugar legislation in Congress if those defects were given consideration when new legislation was proposed. I confess I see nothing in these remarks to justify my friend's suggestion.

The second aspect is whether or not this particular amendment should be proposed because of ideas we may have or theories we may entertain about the enactment of general sugar legislation. I do not think it is quite fair to the Senator from Louisiana to say that we are not going to let a good amendment be adopted, one which does not affect us, because we are going to bring some pressure on the Louisiana Senators to help us pass a sugar bill later on in the session.

The Senator from Louisiana rose a while ago and stated he would be in favor of sugar legislation. He has shown no disposition to oppose such a bill. His able colleague was here a moment ago, and I know he has shown no disposition of that character. My colleague has no disposition of that kind. We are not trying to hold any club over the head of anyone. We are certainly not threatening anyone with anything. We are merely asking that this amendment be considered on its merits, and if it is agreed to on its merits, no detriment can ensue from its passage to any Senator on this floor. So, with the statements from the Senator from Louisiana and myself—which may be taken as expressive of the sentiments of our colleagues, I believe—that we are not trying to oppose sugar legislation, I trust the pending amendment will be permitted to be considered on its merits.

GOVERNMENT FINANCING

Mr. BYRD obtained the floor.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I rise to suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield for that purpose?

Mr. BYRD. If the Senator will withhold that, I desire to present something for printing in the RECORD.

Mr. AUSTIN. Very well. There are several Senators who are absent who would like to hear the Senator from Virginia, perhaps on another subject than the one he is about to discuss.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, in view of the suggestions which have been made that the working balance shown in the Treasury report be used in part for the payment of increased appropriations, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the body of the RECORD as a part of my remarks a letter received from the Secretary of the Treasury, and I ask that the clerk read the letter to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, March 20, 1940.

Hon. HARRY F. BYRD,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The following information is furnished you in compliance with your telephone request of this morning.

In the 1941 Budget submitted to the Congress in January of this year it is estimated that the Treasury's working balance on June 30, 1940, will be about $1,011,000,000, a reduction of $1,291,000,000 during the current fiscal year. The Treasury does not segregate its working balances in the general fund to show its obligation on any particular class of accounts, but considers its total working balance as available to meet the demands made on any of these accounts as well as to meet general and trust-fund expenditures of the Government.

In view of the large amount of demand obligations now outstanding which the Treasury may be called upon to meet, such as the checking accounts and deposits of governmental corporations, credit agencies, etc., in the aggregate amount of over $400,000,000; the unemployment trust fund, amounting to $1,640,000,000; special obligations issued for account of the Postal Savings System and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, amounting to $142,000,000; and outstanding United States savings bonds with a redemption value of $2,700,000,000, it is felt that the estimated working balance of the Treasury on June 30, 1940, as contemplated by the President's Budget, will be about as low as it can be permitted to go.

Sincerely yours,

H. MORGENTHAU, Jr.,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am authorized by the Honorable D. W. Bell, Under Secretary of the Treasury, to say that there is included in the estimated $1,011,000,000 working balance of the Treasury as of June 30, 1940, the item of approximately $400,000,000 of deposits from the various Government corporations. In this instance the Federal Treasury is merely acting as a depository for the balances to the credit of these various corporations, the funds for which were not necessarily derived from appropriations. Therefore I am advised by Mr. Bell that the actual working balance, after deducting the deposits of the Government corporations, will be approximately $600,000,000 as of June 30, 1940. This figure, I may say, Mr. President, is confirmed by the General Accounting Office.

I call especial attention to the admonition given in the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury that the estimated working balance in the Treasury on June 30, 1940, as contemplated by the President's Budget, will be about as low as it can be permitted to go. It is therefore evident, by reason of the action of the President in reducing the working balance by $1,291,000,000 as set forth in the above letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, that it would not be prudent financing to reduce still further this working balance.

It is, of course, obvious that the purpose in reducing this working balance, as well as the recovery of $700,000,000 from the Government corporations, is to avoid by postponement at this time action by Congress to increase the existing $45,000,000,000 legal debt limit, which, without the two devices above-mentioned, would be necessary in order to pay the current appropriations for the year beginning July 1, 1940.

The letter of the Secretary of the Treasury sustains my contention that the working balance cannot be further reduced to pay for new appropriations outside the Budget.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8202) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY obtained the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Colorado for that purpose?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	La Follette	Reynolds
Ashurst	Ellender	Lee	Russell
Austin	Frazier	Lodge	Schwartz
Bailey	George	Lucas	Schwellenbach
Bankhead	Gerry	Lundeen	Sheppard
Barkley	Gibson	McCarran	Shipstead
Bilbo	Gillette	McKellar	Slattery
Bone	Green	McNary	Smathers
Bridges	Guffey	Maloney	Stewart
Brown	Gurney	Mead	Thomas, Idaho
Bulow	Hale	Miller	Thomas, Okla.
Byrd	Harrison	Minton	Thomas, Utah
Byrnes	Hatch	Murray	Tobey
Capper	Hayden	Neely	Townsend
Caraway	Herring	Norris	Tydings
Chandler	Hill	Nye	Vandenberg
Chavez	Holman	O'Mahoney	Van Nuys
Clark, Idaho	Holt	Overton	Wagner
Clark, Mo.	Hughes	Pepper	Walsh
Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman	Wheeler
Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Radcliffe	White
Donahey	King	Reed	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators have responded to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I am very happy that the very eloquent and able Senator from Florida undertook to speak upon this matter a few moments ago, and I wish that many more Senators had been in the Chamber while he was talking than were actually here, because I feel that they would have profited very much from what he had to say. Personally I believe that his argument lends great strength to the contention which is being made by some of us this afternoon that the rule against legislation upon an appropriation bill should not be waived for the purpose of dealing with one simple phase of a great national problem.

The Senator from Florida pointed out that he desired to have unlimited production of sugarcane in his State.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator from Florida may have said that, but he did not intend to say it. The Senator from Florida intended to say that in the determination of the principle by which quotas should be made you must take into consideration the ability of a section to produce sugarcane, and by implication I meant, of course, economically.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I understood the Senator to say that, and I drew from it the conclusion that it meant what I said. I accept the interpretation of the Senator. His desire is to have domestic areas which are capable of producing sugarcane, produce all they are able to produce. Is that correct?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but I will have to qualify that statement. I mean that in the determination of the quotas for all the country, that along with other factors which must be taken into consideration, one of the factors to be considered is the ability of each area in the country to produce sugarcane, or beet sugar, economically. Naturally the Senator from Florida did not contemplate that a particular segment of the country should have a preference over the other sections pro rata or in proportion. I merely meant that in fixing the picture giving each his quota we must not confine ourselves to historical tests alone. Along with other factors which are appropriate to be considered, we must also consider the natural ability of each area to produce sugar economically.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It was not then the intention of the Senator to urge that the quota of sugar to be allowed to the continental area should be limited to that which now exists, and that that quota should then be divided according to the standard, including the factor which the Senator mentioned? That was not the Senator's intention, was it?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I can say briefly this, that it was the idea of the Senator from Florida that a consideration of the factors to which the Senator from Florida adverted a moment ago would give the State of Florida a larger quota than it now has, even if the domestic quota were not enlarged at all. That is the first thing. But only in a certain X quantity; that is, in a fair amount.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. But it is not the desire of the Senator to restrict the over-all quota necessarily to that which it now has?

Mr. PEPPER. The second point is that the Senator from Florida believes very strongly that an undue advantage has been given to the offshore production of sugar as against the whole domestic sugar-producing area in supplying the consumption requirements of the United States.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think we are in agreement. That is what I understood the Senator to mean.

Under the situation which exists, the capacity of the State of Florida to produce, and obviously the capacity of the State of Louisiana to produce, as well as the capacity of the beet-growing areas to produce, is limited under the present system, because we have historically been dependent upon offshore areas for the supply of our sugar requirements.

Under the bill which is about to go out of existence, and its predecessor, the Jones-Costigan Act, there was a substantial reduction of the amount of sugar which comes into the United States from Cuba. All of the areas, including the area of Florida, have benefited by that change. The production in the State of Florida increased from something like 21,000 tons to something over 80,000 tons under this legislation. The State of Florida and its planters were benefited so that they were able to produce more.

The point I wish to make is that the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] has clearly indicated the necessity and the desirability of solving the domestic problem of how much sugar the domestic producer shall be permitted to produce.

The Sugar Act occupies an altogether extraordinary and unusual position. It is the only agricultural act which has worked effectively and efficiently and to the benefit of the growers of agricultural crops. But more important than that is the fact that with respect to a very large area in the United States this crop is a family farm crop. It is produced by farmers who themselves own and operate their tracts. I refer to the growers of sugar beets. There are some growers of cane who own and operate their own farms. Some of them are in Louisiana. Very few of them, if any, are in Florida. The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] very properly desires to extend an opportunity to the farmers in his State to grow sugarcane in order that they may benefit from this legislation.

With that objective I am in complete accord, and I shall be happy to cooperate with the Senator in every way to bring about some expansion of the ability of individual farmers to produce their own individual crops upon their own individual land. Unfortunately that is not now the case in Florida; and, as the Senator himself mentioned during his discussion, there are only two corporations in Florida which are producing sugarcane.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Perhaps I gave a somewhat erroneous impression. There are two sugar mills in Florida. There are a greater number of sugarcane growers. In fact, the data put into the RECORD by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] indicate that eight producers of sugarcane received subsidies of $10,000 or more in Florida.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is correct. There were eight producers in the State of Florida who received benefit payments totaling $670,644.15. Be that as it may, that fact in itself indicates exactly the problem the Senator desires to overcome, because he, like many others, recognizes the fundamental problem of the growth of farm tenancy in the United States and the expansion of corporate farming.

In Cuba, Puerto Rico, and Hawaii the producers of sugarcane are corporate producers. They are not independent enterprisers operating their own land. Certainly if there is any problem we ought to devote our attention to solving it is the problem of putting people upon their own lands to produce agricultural commodities. The importance of this question is so great that Senators ought to bear it in mind. It seems to me it has been pointed out particularly by the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], which will presently be debated and voted upon in this body. His amendment is to reduce the benefit payments, to provide a limit so that no benefit payment in excess of $5,000 may be paid to any producer. If that amendment should be passed it would reduce the benefit payments to producers of sugar in Louisiana, the 12 big corporations which produce one-half of the entire Louisiana crop. It would reduce the benefit payments to producers in Florida, who under the corporate farming plan, produce the entire crop of Florida.

I allude to this amendment to indicate——

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator did not mean to say that there are not some producers who receive benefit payments of $5,000 and less.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is quite true; but I am speaking of the general picture.

I have alluded to this amendment to emphasize the fact that in this bill we are dealing with two phases of sugar legislation and to emphasize the plea which we are making that we should not deal with this matter in a piecemeal manner. If we are to suspend the rule and adopt the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] and then adopt the amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], we shall have dealt with a portion of the problem and we shall probably have undermined and destroyed the entire sugar legislation.

The difficulty about the situation which confronts us this afternoon is that it points directly to the complete destruction of sugar legislation. In the absence of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], I pointed out that last March the Senate passed Senate bill 69, dealing with the extension of the Sugar Act, and that that bill, approved by the Senate, has been reposing in the Committee on Agriculture in the House ever since. It has not been taken out of the pigeonhole. That delay of more than a year in the consideration of a measure which was intended to extend the operation of the Sugar Act naturally arouses a fear that there may be an intention to abandon all sugar legislation and to let it go by the board. If that happens, then the sugarcane-producing areas of Louisiana and Florida will suffer, like all the other producing areas in the United States. Cane in Florida and cane in Louisiana will be on exactly the same basis as sugar beets in the West.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. How does the Senator from Wyoming associate the Ellender amendment with such a dire result? All of us desire legislation on the sugar question in some proper way. How would the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana adversely affect the situation?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I did not mean to give the implication that the amendment itself would do so. However, I am pointing out certain facts. A sugar bill was passed in the Senate last March and has not been acted upon in the House. A sugar bill was introduced in the House about a month ago, and it has not yet been submitted to the Department of Agriculture for a report. On March 9 the Sugar Division gave out a release with respect to sugar-beet plantings which has the effect of indicating to those of us who represent those areas that it is in the contemplation of the Department that there may be no legislation, and that therefore there will be no necessity for paying benefits in 1941.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Gladly.

Mr. PEPPER. The junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] is not in the Chamber at the moment, although his able colleague [Mr. OVERTON] is here, and I am sure he can attest to the fact that the initiative on this amendment did not come from the Department.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I understand that.

Mr. PEPPER. I understand that the Senator from Louisiana merely submitted the amendment to the Department and received the approval of the Department in principle. The Department said it was all right, and met a need. The Department is not trying to block sugar legislation, at least so far as this amendment is concerned.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I did not mean so to imply. I am sorry if the Senator gained that impression.

However, it seems to me to be a justifiable conclusion that unless we press forward all together in defense of the legislation which obviously has been beneficial to family farmers in the United States, we are in great danger of losing the entire legislation. So we are now confronted with the question whether or not we shall attempt to defend our interests upon the floor or whether we shall do it in the orderly way and allow the legislation to be acted upon in committee. I am hoping that the opportunity may be speedily presented—and I think it will be unless we pass this amendment—for the Department of Agriculture, the representatives of the domestic producing areas, and the representatives of our Territorial possessions to get together and reach an agreement once again, as they have already done twice, for legislation which will protect all. This is one case in which it seems to me it is altogether necessary for all the producing areas in the continental United States to stand together. The best way to do that, Mr. President, is to stand by the rule of procedure in the Senate which forbids the adding of legislation to an appropriation bill.

Mr. President, there was some testimony on this bill before the Appropriations Committee which is of considerable interest in connection with the whole problem of sugar. I ask unanimous consent that excerpts from the testimony of Dr. Joshua Bernhardt, the head of the Sugar Division of the Department of Agriculture, before the Appropriations Committee may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the excerpts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LIMITATION IN ACT ON SUGAR PRODUCED IN CONTINENTAL UNITED STATES WITH BENEFIT PAYMENTS

Dr. BERNHARDT. The applications of a number of individuals for planting or production with payments have had to be denied under the act. The act provides that payment shall be made to producers who comply with the proportionate shares; and the proportionate share is based on the quota for the area which is established under the act, plus an allowance for normal carry-over or stock. Consequently, there is a definite limitation in the act on the quantity of sugar which may be produced in continental United States with benefit of payments. Strictly speaking, there is no limitation on the right of anyone to produce sugar anywhere under the act. Any producer may produce sugar beets or sugarcane in any amount if he is contented with the payments made to him by the processor for his sugarcane or beets. However, if he desires the payments and benefits contemplated by the act, he is obligated to comply with the conditions of the act, one of which is an acreage allotment.

EFFECT OF ACT ON SUGAR IMPORTED INTO THE UNITED STATES

Senator O'MAHONEY. I think it ought to be added, Doctor, that the act has had an effect upon the amount of sugar imported into the United States. Will you please state for the record what the Cuban quota now is, and what Cuba formerly sent into the United States?

Dr. BERNHARDT. In the late 1920's Cuba supplied the United States market with approximately half of the total consumption.

Senator O'MAHONEY. And that amounted to how much?

Dr. BERNHARDT. That averaged around three and one-half million tons of sugar per year. Under the act the percentage is approximately 29 percent. It has almost been cut in half, as compared with the period of the late 1920's. The quota for this year, which has just been revised, is 1,863,217 tons. That compares with a high of 3,944,000 tons of Cuban sugar imported in 1926, and a low of 3,125,000 tons in that period.

Senator O'MAHONEY. What are the comparative figures with respect to the Philippines?

Dr. BERNHARDT. Philippine importations are regulated by the terms of the Philippine Independence Act, which provides that the equivalent of approximately 980 short tons, raw value, may be admitted to the United States in 1 year, duty free.

Senator O'MAHONEY. Yes; but what was the situation prior to that?

Dr. BERNHARDT. In 1933 the record importations of Philippine sugars took place, and that year 1,248,500 tons came in.

EFFECT OF EXCESSIVE IMPORTATIONS FROM THE PHILIPPINES AND CUBA

Senator O'MAHONEY. In other words, excessive importations of sugar from the Philippines and from Cuba narrowed the market for domestic producers of sugar beets and sugarcane.

Dr. BERNHARDT. That is correct.

Senator O'MAHONEY. The Sugar Act had the effect of reducing the amount of sugar that comes into the United States from these offshore areas, thereby granting the continental producers a larger opportunity to raise sugar profitably.

Dr. BERNHARDT. That is correct.

Senator O'MAHONEY. But that profit could be achieved only by the imposition of the processing tax, which had the effect, by and large, of taking from the processors the excess profits which they were making by reason of the reduction of offshore quotas, and distributing that in benefit payments to the domestic farmers.

Dr. BERNHARDT. That is correct.

NO RESTRICTION ON AMOUNT OF SUGAR PRODUCED WITHOUT BENEFIT PAYMENT

Senator RUSSELL. Dr. Bernhardt, I was interested to hear you say that there was no restriction whatever on the amount of sugar anybody could produce in this country.

Dr. BERNARDT. That is correct.

Senator RUSSELL. But there is a limit on those who can receive the benefit payments.

Dr. BERNHARDT. That is correct.

Senator RUSSELL. Is there no penalty on the marketing of such sugar?

Dr. BERNHARDT. When the grower produces sugarcane or sugar beets, there is no penalty on his marketing them to a processor.

LIMITATION ON PROCESSOR

Senator RUSSELL. How about the processor?

Dr. BERNHARDT. The processor, in turn, however, is limited in some years to a marketing allotment, whenever the Secretary finds that the amount which may be marketed in that year, or the available supply, is in excess of the quota.

Senator RUSSELL. It seems to me that would be a very effective limitation on the amount that could be produced in America, if a market could not be found for it.

Dr. BERNHARDT. In that event the total quota is broken up, after public hearing, into allotments to the various processors; in that case a situation might arise in which a processor might have to carry over sugar from one year to another.

Let us say that a processor has an allotment of 50,000 tons of sugar that he may market. His allotment may be 35,000 tons in a particular calendar year. Consequently he is obligated to carry over to the next year 15,000 tons of sugar without marketing it in the calendar year in which it was produced.

QUESTION AS TO GUARANTEEING MARKET

Senator RUSSELL. Do you guarantee a market for all the cooperators who plant only their quota?

Dr. BERNHARDT. You mean the growers of sugar beets and sugarcane?

Senator RUSSELL. The producers.

Dr. BERNHARDT. The growers of sugar beets or sugarcane in the continental United States have never had any difficulty marketing all the sugarcane or sugar beets they produced.

Senator RUSSELL. What is the reason, then, for the complaints? As I stated a moment ago, I am not familiar with the act. I do not know that I have ever read it. I happened to be out of the country when it was passed by the Congress. I receive many letters from those busily engaged in propaganda—I do not know how many there are, but they are very diligent. I receive quite a few letters from my State complaining about the fact that Florida is treated unjustly in the sugar matter, and that producers may not produce as much sugar down there as they would like. From what you state they produce all they please, but they would not receive the benefit payment of 60 cents a hundred pounds.

SITUATION IN FLORIDA

Dr. BERNHARDT. The Florida situation is somewhat as follows: Under this program, production has increased from approximately 21,000 tons of sugar prior to the program, up to 85,000 tons in the year preceding this year, the last finished crop.

Senator O'MAHONEY. In Florida?

Dr. BERNHARDT. In Florida. That is, there has been approximately a fourfold increase in their production. However, there are many people who would like to produce sugarcane. It appears to be profitable under this program, and there is much eagerness to produce. Whether or not those growers are actually equipped to produce sugarcane, and to what degree, is really very hard to say. There are some vegetable growers in Florida who have had difficulties with vegetables due to frost and other conditions.

Senator RUSSELL. They must be exceedingly well organized.

Dr. BERNHARDT. There are only two sugar companies in Florida. One of them——

Senator RUSSELL. They must be pretty well organized to be able to get around as much as they do. As a rule, an unorganized group of farmers could not get very far.

Dr. BERNHARDT. There is one large corporation which operates there, and is desirous of expanding its production.

Senator O'MAHONEY. When you speak of a corporation operating in Florida, you mean operating in the growing of the cane, do you not?

Dr. BERNHARDT. And the manufacture of the sugar. It is an integrated enterprise, a large plantation enterprise. There are some 15 independent farmers who sell cane to that company.

SITUATION IN LOUISIANA

Senator O'MAHONEY. Now, what is the condition with respect to the farmers in Louisiana?

Dr. BERNHARDT. In the case of Louisiana, there has been an increase in production——

Senator O'MAHONEY (interposing). No; I am talking about the number of farmers.

Dr. BERNHARDT. In Louisiana there are approximately 12,000 individual producers who are applicants for payments under the act. Approximately 40 of them are the largest plantation companies producing possibly half of the crop, but the other 11,960 growers range from 5-acre people to several hundred acres.

COMPARISON OF CORPORATE AND INDIVIDUAL FARMING IN BEET-SUGAR INDUSTRY

Senator O'MAHONEY. With respect to beet sugar, what is the character of that as between corporate farming and individual farming?

Dr. BERNHARDT. There are relatively few corporation enterprises in the mainland sugar-beet industry. Practically all the 70,000 growers who applied for payment in the last program were individual holdings, averaging possibly 11 or 12 acres of sugar beets.

Senator O'MAHONEY. In other words, as far as the beet-sugar industry is concerned from the agricultural point of view, it is a family-farm activity?

Dr. BERNHARDT. Yes, sir; in the main.

Senator O'MAHONEY. By far the great majority of producers and by far the greatest amount of production is from the family-size farm?

Dr. BERNHARDT. That is true, Senator. We publish each year, as you know, the list of payments of $10,000 or over.

Senator HAYDEN. Do I understand that the reason why they are having difficulty in Florida is that the total continental United States quota must be divided by States, based upon previous production, and while there has been expansion in the beet-sugar area and in Louisiana to the extent that there has been a greater expansion there than anywhere else, based upon the prior history of growing sugar, they are caught by a State quota? Is that where the difficulty lies?

Dr. BERNHARDT. No, Senator. The real problem in Florida is that there is a very profitable enterprise there and other people want to go into that field.

Senator O'MAHONEY. This program, as Dr. Bernhardt has testified, has been so beneficial that it has resulted in a fourfold increase of the amount of sugarcane grown in Florida. Now there are others who would like to get in, too.

Senator HAYDEN. Well, why can't they?

Dr. BERNHARDT. The reason is that at the present time under the Sugar Act of 1937, every producing area has a quota.

Senator HAYDEN. It comes back to the fact that the Florida area had a quota.

Dr. BERNHARDT. That is right, except that it is not divided by States. There are no State quotas; the mainland sugarcane area has a quota in toto embracing both Florida and Louisiana. The State does not get a State quota as such, but the individual growers get an allotment of acreage.

Senator HAYDEN. Then a man that hadn't been growing sugar at all would have no quota and would have no history?

PROVISION FOR NEW PRODUCERS

Dr. BERNHARDT. We have made some provision under the act for new producers. The act provides specifically that in allotting acreage, i. e., in establishing "proportionate shares," as the acreage allotments are termed in the Sugar Act, the Secretary shall give consideration to new and small producers.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I shall not occupy the time of the Senate further, except to express my belief that the wise course in this case is not to suspend the rule against legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] to suspend the rule.

Mr. RUSSELL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Caraway	Frazier	Hayden
Austin	Chandler	Gerry	Hill
Bankhead	Chavez	Gibson	Holman
Barkley	Clark, Idaho	Green	Hughes
Bilbo	Connally	Guffey	Johnson, Calif.
Brown	Danaher	Gurney	Johnson, Colo.
Bulow	Donahey	Hale	King
Byrd	Downey	Harrison	La Follette
Byrnes	Ellender	Hatch	Lee

Lodge	Norris	Schwellenbach	Tydings
McCarran	O'Mahoney	Sheppard	Vandenberg
McKellar	Overton	Shipstead	Van Nuys
McNary	Pepper	Slattery	Wagner
Mead	Pittman	Stewart	Walsh
Miller	Reed	Thomas, Idaho	White
Minton	Russell	Thomas, Utah	Wiley
Murray	Schwartz	Tobey

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER].

Mr. ELLENDER. I ask for a yea-and-nay vote on my motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont will state it.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to know in what form the question is presented.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is presented on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana to suspend clause 4 of rule XVI. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. McNARY. The senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CHANDLER. I have a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS]. I do not know how that Senator would vote, if present, so I withhold my vote.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. If present, the Senator from New Jersey would vote "nay." I am not informed how the Senator from South Carolina would vote.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. The Senator from Ohio would vote "nay," if present. I am not advised how the Senator from Montana would vote.

Mr. McKELLAR (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], who seems not to be present. I transfer my pair with him to the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. PEPPER. My colleague the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS] is in Florida. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS]. I am not advised how either Senator would vote, if present. I vote "nay."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is absent from the Senate because of illness in his family.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senators from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY and Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senators from Missouri [Mr. CLARK and Mr. TRUMAN], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are detained on business in Government departments.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is unavoidably detained.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 38, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this question the yeas are 28, the nays are 38. Two-thirds of those present having failed to vote in the affirmative, the motion is lost.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 82, line 14, before the period, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Provided further, That no part of the amount herein appropriated shall be available for making total conditional payments in excess of $5,000 to any one person, firm, partnership, or corporation in connection with the 1940 sugar program.

Mr. BYRD obtained the floor.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BYRD. I do.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have discussed this amendment with a number of Senators who are interested and who had approached me to ascertain whether or not, as the representative of the committee reporting the bill, I would make a point of order against the amendment.

My first intention was to make the point of order against the amendment, because I do not think it has any business in this bill. It is, in effect, repealing the Sugar Act. After discussion with the Parliamentarian of the Senate, however, and after examining the precedents in such cases, I am convinced that a point of order could not properly lie against the amendment. I therefore shall not urge the point of order.

I make this statement in order that any other Senator who may desire to make the point of order against the amendment will have an opportunity to do so.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I do not profess to have an expert knowledge of all the intricacies and complexities of sugar legislation; but I do wish to call to the attention of the Senate what I believe to be the very exorbitant and excessive benefits now being paid under what is known as the sugar program.

On March 20 I requested insertion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pages 3156 and 3157, of a list of payments which have been made under the sugar program, as furnished me by Mr. R. M. Evans, of the Department of Agriculture. I find that the largest amount received by any firm or individual was paid in Puerto Rico to a firm by the name of Luce & Co., receiving $665,211.20.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. LEE. Is that a soil-conservation payment or a benefit payment under the A. A. A.?

Mr. BYRD. That is a benefit payment under the sugar program; but, in addition to the amount I have just mentioned, the regular soil-conservation payments can be made to all of those who are also receiving these benefit payments under the sugar program.

Mr. LEE. In what year was that? Does the table show?

Mr. BYRD. That was the last year available—the growing season of 1937—but I am advised by Mr. Evans that there has been no substantial change in these payments since that time.

Mr. LEE. We now have a law which puts a ceiling of $10,000 on payments to any one farmer. I presume that was before the $10,000 law took effect. Does the Senator know whether or not that is so?

Mr. BYRD. The ceiling of $10,000 does not apply to these particular payments, and it is my purpose to modify my amendment so that the same limitation which applies to the ordinary operator under the soil-conservation program shall apply to these payments.

Mr. LEE. I am in sympathy with the Senator's efforts.

Mr. BYRD. To make it clear, I will say again to the Senator that these payments are now being made. While these records are for 1937, there has been no substantial change in the annual payments.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. RUSSELL. I merely wish to make clear what the Senator from Virginia has already stated, that the limit of $10,000 referred to by the Senator from Oklahoma applies only to soil-conservation payments and to parity payments. Payments under the Sugar Act are made under independent legislation, and are in nowise related to the soil-conservation payments.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, before I yield further, I wish to say that I do not agree with the Senator from Georgia that they are in nowise related. They are made on the same principle on which the soil-conservation payments are made.

Mr. RUSSELL. I was referring to the funds from which the payments are made. Of course, they do not come from the same funds, because the Senator is seeking to apply his amendment solely to the sugar payments.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator is correct. But they are made by direct payments from the United States Treasury, just as all other payments are made.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. There is a very essential difference between the two cases, because payments under the Soil Conservation Act and payments under the parity-payment appropriation are not covered into the Treasury by any tax. The payments under the Sugar Act are all covered by a tax. So that the sugar industry raises the funds by which the benefit payments are made.

Mr. BYRD. I shall in due time answer the Senator from Wyoming. Revenue from this tax goes into the General Treasury, and it is a tax, as I shall attempt to show, which is passed on to the American consumer and is not paid by the sugar producer.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator indicates that he will later cover the point about which I was about to ask him. A few days ago the Delegate from Hawaii in the House of Representatives came over and presented a long list of companies in Hawaii, showing the amount of benefits they receive under the law, and the amount of taxes they pay under the law. As I recall the table, with one exception they all pay in more than they receive back. That led me to ask him how that happened, and he said the tax was primarily levied as a matter of regulation. I asked him whether it was not passed on to the consumer, not paid by the producers. He said that in effect and practice in the Hawaiian Islands it was not passed on to the consumer; that it was paid by the growers and producers.

If it is a tax for regulation purposes only, and is returned to the people who do pay it for regulatory purposes, I am concerned to know whether or not we would create an additional injustice were we to cut the amount to $10,000, if my premise be sound; and I hope the Senator will come to that.

Mr. BYRD. If the statement made by the gentleman from Hawaii is correct, that they pay more than they receive out of it, he should be willing to have the tax repealed, and likewise have the benefit-payment provision repealed.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think he would be, but I think what he is concerned about is the prospect of having the tax remain in effect, and to compel the companies to pay $150,000, under the assumption that they are to get it back, and then find that they are to get only $10,000 back, which would be an outlay of taxes for no purpose at all, when the purpose of the tax, as I understand, is for regulation of the sugar industry only, and not as a matter of general revenue.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. REED. I desired to offer a suggestion to the Senator from Virginia touching the point raised by the Senator from Maryland. I talked with the Sugar Division of the Department of Agriculture this morning as to where this tax finally is laid. It is a tax of one-half cent a pound collected from the processor. The Sugar Division of the Department of Agriculture informed me this morning that normally this tax was passed on to the consumer, that there might be conditions of trade at certain times when the tax would possibly pass back to the producer, but that that was not a normal condition.

Let me add, Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Virginia—because I have to go to a conference-committee meeting at 3:30—that I am in entire accord with the Senator from Virginia. I make the distinction in my mind between this limitation and a limitation which is suggested to be imposed upon the so-called basic crops of which we have an exportable surplus. On the one hand there is to be a limit on tobacco, rice, wheat, cotton, and corn. If the desire is to restrict production, the large producer should be included.

With regard to the matter before us, the United States produces less than 30 percent of the sugar which it consumes. That puts sugar in a different category. We can consume all the cane sugar and all the beet sugar we raise or can possibly raise in the United States, and then we have to import the rest we need. I can see no possible justification for assessing the consumers of sugar in the United States for the benefit of growers whose refunds, as has been already mentioned by the Senator from Virginia, go as high as $665,000. That is an intolerable condition. I think the Senator from Virginia is entitled to the thanks of the Senate and of the country for bringing these facts to the attention of the Senate, and I thank the Senator from Virginia for yielding to me.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I may say to the Senator, because I basically am sympathetic with his amendment, that my only concern is that there is a matter of dispute as to whether or not the grower and producer pays the tax or whether the ultimate consumer pays it. The probable truth of the matter is that they both pay some part of it. If it is levied not for revenue purposes but to regulate industry, and the industry is regulated on the basis of the tax laid, and we object to these refunds, then in all logic we should repeal the tax, because if it is true, as it has been presented to me, that the producers pay the tax, and it is only for purposes of regulation, and they are entitled to a refund of the tax when they have complied with the law, if that is the sole reason for its being, then it seems to me that we should not only cut down the benefit payment to $10,000 but we should repeal the tax altogether.

To conclude, there cannot be a real reason for levying a tax on food other than for regulation purposes. There cannot be any sound reason for levying a tax on something which every man needs unless it is for the purpose of regulation. That was the thought when it was put into the law.

My only concern is that Hawaii has no representative in this body, nor has Puerto Rico, and as I happen to be the chairman of the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, I am very much concerned lest we do them an unintentional injustice. I should like to have the facts brought out clearly and in bold relief so that there will be no mistake as we cast our votes in this matter.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. One of the most difficult things for Members of the Senate to do is to attempt to defend large payments of the character brought to our notice. I am glad the Senator from Maryland mentioned the subject, and I am also glad the Senator from Kansas referred to it.

The purpose of the processing tax in effect is this: The tax is levied upon the manufacturing process of making sugar. The purpose of it is to transfer to the producer, the farmer, or the sugarcane grower—whether he be a small farmer, as he is in Michigan, Colorado, or Wyoming, or a large farmer, as he is in Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands—the purpose is to transfer 60 cents a hundred to the producer, and take it out of the manufacturer or the processor. A tax of 53½ cents a hundred is levied on refined sugar; a tax of 50 cents a hundred is levied on raw sugar. When we consider that there are 107 pounds of raw sugar in a hundred pounds of refined sugar, that works out to practically the same tax.

Whether the tax is shifted onto the consumer or not would be an easy question to answer if it were not for the complicated quota and tariff system, but because that system exists, and because we very definitely limit the amount of sugar which can come into the United States from this vast reservoir in Cuba, the Secretary of Agriculture is able, within reasonable limits, to fix the price of sugar. I say that that price would be substantially the same, whether there was a processing tax or not.

Mr. BYRD. May I interrupt the Senator there?

Mr. BROWN. Certainly.

Mr. BYRD. The Secretary of Agriculture thinks this tax is being passed on to the consumer.

Mr. BROWN. I do not agree with the Senator.

Mr. BYRD. I talked with officials of the Department of Agriculture this morning and they said it did, and I have here a letter addressed to the Senator from Michigan which indicates that the Secretary believes that to be the case.

Mr. BROWN. There is no question but that the tariff passes a large burden on to the American consumer in the entire sugar field; but I am not talking about that.

Mr. BYRD. Is the Senator from Michigan prepared to say that the Secretary of Agriculture does not think this tax is passed on?

Mr. BROWN. I will read what he says, if the Senator will pardon me. The Secretary of Agriculture says:

> One is likely to assume that excise taxes increase prices under all conditions, but an excise tax on sugar within certain limits under the quota system is one of the exceptions.

Those are the exact words of the Secretary.

The Bureau of Agricultural Economics, in a report on this bill, said, giving the same reason I gave a few moments ago:

> Since the total quota for sugar was completely filled each year, the quota system definitely limited the quantity of sugar made available for sale in the United States.

In other words, we have not a free market for sugar; we have a "quota-ized" market for sugar. There is not free competition. There is Government regulation.

> Consumers would pay only a given price, an aggregate amount for such a quantity, depending upon the existing state of demand, which is largely influenced by consumer purchasing power. Therefore—

And this is the Department of Agriculture speaking—> the tax did not affect the retail price in any way over any appreciable period of time, and so could not have been passed on to the consumer.

Since the tax is not borne by consumers or by refiners or by distributors, it apparently is, according to their view, borne by the producer of cane sugar. Let me prove that to the Senator from Virginia from another angle.

Mr. BYRD. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to read to the Senate, at this point, a letter written by Secretary Wallace to the Senator from Michigan, dated April 6, 1938, which is in conflict with the statement which has just been read. Secretary Wallace said in this letter:

> I know that you will also appreciate the difficulty from the standpoint of the public interest in finding adequate justification for a policy of charging American consumers higher prices for sugar. In my letter to Senator Bulkley, referred to above, attention was called to the fact that "it is estimated that at current prices American consumers are obliged to pay more than $350,000,000 per annum in excess of the value, at world prices, of their annual sugar supply (without allowance for the estimated net revenue of approximately $47,000,000 represented by the difference between disbursements under the Sugar Act of 1937 and receipts from the tariff and the 50-cent tax on sugar, or for the possible increase in world price that might result from changed conditions). This is equivalent to a tax of approximately $2.70 per capita on a population of 129,000,000 persons. It means on the average a levy of more than $10 per family, including that one-third of the Nation which is ill-nourished, and it represents an amount of purchasing power equal to more than 50 quarts of milk and 50 loaves of bread for each family in the United States."

By that statement the Secretary of Agriculture meant that those three processes—one, the tariff; two, the quota; and, three, this tax—have increased the burden upon the people of the United States in the purchase of sugar by $350,000,000, and I confirmed that this morning by calling up the Department of Agriculture and was told that that was what the Secretary intended to say.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, there is no question, as I said, that the general situation with regard to sugar is one which is highly expensive to the American consumer. I want to be perfectly frank about that. It is not the time now to go into the arguments that could be gone into relative to the importance of preserving this system in the American sugar market, but does the Senator think that the Secretary of Agriculture would favor this sugar legislation, as he does favor it, if he objected to the payments to which the Senator is now objecting?

Mr. BYRD. I cannot say what the Secretary may favor, but this letter certainly indicates that he believes that a burden of $350,000,000 has been placed upon the American consuming public, first, by the tariff; second, by the quota system; and, third, by this taxation.

Mr. BROWN. Let me ask the Senator from Virginia if it is a burden? We had no sugar-processing tax from 1909 to 1913. The price of sugar then was $5.95 a hundred. In 1935 we put a processing tax on, and the price of sugar was $5.70 a hundred. In 1936 the price was $5.60 a hundred. In 1938, the first year under the present act, the price of sugar was $5.30 a hundred. And at the present time it is $5.40 a hundred.

The entire record of the price of sugar is contrary to the statement that the Senator from Virginia makes.

Will the Senator pardon me a moment longer? In the 10-year average in the period that we call the "gay nineties" the price of sugar was $5.74 a hundred. I want Senators to get this.

That was in the period 1891 to 1900, the 10-year period. In the 10 years from 1929 to 1938 the average price of sugar was $5.61 a hundred, or a decrease of 2.26 percent. Every other important item in the list of food products—butter, lard, flour, potatoes, milk, eggs, cornmeal, bacon, pork chops, round steak, and ham—have increased in the last 10 years over that 10-year period.

Mr. BYRD. Let me interrupt the Senator at this point. This particular act became effective on September 1, 1937. At that time the price of hogs was $10.55 a hundred. Now it is $4.97 a hundred. At that time the price of cattle was $7.54 a hundred and now it is $6.84 a hundred. Then the price of corn was 93.9 cents per bushel and now it is 84.1 cents a bushel. Then the price of wheat was 93 cents a bushel and now it is 84 cents a bushel.

Showing that all those commodities have declined since September 1937, when this act went into effect, but sugar has remained stationary and has been protected from a decline by the quota system and by the tariff, and the consumers of America have, therefore, in my judgment, paid this extra tax.

Mr. BROWN. To finish the figures that I gave the Senator, we have had a general increase in all agricultural prices that I have named except sugar.

Mr. BYRD. That is not true, if the Senator will pardon me, as compared with this period of——

Mr. BROWN. I am speaking of the 10-year period.

Mr. BYRD. I am talking of the month that this act went into effect. That is the time with which to make the comparison.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator knows, if he knows anything about sugar at all, that there was no essential difference between the Jones-Costigan Act, which was in effect, I believe, in 1934 and 1935, for a 2-year period, and the Sugar Act of 1937. They were practically identical.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a table giving a comparison between retail prices today and the "gay nineties" be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

Retail prices today compared to the "gay nineties"

	Average retail price in United States		Percent decrease (−) or increase (+)
	10 years from 1891 to 1900	10 years from 1929 to 1938
Refined sugar per pound	$0.0574	$0.0561	−2.26
Butter per pound	.2575	.3759	+45.98
Lard per pound	.0953	.1432	+50.26
Flour per one-eighth barrel	.6382	1.0782	+68.94
Potatoes per peck	.2229	.3825	+71.60
Milk per quart	.0677	.1217	+79.76
Eggs per dozen	.2067	.3727	+80.31
Hens per pound	.1331	.3128	+135.01
Corn meal per pound	.0190	.0468	+146.32
Bacon per pound	.1323	.3597	+171.88
Pork chops per pound	.1115	.3083	+176.50
Round steak per pound	.1254	.3519	+180.62
Ham per pound	.1549	.4550	+193.74

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to finish my preliminary remarks, because I first wish to bring out some of these large contributions. Then, I should like to make my statement with respect to the taxation matter, and the Senator can then interrupt me.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me at this point?

Mr. BYRD. I should like to finish my preliminary statement first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia declines to yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a suggestion which would save some debate?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I hope that the Senator reads the payments that each concern will get, that he will also read simultaneously the payment of tax that each concern has made, so we can get the rounded picture.

Mr. BYRD. I am sorry I do not have that information.

Mr. BROWN. I have it here. That is what I interrupted to cover.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator can place that information in the RECORD when I have completed my argument.

The next largest payment was made to the Fajardo Sugar Growers' Association, $565,000.

The third largest payment was made to the United States Sugar Corporation, Florida, $430,000.

The Hawaiian Commercial & Sugar Co. obtained $340,000; the Ewa Plantation Co., $283,000; the Oahu Sugar Co., $262,000; the Waialua Agricultural Corporation, $253,000; the Central Coloso, $149,000; the Central Vannina, Inc., $102,000; and Rubert Hermanos, Inc., $163,000.

In Hawaii, for example, there were 36 firms, corporations, and individuals obtaining more than $10,000, with an average payment in excess of $200,000; $200,000 was the average received by these producers of sugar in Hawaii receiving more than $10,000.

In Puerto Rico the average was $60,000. With the exception of Florida, in America the average was far less. In some instances it was $10,000 to $15,000. The only large payment made in this country was $430,000 to the United States Sugar Corporation in the State of Florida. This emphasizes another evil of this plan, namely, that it is tending to monopolistic control. Here is a great corporation in Florida, referred to by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], that receives practically all the large appropriation that was made for Florida for this sugar payment.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. My State, Colorado, is the largest sugar-producing State. What is the average there?

Mr. BYRD. Colorado does not get one single payment in excess of $10,000. No Colorado payment is included in this list. There are some payments in California. California, for example, has 49 payments above $10,000, with an average of about $15,000. Louisiana has 60 payments above $10,000, with an average of about $30,000.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me before he leaves that point?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. BILBO. Has the Senator the number of recipients of these payments in the smaller brackets? How many producers are there that are being taken care of under this program?

Mr. BYRD. I asked the Secretary of Agriculture only for those receiving more than $10,000.

Mr. BILBO. The Senator simply obtained the names of those in the higher brackets?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Suppose the Senator's amendment is adopted, who will receive the money that is cut off?

Mr. BYRD. It stays in the General Treasury.

Mr. President, it seems to me this whole argument revolves around this point: Does this tax, which is paid by the processors of sugar, constitute a reduction from their income, or is the tax passed on in the normal process of business to the American consumer? And, Mr. President, I wish to address myself to that point.

The Secretary of Agriculture, by the letter that I have read to the Senate, evidently is of the opinion that these three things—namely, the tariff, the quota, and this tax—have increased the burden upon the American consuming public in the purchase of sugar, to the extent of $350,000,000 each year, because he said so in his letter.

Mr. President, I do not know of any excise tax—and this is in the nature of an excise tax—I do not know of any tax of this character that cannot under certain conditions be passed on to the consumer, unless an attempt is made to fix definitely the price of the product that is sold.

What determines the price of an agricultural product? It is determined by the law of supply and demand. We all know that. I have been in the farming business for more than 30 years selling agricultural products. I know, for example, that in the production of apples, one year we can have 30,000,000 barrels of apples and obtain a low price, and in another year we can have a 30,0000,000-barrel crop of apples and obtain a higher price. Why? Because the demand is affected by the purchasing power of the people, by the general prosperity that exists when that particular commodity is sold.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. The proposition that the Senator just made is exactly correct. If the law of supply and demand controls the price, and there were no artificial legal barriers to that price, the Senator would be right. But the Senator evidently has not read section 201 of the Sugar Act, which I will say, if the Senator will permit me, in a general way—and I will read it in a moment—provides that the importations from this great reservoir of Cuba shall be increased in amount whenever the Secretary determines, in the interest of the consumer, that the price is too high. When the situation is the other way, and the price appears to be too low, the Secretary may cut off and reduce its importation.

Let me read the vital part of section 201 to the Senator:

In making such determinations—

That is, the amount of sugar that shall come in—the Secretary shall use as a basis the quantity of direct-consumption sugar distributed for consumption, as indicated by official statistics of the Department of Agriculture, during the 12-month period ending October 31 next preceding the calendar year for which the determination is being made, and shall make allowances for a deficiency or surplus in inventories of sugar, and changes in consumption, as computed from statistics published by agencies of the Federal Government with respect to inventories of sugar, population, and demand conditions; and in order that the regulation of commerce provided for under this act shall not result in excessive prices to consumers, the Secretary may make such additional allowances as he may deem necessary in the amount of sugar determined to be needed to meet the requirements of consumers, so that the supply of sugar made available under this act shall not result in average prices to consumers in excess of those necessary to maintain the domestic sugar industry as a whole, and the amounts of such additional allowances shall be such that in no event will the amount of the total supply be less than the quantity of sugar required to give consumers of sugar in the continental United States a per capita consumption equal to that of the average of the 2-year period 1935–36.

In effect, in that technical language it provides that the Secretary shall raise or lower these importations so that the price shall not be too high and shall not be too low. I know of no product in the United States with respect to which there is such definite hard and fixed control over price as there is in the sugar situation.

The business—within the limitations fixed by the statute—the price, and I might say the fate of the sugar industry are in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture. We have no free market for sugar. We have a restricted market. We have a restricted business, in which the Secretary has practically complete control of price.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, in my judgment, the statement of the Senator from Michigan confirms my argument. If we have restricted production and importation of sugar, the other question, which the Secretary cannot control, is the purchasing power of the people. The law says there must not be an excessive price of sugar. Nobody would consider excessive a price for sugar sufficient to cover payments to sugar producers averaging from 30 to 60 cents a hundred, or approximately half a cent a pound. Sugar might go up half a cent a pound without the Secretary of Agriculture feeling justified in increasing the quotas which come into this country and lowering the price of sugar.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I wish to be courteous to the Senator, but I have been interrupted to a considerable extent, and I should like to make an argument with some continuity.

I say again, Mr. President, that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], in calling attention to the average prices of other agricultural commodities over a 10-year period, confirms my argument. Hog prices have gone down to one-half of what they were in September 1937, when this act became operative. Cattle prices have gone down substantially. Corn and wheat prices have gone down, and the prices of practically all agricultural products, except sugar, have gone down. Why is it not true, then, that the tax which was imposed upon the sugar producers in 1937 was absorbed by those who purchased the sugar, the great American public?

Mr. President, when we quote the Secretary of Agriculture as favoring this act, favoring the quota system, and favoring a tariff system, we make him say in effect he would charge the American people $350,000,000 more for sugar than they should be charged. I read the letter which was sent to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] in which it is stated that these three things are imposing on the American people each year a burden of $350,000,000 more than should be paid on the basis of world prices for this great necessity of our existence.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I have yielded very frequently, and I should like the privilege of concluding my statement. I shall be through very shortly, and the Senator may then interrupt me or take the floor.

Mr. President, I know of no processing tax that cannot be passed on to the consumer if business conditions justify it, and if there is sufficient purchasing power on the part of those who must purchase the particular article to justify it, or if the article is sufficiently necessary to existence to compel people to purchase it no matter at what price it is offered.

Consider the cigarette tax, about which I happen to know something. That is in the nature of an excise or processing tax. It is passed on directly to the consumer in every instance. Five hundred and eighty million dollars of tobacco taxes are being collected each year by the Federal Government. Ten percent of the total gross income of the Government is in the form of tobacco taxation. That amount is twice as much as all the money which the farmers who produce tobacco receive. It would be an absurdity to say that those farmers pay for the processing tax which is collected directly from the manufacturers and indirectly from the public.

The same thing applies to gasoline taxes. All of us who have participated in State administration know about gasoline taxes. When I was Governor of Virginia, the first substantial gasoline tax of 3 cents a gallon was imposed. Immediately the price of gasoline to the people was increased 3 cents a gallon. I had no objection to that because it was intended that the consumers should pay that tax.

There is no way in which protection can be given to the American public against having the tax passed on to them unless the price of sugar is definitely fixed and determined by legislative act. Then we must consider whether sugar prices should decline as the prices of other agricultural products decline. I have the records to show that the price of sugar has not declined in the degree that prices of other agricultural products have dropped. The prices of other agricultural products have substantially declined, but the price of sugar today is approximately what it was in 1937, when the act became effective.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. LEE. The difference between the tax which is collected on gasoline, to which the Senator from Virginia refers, and the tax which is being collected on cigarettes is that the gasoline tax goes into the Public Treasury and is used, in turn, for all the people—all the consumers. However, the tax on sugar is channeled right back into the pockets of the growers of sugar and is not distributed to the consumers generally.

Mr. BYRD. I realize the distinction. However, the tax on sugar goes into the General Treasury. It is not an earmarked tax. It is not a segregated tax. It goes into the General Treasury and it is paid out by general appropriations.

Mr. LEE. In the form of the big payments to which the Senator has referred.

Mr. BYRD. The payments practically absorb the total receipts from the taxation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. On that point, when the gasoline tax is paid by the consumer, of course the consumer knows precisely what he is paying in the way of a tax. If the tax is 5 cents, it is so posted at all the gasoline stations.

Mr. BYRD. Not necessarily so.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not necessarily; but as a matter of practice the gas price is usually stated as so much, and the tax as so much. At any rate, everybody knows what the tax is and what he is paying. The same thing is true of cigarettes. When one buys a package of cigarettes, he knows that he is paying a tax of 6 cents.

Mr. BYRD. I venture to say that not 1 percent of the American people know that they are paying a 6-cent tax when they purchase a package of cigarettes.

Mr. BARKLEY. How is anyone to know, when he buys sugar, whether or not he is paying a tax, or how much he is paying?

Mr. BYRD. There is no way to know it, except that everybody who knows anything about business operations knows that when a processing tax is placed upon a product the effort is made to pass the tax on to the consumer, and the effort usually is successful.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let me ask a question which bothers me in regard to the amendment of the Senator. Does the statute under which sugar quotas are made constitute a contract between the Government and the producers?

Mr. BYRD. There is nothing in the act to indicate that the Secretary of Agriculture has any right to make a contract. I am told, upon inquiry at the Department of Agriculture, that not a single contract has been signed by the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to these payments.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the act itself constitute a contract if the producers of sugar comply with it? Is the Government morally obligated, until there is a change in the basic law, to go ahead and comply with the terms of the act of 1937?

Mr. BYRD. The Senator can judge that moral obligation as well as I can. I can find nothing in the act which obligates the Government in the form of a contract.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Assume that the Senator is correct in his statement that the tax is passed on to the ultimate consumer. The process of correction which he proposes, namely, to pay not more than $10,000 to any producer, would not cure the evil. It seems to me that if his premise be sound, his amendment would only mitigate the evil by reducing the payment. If his premise be sound, the only way to correct the injustice would be to wipe out the tax altogether.

Mr. BYRD. I am perfectly willing to vote to wipe it out; but that question is not before the Senate. There is before the Senate a bill appropriating a certain number of millions of dollars to pay these benefit payments.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am asking purely for information, because I do not know much about the details of the sugar business. The tax is being levied, and the Senator's amendment does not in any way deal with the tax; but if a limitation of $10,000, or any other sum less than would be received under the law as it now exists were imposed, what would become of the surplus money which would be left in the Treasury? Would it be available for general purposes?

Mr. BYRD. Of course, it would be available for general purposes. It goes into the general fund, as does any other tax.

Mr. BARKLEY. But it was collected, theoretically, for the purpose of making these payments.

Mr. BYRD. Theoretically it was collected for the purpose of making these payments, but it is not earmarked in any way. As the Senator knows, that is a matter of legislation and would be subject to a point of order in connection with this particular bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator now yield to me?

Mr. BYRD. Just a moment. What the Senator is now asked to vote upon is approval of the annual appropriation for this particular purpose.

I now yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I thought that the answer to the question of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] might well be made at this point and that the terms of the law might well be cleared up in the mind of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD].

The Senator from Kentucky inquired whether or not there was a contract, or what amounts to a contract, between the producers and the Government. The Senator from Virginia responded that he was advised by the Department of Agriculture that not a single contract had been signed between a producer and the Department. That answer, of course, is perfectly correct. However, the contractual obligation which has been meant by those of us who are speaking about this phase of the matter is not contained in any written contract. It is contained in the law which provides for these payments. Section 301 is the first section of title III, which is labeled "Conditional Payment Provisions." In other words, all the payments are made upon condition. Section 301 begins:

> The Secretary is authorized to make payments on the following conditions with respect to sugar or liquid sugar commercially recoverable from sugar beets or sugarcane grown on a farm for the extraction of sugar or liquid sugar.

Then follow subparagraphs (a), (b), (c), (d), and (e). Next follows section 302, with subparagraphs; then sections 303, 304, 305, 306, and 307, all expressing the terms which the producers must meet to qualify for the payments.

I say this, Mr. President, as a matter of fairness. I quite agree in principle with the argument which the Senator from Virginia is making. In 1937, when the Sugar Act was under consideration, I introduced and had printed and laid on the table an amendment which would have limited all benefit payments to corporations to $50,000, intending to reach exactly the same condition which the Senator has in mind. I was persuaded by those who were in consultation with me not to present that amendment because it might tend to destroy the general beneficial purposes of the legislation. Instead we wrote into the bill a provision which is to be found in section 304 (c), which provides for a graduated scale-down.

The condition which is presented to us is that the producers have in good faith carried out the conditions which were laid upon them in the act; and it seems to me that in these circumstances it would be improper for us to change the compensation which they are to receive for carrying out the conditions until we legislate on a new bill. The matter could then properly be brought up and given the most serious consideration.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, with respect to the soil-conservation payments to the farmers of America, the same condition existed as that to which the Senator from Wyoming has referred. Certain things were set forth in the act which the farmer was supposed to do before he received any soil-conservation payments. Restriction of his acreage, the use of certain legumes, and other things were set forth in the act and in the regulations of the Department of Agriculture. Yet what did Congress do in that respect? As the Senate knows, when the law was first passed there was no restriction upon the payment to corporations or individuals of any sum whatsoever for soil-conservation payments. As a result, the insurance companies of this country obtained tremendous benefit payments. The Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. received $257,000 in 1 year. The Equitable Life Assurance Society received $208,000 in 1 year. But what was done in that case? Congress passed a law providing that no farmer or corporation operating under the soil-conservation program could receive over $10,000; and the House of Representatives has just recently passed a bill which shortly will be before the Senate reducing those payments to $5,000.

I have been a strong supporter of the soil-conservation program. I think it is one of the most constructive acts this administration has undertaken for the benefit of the farmer; but I think the value of the act lies in its application to the smaller farmers. I speak as one who happens to be one of the larger farmers, and who has never asked for a single dollar from the Federal Government in any way, shape, or form. Although I operate 4,000 acres of land under cultivation, I have never received a soil-conservation payment. I have never sold any of my products to the Government—apples are purchased under the surplus-commodities program. I think the benefits of the Soil Conservation Act should be to the smaller farmer, because larger farmers have facilities for marketing which the smaller farmers do not have, and when this bill comes from the House of Representatives to the Senate I intend to ask that the $5,000 limit be reduced. I do not think any farmer should receive more than $2,500 in soil-conservation payments, so perhaps larger amounts may be given to the smaller farmers, those who have not the facilities to market their products, and who could benefit much more.

So I do not think a great deal of argument can be made along the line suggested by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY].

No contract at all is involved here, so far as I can see. There is nothing signed on the part of the Secretary of Agriculture, and so far as I can see, there is no obligation upon the Federal Government to continue indefinitely the payment of these subsidies. even though the tax may be paid.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. LEE. I am in accord with the Senator in trying to help the little farmer. The Senate passed an amendment to the original A. A. A. Farm Act limiting to $300 the payments to any one farmer. The House changed that, and the result was a $10,000 limitation. At that time the figures showed that 96 percent of the farmers of the United States drew less than $100. The same figures that show one life-insurance company receiving $256,000 show that 3,700,000 farmers in the United States received an average of $75 each.

Evidently, from the figures just presented by the Senator from Virginia, the producers of cane sugar are corporation or plantation farmers; for he presented no figures at all showing that any beet-sugar producer received any of those large payments. The beet-sugar farmer is a farmer in the typical sense.

I believe we should put a limitation on these payments to the big-scale operator, because he is farming on a corporation, syndicated basis. His cost of production is lower. He can buy and sell in large quantities. He can save on freight rates. He has all of those advantages that the little unit farmer does not have. We are trying to legislate to help the man who needs it; and I am in sympathy with the amendment of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Before the Senator leaves that subject I should like to ask him a question.

I agree 100 percent with the Senator from Virginia that the payment of these fabulous sums of money to corporations probably never was thought of by Congress, and is unjustified. However, this question arises in my mind:

This is an appropriation bill. The Senator's amendment, as I understand it—I have not heard it read—would simply make it impossible for a larger payment than $10,000 to be made.

Mr. BYRD. I will say to the Senator that the present amendment provides a limitation of $5,000, but I intend to modify it and make the amount $10,000.

Mr. NORRIS. I understood that the Senator had that intention, and I am wondering why he proposes to do it. It seems to me that $5,000 is enough.

Mr. BYRD. The reason I propose to do it, if the Senator will permit me, is that such is the amount now authorized under the domestic conservation program. I hope it will be reduced to $5,000 and still further reduced.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that it has been reduced, however.

Mr. BYRD. The House has passed a bill reducing it, but the Senate has not acted upon the bill. What I am attempting to do is to put these foreign beneficiaries on a basis equal to that fixed for the American farmer.

Mr. NORRIS. Suppose the House makes that change, and we make this change to $10,000. Then the amounts will be unequal again, just the reverse of what they now are.

Mr. BYRD. I will say to the Senator, however, that reduction from $660,000 to $10,000 would be a vast improvement.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes; I do not dispute that fact; but I think we ought to have both of them.

Mr. BYRD. I agree with the Senator; but I cannot predict—and I do not think the Senator from Nebraska can predict—what the Senate of the United States will do about any bill before it.

Mr. NORRIS. But if we are going to reduce the amount at all, could not that be used in the House as an argument to reduce the amount in that bill to $5,000?

Mr. BYRD. I have so much confidence in the Senator from Nebraska that I am going to leave my amendment as it is, with the understanding that if the amendment is defeated I shall modify it so as to provide for a larger sum, because I think we should take any reduction that can be secured in these colossal payments.

Mr. NORRIS. The question, however, which I wanted to ask the Senator is this: Is it true that these amounts have already been earned by these various corporations under the law? Have they, in the face of the law that we have passed without any limitation in it, gone on and produced the crop; and are they, therefore, in the condition suggested by the Senator from Wyoming of a contractual relation, the contract being based on the law itself instead of a written contract?

That is the only thing that bothers me in hesitating to support the Senator's amendment. If we are obligated to pay these sums of money, I think we ought to pay them, even though I consider them unjust and unfair.

Mr. BYRD. I agree with the Senator; and if he or any other Member of the Senate can work out an amendment that will protect that situation, I shall be delighted to accept it. I have no desire whatever to do any injustice to anyone if a contract has actually been entered into.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, the Senator cannot deal with the law itself in an appropriation bill; but I am going to ask him a question on the subject while we have this matter under debate, so that I may have the matter in mind should the Sugar Act itself again come up.

Assuming that the Senate agrees to the Senator's amendment to reduce these payments to not more than five or ten thousand dollars, as the case may be, and the basic Sugar Act remains the same, what will be the effect on the price of sugar to the consumer if we leave the basic act as it is and cut down the benefit payments in line with the Senator's amendment?

Mr. BYRD. I will say to the Senator that even if there is no reduction in the price of sugar the amount that is going into the Treasury can be used to pay other expenses of the Government.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct; but if the Senator will yield, I do not think he got my question.

I concede that the Treasury will have more money by withholding payment of all sums over $10,000, but I am wondering, therefore, whether we ought to keep this tax on sugar when we do not need to keep it on sugar. Why should we not give the consumer the advantage of that, if this tax now is being passed on to him, and is a part of the purchase price? Does the Senator think my premise is right?

Mr. BYRD. I do. I am very much in favor of repealing the tax.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question at that point?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. The same question bothers me that bothers the Senator from Nebraska, as I indicated a while ago. Is it true or is it not true—and Senators who are interested in the production of sugar may answer the question—that the tax levied on sugar is based upon and for the purpose of making possible the payment of these benefits? Is it true that the tax was levied for the purpose of enabling the Government to pay these benefits and for no other purpose?

Mr. BYRD. I imagine that that was certainly the original purpose of the tax.

Mr. BARKLEY. Now this question arises in my mind: Having taxed the entire production of sugar for the purpose of raising the money to pay these benefits, provided the producers of sugar comply with the law—which I assume they have done, and are thereby, under the law, entitled to it—can the Government in good faith withdraw the payments and still continue to collect the tax, assuming that the producers have earned and will continue to earn under the law the amount they get, so long as it is the law, and the tax is raised?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to read the law itself?

Mr. BARKLEY. I should feel much freer to vote on an amendment like this on the Sugar Act itself when it is taken up again; but the situation is somewhat different on an amendment to an appropriation bill. However big and unjustifiable in morals these payments may be, they are based on a law that we have enacted. We are responsible to these concerns for the law which says to them, "If you do certain things, you are going to draw certain benefits," and those benefits are drawn in proportion to the amount of their production.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. BARKLEY. I have not the floor.

Mr. BYRD. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. In answer to the Senator's question—it is not a complete answer, because I have not the entire Sugar Act—but on page 82 of the bill which is now pending, in line 10, the Senator will find the following provision:

That conditional payments—

And that is what these are—in connection with the 1940 sugar program shall not be made if, by proclamation under section 509 of said act, title II or title III shall have been suspended and shall remain suspended until July 1, 1940.

Assuming that the Secretary of Agriculture were to act and make his proclamation before July 1, 1940, in my opinion none of these conditional payments would have to be made, if the act means what it says.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, that is in pursuance of the act itself, which authorizes him to make the suspension.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. But it is entirely in the discretion and judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture as to whether he shall make the suspension of the operation of the act itself prior to July 1, 1940.

Mr. TYDINGS. The point I made was that there would not be any contractual relation if he were to make his proclamation prior to July 1, 1940.

Mr. BARKLEY. Suppose he does not make that proclamation?

Mr. TYDINGS. Well, we ought to know whether the whole situation has the valve turned on or off.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield right at that point?

Mr. BYRD. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. What the Senator from Maryland has read clears up the matter in my mind very much. This beet and cane sugar, as applied to the appropriation bill before us, is the crop of 1940?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. If we pass this appropriation, there is ample time, no advantage will be taken of anybody. To my mind, the language which has been read makes it clear that we have a right to adopt the Senator's amendment, if we want to do so, without any violation of contract or obligation.

Mr. TYDINGS. Absolutely; the Senator is correct.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I do not desire to take any more of the time of the Senate. I think, by all means, we should reduce these exorbitant payments. I can see no hardship that would result. If there is any contract which in any way is violated, I should be the first one seeking to protect the honor and credit of the United States Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair ask the Senator from Virginia in what form his amendment is presented? There was some conversation pro and con about the figures in the amendment.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator from Virginia desires the amendment voted upon first on the basis of $5,000.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I know very little about the details of the sugar industry. I am sure that I have shared the shock sustained by a great many Members of the Senate as a result of the revelations of the Senator from Virginia as to the very large amounts that have been paid some of the producers of sugar. I have undertaken to make some little investigation of this matter. While I think the subject matter of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia certainly is a proper one for legislation by Congress, I have reached the conclusion that it would be unwise and unjust for us to undertake to legislate in this manner in this bill.

Mr. President, in the first place, the chief hardship which would be worked by the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia would be upon those engaged in the production of "offshore" sugar, those who produce sugar in Puerto Rico and in Hawaii, and who have no representative in the Senate of the United States to give us all the details as to the effect this amendment would have upon the agricultural economy of those islands. I hold no brief for corporate interests. I have been critical of corporate farming.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. I think the most powerful lobby in Washington today is the sugar lobby.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have no doubt of that, though I have no knowledge of it. I have never favored any of the sugar legislation now being discussed. I have heard one of the most powerful lobbies in Washington is the sugar lobby, but I do not think the Senator will believe that I am speaking for the sugar lobby.

Mr. BYRD. I am very sure of that.

Mr. RUSSELL. They have not lobbied with me. The only person who has mentioned this amendment to me in any way has been the Delegate from Hawaii in the House of Representatives, who was elected by the people of Hawaii, and who is the only person in Washington who speaks authoritatively for the 460,000 people who live under the American flag in the Hawaiian Islands. Certainly, considering the fact that those people have no representation here, we should lean backwards rather than do them an injury.

If the so-called Sugar Act were permanent legislation, the Senate might be justified in proceeding to debate the amendment suggested by the Senator from Virginia, but I wish to point out that the present sugar law will die on December 31 of this year, so that this legislation is ineffective after that date. The Senate will have an opportunity at this session of Congress to go into this very matter in connection with permanent legislation which will be proposed to extend the operation of the Sugar Act.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. After this appropriation is once made, will it not be effective for the year beginning July 1, 1940?

Mr. RUSSELL. It might be.

Mr. BYRD. In other words, even though we might change the Sugar Act later, this appropriation for the next fiscal year would still be paid, and these enormous benefits would be provided for the next year.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not dispute that statement, but I think the payments are made this year.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me that if we adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia we run less risk of violating what someone may claim to be a contractual relationship arising under the law than we would if we waited.

Mr. RUSSELL. That may be true. My remarks are not related to that thought.

Mr. NORRIS. Because if we wait until the regular sugar bill comes before us 30 or 40 days from now, then they probably will have gone so far that there will be something in this claim.

Mr. RUSSELL. That may be correct.

Mr. NORRIS. But if we do it now, it will be before the season will open, and it seems to me no one could complain.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have no interest whatever in the matter; as I stated a moment ago, the only man who has discussed this question with me at all has been the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. KING], who did come over from the House and discuss with me the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia. But I do know that there are other conditions attached to these payments than the one affecting the taking of land out of production. The Secretary of Agriculture has almost complete charge of the operation of these corporate farms by virtue of the sugar law, as I understand it. He will withhold payment to these corporations unless certain wages are paid to those who are engaged on the sugar plantations. I have been informed that the highest wages paid farm labor under the American flag are those paid the employees on the sugar plantations in Hawaii. In those islands perhaps there are more automobiles owned per capita than in any State of the Union, and the same applies to radios, because the Secretary of Agriculture has required the plantation operators to pay very substantial wages. I think the average is something like $1.90 a day for the farm laborer who works in the field on the sugar plantations. The chief complaints I heard when I was in Hawaii last fall were from plantation owners, who criticized the Secretary for his requirements as compared with the conditions imposed elsewhere.

Sugar is a 3-year crop in Hawaii. If the law expires this year, these producers, be they corporate or be they individuals, will have been required to pay these high wages for 2 years on the assumption that these sugar benefits would be received this year. The act will expire this year, and, speaking for myself, I do not think it should be renewed. It causes confusion, and certainly these large payments are difficult to justify. Since Congress is to go into this matter in the future, it should not permit by subsequent legislation any such payments as those to be paid to any corporation, or any individual, for that matter, because they are out of all proportion. But we are dealing with a problem in which those who are vitally affected have had no representative to tell us the effect this amendment would have. The people of Hawaii have not been heard here, the people of Puerto Rico have not been heard here, and I am merely undertaking to convey to the Senate the statements which were made to me by the Delegate from Hawaii to the House of Representatives. I do not believe that in simple justice I should do less than that.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator stated a moment ago that in Hawaii sugar is a 3-year crop.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is, they plant the cane, and do not have to plant it again for 3 years.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is as I understand it. I have no personal knowledge about it, but that is the information that has been given to me.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is that true as to Puerto Rico?

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not know. I have not talked with the Delegate from Puerto Rico.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is my understanding it is true as to Puerto Rico.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think so.

Mr. BARKLEY. If that be true, would it not affect cane already planted under the authority of law, and with the understanding that the law would be complied with and continued until next December?

Mr. RUSSELL. It would. Land has been taken out of cultivation for 2 years, and other lands have been cultivated for 2 years, under wages fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture, because of these benefit payments, under a law which confers on him the power to fix the wages, and now, after this year's crop is practically made, the Senate of the United States is asked to come in and saw off the payments on the strength of receiving which these people have undoubtedly made expenditures.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that the withdrawal of land from cultivation has been accomplished on the basis of the act, and the shifting of the crop from one acreage to another has been based on that also.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is true.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. I must confess my slight knowledge in regard to sugar legislation; it is not a subject which would interest my State very much. But I should like to have an answer to this question: Are these funds to pay benefits during the year 1940? Is there the authority in the legislation to utilize the tax receipts for the payment of benefits in 1940?

Mr. RUSSELL. I cannot answer that question. I do not know a great deal about the Sugar Act. I understand they apply to 1940, for the act expires this year.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am trying to get the information from someone.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I should be glad to answer the question. The appropriation is made to pay the benefits to be earned on the harvesting of the 1940 crop.

Mr. PITTMAN. That answers that question. Then I will ask another. Does any law authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to suspend these payments by proclamation prior to July 1?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The provision of the appropriation bill to which allusion was made by the Senator from Maryland, found on page 82, beginning in line 10, is as follows:

> Conditional payments in connection with the 1940 sugar program shall not be made if, by proclamation under section 509 of said act, title 2 or title 3 shall have been suspended and shall remain suspended until July 1, 1940.

That provision was written into the bill in the House, because the President, on the 11th of September last, when there appeared to be a runaway market in sugar as the result of the war, suspended the provisions of title 2 and title 3—namely, the quota provision and the conditional-payment provision. So that to place any confidence in that saving clause in the pending appropriation bill is merely to console ourselves with the thought that, if the quota system is abandoned and the benefit-payment system is abandoned by suspension through proclamation by the President, then no payment shall be made under this act.

Mr. PITTMAN. The information I am seeking—and I think I have it inferentially from the Senator—is this: Has the President the right under the law to suspend these payments?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The President has this right. I will read it to the Senator:

> Whenever the President finds and proclaims that a national economic or other emergency exists with respect to sugar or liquid sugar, he shall by proclamation suspend the operation of title II or title III above, which he determines, on the basis of such findings, should be suspended, and thereafter the operation of any such title shall continue in suspense until the President finds and proclaims that the facts which occasioned such suspension no longer exist. The Secretary shall make such investigations and reports thereon to the President as may be necessary to aid him in carrying out the provisions of this section.

Obviously that is intended merely to give the President the power in an emergency to suspend the quota provisions of the law which restrict importations into the United States and restrict domestic production.

Mr. PITTMAN. Does the law which the Senator has read cover the payment of these benefits?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes. Title III is the title which carries the conditional-payments provision.

Mr. PITTMAN. Then all I have to say about it is that those who undertook to take a contract or who planted crops did it with full knowledge that the payments might be suspended. They certainly had no contractual relations; and if there was a contractual relation, the contract was subject to the condition that it might be terminated by proclamation of the President.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In a national emergency or other economic crisis.

Mr. PITTMAN. That does not have very much force and effect. They have no contract at all. They were put on notice that the payments might be terminated by a proclamation. If the President has the right under the law to make that proclamation, certainly Congress, who gave him that authority, has authority to indicate that this is the time to make such a proclamation.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. It seems to me the able Senator from Nevada overlooks the fact that the suspension referred to by the Senator from Wyoming is a suspension of the whole law, the quota system, the limitation on marketing, and everything, whereas the Senator from Virginia is not proposing to suspend the operation of the whole law; he is merely proposing to strike down the benefit payments and allow the quota system to remain in effect, if I make myself clear. The benefits to be derived by the producer from the suspension of the law would be that he would be able to make a sale in an open market, presumably without limitation, and there would not be any limitation on the quantity he might produce. The whole law is suspended; it is contemplated in the section the Senator from Wyoming read.

Mr. PITTMAN. Am I to understand that the law does not allow the President to suspend the collection of these taxes on processing or to suspend the benefit payments without the whole law being repealed?

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator is right; it is not possible to suspend one part of the law without suspending the whole thing.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator from Florida certainly is wrong about that. On page 82, if the Senator from Nevada will refer to it, specific authority is given in the following language:

> Conditional payments in connection with the 1940 sugar program shall not be made if, by a proclamation under section 509 of said act, title 2 or title 3 shall have been suspended and shall remain suspended until July 1, 1940.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is as I understood it.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. RUSSELL. I decline to yield at this time. I desire to make just a brief comment, then I will yield the floor.

I certainly have no special interest in this matter. I advised the Senate when I started my remarks that I knew little about the details of the Sugar Act. It so happens that I was away from Washington at the time it was under consideration in this body.

I am only interested in seeing justice done.

I do feel that the Senate should not precipitately, in the last year of the act, after permitting these payments to pass for 2 years, when the act will expire by its own terms the last day of December of this year, seek to legislate on this matter with knowledge of only half the facts. We are told that abnormally large payments are being made in some instances, but the people who are most vitally affected have had no one to explain their case to the Senate, and to raise his voice to show what if anything has been done to earn these payments. There are certainly two sides of the case, and we have only one before us. This matter should go before a committee for a hearing to develop all of the facts. It should not be decided in this way.

We are dealing principally with Hawaii and Puerto Rico, two Territorial possessions of the United States which do not have the status of States, which do not have representatives here, even though they have much larger populations than many of the States which do have two Members representing them in this body. I think the Senate should go very slow, even though there is down here in Washington a vicious lobby, and not say, based solely on the statement that these large payments have been made, with no other information whatever before us, that we are going to proceed to cut these payments off, when undoubtedly many American citizens have proceeded in good faith for 2 years to comply with the requirements made by the Department of Agriculture, expecting to earn these payments this year.

Mr. President, I really do not care very seriously what the Senate does. But in view of the fact that I was charged with the responsibility, I felt that I should let the Senate know that there is another side to this question that has not yet been presented to the Senate, that of those who have proceeded for 2 years to do the work and to pay higher wages predicated on the assumption that the Government would make these payments to them.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In connection with the question asked by the Senator from Nevada as to whether the suspension by the President, which he might inaugurate under titles 2 and 3, would suspend the tax also, I think it ought to be said that it would not.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is absolutely correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Title 2 of the Sugar Act provides for the quota provision. Title 3 provides for the conditional payments provisions. Title 4 contains the tax. So that while the President can suspend the quota provisions under title 2, and the conditional payments under title 3, as he did last September, as has been detailed here today, in connection with the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana, he did lift the quota provisions last September, and then reestablished them in January. But he did not in that proclamation, and could not, under this act, suspend the tax these people paid into the Treasury on the sugar they produced.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I do not propose to consume very much of the Senate's time, but I want to clear up a few of the points raised a few minutes ago. When the Sugar Act was considered in 1937 this question of payments was discussed very thoroughly; and during the debate, as the Senator from Wyoming has pointed out, some effort was made to limit the amount to be paid an individual or corporation. Because of those suggestions the Senate adopted a provision in the act whereby a difference is made in the payments to these various producers of sugar, dependent on the quantity of sugar they produce.

On page 10 of the act, in title III, the conditional-payment section, there is a provision that the payment to a sugar producer shall be at the rate of 60 cents per 100 pounds of sugar and that rate is decreased in proportion to the amount of sugar produced by an individual or a corporation.

Any producer who produces up to 500 tons of sugar receives payment at the rate of 60 cents per 100 pounds, but the moment he produces in excess of that amount and up to 1,500 tons his benefit payments are decreased at the rate of 5 cents per 100 pounds. That scale works downward to the point where, if a producer makes more than 30,000 tons of sugar, his payments are cut in half. It is my understanding that in many instances the larger sugar producers receive from 20 to 30 cents lower than the basic rates fixed in the act.

Mr. President, as was pointed out on two or three occasions, we cannot compare the benefit payments that are afforded to the sugar producer with those that are paid to other farmers as soil-conservation payments. We have here a tax that is being collected for the purpose of meeting these benefit payments. The amount that is paid to the sugar producers aggregates but $48,000,000, in round figures, and the amount collected by the Treasury amounts to as much as $60,000,000.

We have had on the statute books provision for a tariff amounting to 1½ cents a pound with regard to sugar that is imported from Cuba, and on all other foreign sugars the amount is 2 cents a pound. Under present conditions, the Cuban Government is given an allowance of 60 cents per 100 pounds because of an existing trade agreement, and the tariff on Cuban sugar, instead of being $1.50 as the law provides, the President has seen fit to reduce to 90 cents a hundred pounds. So there is little difference, insofar as Cuban sugar is concerned, between the amount of the original tariff and the total of this excise tax plus the present tariff rate. In other words, they are practically equal.

Mr. President, I wish to refer to another matter, with particular reference to the question asked by the Senator from Nebraska. A contract now exists between the producers of sugar in my State, in Florida, in the beet States, in Hawaii, in Puerto Rico, on the one hand, and the Federal Government, on the other hand. I wish to point out to the Senate that in my State, for instance, we have been operating under this law for 3 years; and the cane that was planted 3 years ago, and that will be harvested this year, was planted under certain rules and regulations set out by the Department. Those rules and regulations provided that the farmers of my State should pay certain wages for the production of that sugar.

The same situation prevails in the beet-sugar area and, in fact, in every other sugar area. There is a provision in the Sugar Act which gives the Secretary of Agriculture power to fix the wages that are to be paid in Louisiana, the wages that are to be paid in Florida, and the wages that are to be paid in other sections of the United States and its possessions where the farmer receives benefits under this act.

Listen to this, Senators: Under regulations promulgated by the Department of Agriculture, the wages in Louisiana for planting and cultivating cane have been increased 26.3 percent.

For harvesting the rate of pay has been increased from 14 to 19 percent.

In Florida, where the wages were much better than those paid in Louisiana, the increase in wages for planting and cultivating was 6.7 percent. For harvesting it ranges from 7.8 to 8.2 percent.

In the continental beet area also the wages were apparently much better than they were in the South, but the increase in that territory was 6.4 percent.

Listen to the figures for Hawaii: With respect to the cane that was planted in Hawaii 3 years ago, the price of labor to plant that cane was fixed by the Department. The Hawaiian planters were told 3 years ago, "We are going to pay you benefit payments; but in order to make yourself amenable to these payments you will have to increase the price of labor." As a result of the regulation issued by the Department, the labor costs in Hawaii increased 29 percent, so that in the case of all cane that has been planted and cultivated since the Sugar Act went into effect 3 years ago, the farmers had to pay their labor 29 percent more than they usually paid. So, Mr. President, we do have a contract to fulfill.

Take the case of Puerto Rico: The increase in that island over the rate of pay that existed prior to this act is 10.5 percent.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. Am I to understand the Senator to contend that when the Secretary of Agriculture increases the price of labor, there is an obligation upon the Federal Government to pay that increase back to the producer?

Mr. ELLENDER. It so happens that benefit payments will be paid only if farmers conform to the labor provisions of the act as administered by the Department of Agriculture.

Besides that, Mr. President, the act gives to the Secretary the further right to go into my State, where we planted as many as 350,000 acres of cane in the past——

Mr. BYRD. We have a national act—a wage and hour law—which provides for that pay.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator no doubt knows that all forms of agricultural labor are exempted from the Wage and Hour Act. The Sugar Act is the only law on the books that gives the Government authority to regulate agricultural labor. Several years ago, before the Sugar Act went into effect, the Louisiana sugar farmers planted as many as from 310,000 to 350,000 acres of cane; but under this act the planting has been reduced to as low as 234,000 acres in the past 2 or 3 years.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator is not answering my question.

Mr. ELLENDER. Just a moment. I wish to say to the Senator from Virginia, that in Louisiana, if a farmer produces cane on 100 acres of ground it is almost as cheap for him to operate his farm with 125 to 150 acres in cane as it is to operate where 100 acres of cane are planted; and by this curtailment the cost of producing sugar has been further increased. He must have the same equipment and provide for practically the same number of laborers.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator does not contend, then, that by reason of these subsidies there should be a payment back to the producer simply because the Secretary of Agriculture has power to fix wages? If he contends that, then every manufacturer whose wages are increased under the wage and hour law has a claim against the Government on the same principle.

Mr. ELLENDER. I am glad the Senator mentioned our manufacturers. Although tariffs are imposed, ostensibly, to help labor, yet some manufacturers still have sweatshops, hence our labor laws. Let us see what happens to the manufacturer in this country who is benefited by virtue of the tariff. I can see no difference between the imposition of a half-cent processing tax on sugar for the benefit of the sugar farmer and a 40-percent ad valorem tariff to protect a processor of cotton goods, except as to the rate of the tax. I am certain that the Senator will concede that a processing tax and the tariff are one and the same thing. Both are taxes which are ultimately paid by the consumer. The only difference between the two propositions is this: In the case of the 40-percent tariff on manufactured cotton goods, as I am going to point out to the Senate, the American manufacturer collects that tax direct from the consuming public, and in the case of the processing tax, as is the case with respect to sugar, the Government collects it and pays part of it over to the sugar producer for faithful performance of rules and regulations imposed on him, one of the regulations being better wages.

It is true that the manufacturer distributes a portion of it to labor, but not in proportion, as a rule, to benefits received. He should be able to pay better wages by virtue of that tariff protection. But for the tariff, he could not maintain high wage scales. But in the case of sugar the 53 cents a hundred pounds processing tax is collected by the Government, and part of it is given back to the farmer, as I have just indicated.

Mr. BYRD. It is paid by the consumer.

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes; it is all paid by the consumer. That is correct. I ask the Senator from Virginia, Who pays the tariff taxes? Let me point out to the Senator from Virginia a few facts: I hold in my hand a table issued by the United States Tariff Commission entitled "Comparison of Rates of Duty in the Tariff Act of 1930 and in the Tariff Act of 1922." In this table the Commission used the value of dutiable goods that were imported into this country in 1928.

Let us take the case of manufactured cotton goods. In 1928 there were imported into this country from abroad $48,300,609 worth of cotton goods. The tax on that importation was $19,451,364, or 40.27 percent on the value of the goods.

Who got that? The manufacturer did. He was protected because he paid better wages to his workers than foreign manufacturers. I agree with that.

By the same token, what we have done in the Sugar Act is to impose a tax of half a cent on raws and 53 cents a hundred on refined sugars; and with the proceeds of those taxes we pay to the producer the amount provided for in the bill, and in turn, he is forced to pay fixed wages, or else receive no benefits. It is a great pity we do not impose the payment of better wages and more adequate living conditions for labor against those who benefit from high tariffs. We might be able to do away with many labor laws.

Take chemicals, oils, and paints. In 1928 there were imported into this country dutiable chemicals, oils, and paints in the amount of $93,000,000, in round figures. In order to protect the manufacturer of such products in this country the American people paid a tariff on those goods of $27,688,000, or 29 percent of the value of the products.

Take earth, earthenware, and glassware. In 1922, $53,000,000 worth of such products were shipped into this country, and the American people paid a duty on them equal to 53.73 percent of the value of the goods.

Mr. President, I do not intend to detain the Senate very much longer. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD following my remarks the table to which I have just referred.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, for every dollar's worth of manufactured cotton goods that was sold in the United States, the manufacturer received a tariff protection against outside competitors equivalent to 40 percent of the value of the article. And in that way he was able to get just that much more from the American consumer when he sold his product. Just think of that. A 40-percent increase over what he would have received if he were forced to sell on an open market. I ask the Senator, Who does he think had to pay that 40-percent increase? The American consumer, of course, as I have previously indicated. Therefore I argue that it is only fair and just that this half-cent processing tax be collected on sugar, and the revenues thus raised be distributed to the American sugar farmers to enable them to meet competition from foreign shores.

From the exhibit I have placed in the RECORD I cite a number of examples similar to that I have just mentioned, to show how other industries are benefited through tariff protection, the cost of which is borne by the consumer.

There is one other point that I desire to call to the Senator's attention in connection with these sugar benefit payments. I am sure that everyone in this chamber remembers quite vividly what happened to the American consuming public back in the days after the World War. We depended to a great extent on Cuba and other off-shore producing areas, for the major portion of our sugar supply. And when the World War came along, with the resultant dislocation of foreign trade and shortage in sugar stocks, the American consuming public was gypped to the tune of as much as 26 cents per pound for sugar, and it wasn't always that we were fortunate enough to be able to buy it, even at that fancy price. Let us remember those days, and remember also that they may come again. And I urge upon the Members of this body, that we make provision for the time when we may not be able to import sugar into this country from off-shore areas. Then we will have to fall back on continental production. And if we increase our continental production up to 40 percent of our domestic consumptive requirements, as we can very easily do simply by expanding our domestic quotas, we will be serving a dual purpose.

We will be protecting ourselves against a sugar shortage in times of national emergency, and at the same time we will be putting into gainful cultivation thousands of acres of cropland that are now lying idle or that are devoted to crops that are already overproduced in this country. Let us give the American farmers this opportunity to produce as much as possible of the sugar that is consumed in these United States.

It may be that a further reduction in benefit payments should be made to large sugar producers, but now is not the time to do so. Let us postpone action until we write another sugar bill. I hope the Senate votes down the pending amendment.

Mr. PEPPER obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, does the Senator intend to address the Senate?

Mr. PEPPER. Only briefly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was hoping that we could fix a time, not later than 5 o'clock, for voting on the pending amendment.

Mr. PEPPER. I have no objection to voting at 5 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Kentucky that the Senate vote on the pending amendment not later than 5 o'clock? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia heard the remarks which I made a few moments ago, wherein I mentioned the item of benefit payments received by the United States Sugar Corporation; and I expressed my sentiment that it was not proper for any one corporation to have an undue share of the quota of a given area. I, therefore, approach this question not as one who is trying to protect a monopolist, except in a way which is fair. In my State the predecessor of the United States Sugar Corporation was a pioneer in the production of sugar from sugarcane. As a matter of fact, when a disease attacked the sugarcane industry in Louisiana, experimental work was begun in the area near Lake Okeechobee, to try to develop a type of cane which would be resistant to the destructive disease which had almost destroyed the sugarcane industry in the State of Louisiana. From the experimentation carried on there they developed a type of cane which was better in resistance to disease, larger in size, and greater in sugar content than any which had previously been developed there or anywhere else in the cane area. The soil there was happily adapted to the growth of sugarcane. The climate was adapted to it. So a group of people came into the Lake Okeechobee area and started a sugar mill. That sugar mill was opened in 1929. It happened to be my privilege to be present when the mill was opened. It was a new thing for that section, and it attracted much sympathetic appreciation from the people of Florida and of the South.

At first the operation was not successful, because the types of cane had not been perfected to the extent to which they were later perfected, and the corporation went through receivership and was finally reorganized. A number of investors, most of them from the North—one of the prominent ones being Mr. Mott, of the General Motors Corporation, and another being Clarence R. Bitting, a very able operator and businessman—came in and put money into the enterprise. They made such an efficient operation of it that they can now produce sugar within a fraction of a cent as cheaply as it can be produced with cheap labor in Cuba and in other offshore areas. All this time the corporation has gone along legitimately developing a business and conforming to the Government's program in relation to wages, the employment of minors, and in other respects. The corporation has received the benefits which the Government has made available to it. To come in suddenly in the middle of the year, when the sugarcane was planted before January 1 of this year and is now being cultivated, and after the corporation has incurred expenses in anticipation of benefit payments, is not fair.

The Department of Agriculture informs me that the benefit payments to this company have largely represented the difference between profit and loss to the corporation in the production of sugar since it has been engaged in that enterprise. After it has made commitments for the whole year, and has gone along in good faith, complying with the Government's program in the employment of labor, paying the wages which the Secretary of Agriculture requires, and furnishing good housing conditions for the labor employed there—and some Senators here have seen the excellence of the operation—to chop off the benefit payments in the middle of the year because the corporation happens to be receiving a large amount is unfair, even to a corporation.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question regarding the situation in his own State?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. I notice from the figures inserted in the RECORD by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] that the United States Sugar Corporation in Clewiston, Fla., received $430,000. I ask the Senator, first, was not that benefit payment to the United States Sugar Corporation based upon the lowest rate fixed in the statute, namely, 45 cents a hundred?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. BROWN. When the Senator from Virginia gave the figure, he should have pointed out that the United States Sugar Corporation paid a tax of 53½ cents a hundred on exactly the same amount of sugar. So the Government took 53½ cents per hundred out of the United States Sugar Corporation and gave it in return 45 cents a hundred.

Mr. PEPPER. I am very much obliged to the Senator.

Mr. BROWN. In Hawaii 90 percent of the sugar production comes about in this way: The processor and the planter are one and the same corporation. The processing tax is levied, and the benefit payment is made, and in nearly every instance in Hawaii—and certainly in this instance in Florida—the corporation receives less money than it pays in in processing taxes.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the able Senator from Michigan for his observation.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. I should like to be sure that the Senator from Florida entirely concurs in the observation of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. PEPPER. I concur in the factual statement which the Senator made.

Mr. BROWN. To which particular fact does the Senator refer?

Mr. PEPPER. I understand that the Senator is stating the facts.

Mr. MALONEY. I have great respect for the Senator from Michigan, but the Senator from Florida comes from the area to which the Senator from Michigan referred, and I wish to be certain that he concurs in the statement.

Mr. PEPPER. In all fairness to the Senator, the only thing that could be said against the statement of the Senator from Michigan is that while the tax was collected from the corporation in the amount which the Senator specified, a portion of it is probably passed on to the consuming public. That should be said on the other side in order to be completely fair.

Mr. MALONEY. I understand that.

Mr. PEPPER. Otherwise, according to my understanding, the Senator is absolutely correct in the facts he stated.

Mr. MALONEY. That is, the tax payment was greater than the return.

Mr. PEPPER. The tax payment per unit.

Mr. BROWN. That is fixed by the statute. It could not be otherwise.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] has made the point of saving money to the consumer. With respect to the quantity of sugar produced by the United States Sugar Corporation, if every bit of the tax were passed on to the consumer, the cost to the consumer would be less than if the same amount of sugar were produced by an aggregation of small producers, for the very reason which the Senator from Louisiana pointed out a moment ago. Whereas the small producer would have obtained 60 cents a hundred on all his production quantity, the United States Sugar Corporation had a reduced subsidy from the Government because of its larger quantity, which carries a progressively smaller subsidy. So, from the point of view of the consumer, it would be more economical to the consuming public for one corporation to produce all the sugar produced in the United States. So the payment of this large sum to the large producers is not an extra charge to the consuming public.

Mr. President, this corporation now has at least two or three million dollars invested in the enterprise at Clewiston, Fla., on Lake Okeechobee. Its investment ramifies into the whole business life of south Florida. To come along and cut off its activity and destroy a business of this size, as the amendment would practically do, obviously is an unfair way to approach the subject.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] heard me say this afternoon that I am not in favor of one corporation, even in my State, having a monopoly in sugar production; and when we come to enact a sugar law I shall go to the committee and ask the committee to work out some way of limiting the proportion of an area's quota which any one corporation may have. That seems to me to be the fair way of approaching the subject—gradually to reduce any one group's share of the total quota where it is excessive without putting it out of business or confiscating its property. If we approach the question in that way I shall have no objection. I certainly do not want any group to have an unfair advantage. However, I think that the Senator from Virginia wishes unduly to accelerate what may be a helpful program, which would have the effect of bringing about gross unfairness to an enterprise which has contributed much to the science of sugar production and rendered a great service to my State and to the country.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire merely to add that while I am in complete sympathy with the general purpose of the Senator from Virginia in offering this amendment, I cannot see my way clear to support it, because I am convinced that to adopt this amendment would be to destroy the Sugar Act; and if the Sugar Act is destroyed, those who will suffer most will not be the big corporations, which are receiving the large benefits of which the Senator complains, but the small farmer, who is endeavoring to maintain himself upon a small farm. If the large corporations are released from the restrictions which are placed upon them in the Sugar Act, it will be practically impossible for the small farmer to compete with them and to operate at a profit. If the benefit payment is changed, as the Senator proposes to change it, we stand in great danger of losing the very beneficial prohibitions against child labor which are contained in the act. We stand to lose the very beneficial provisions for the payment of farm labor contained in the act; and that danger is so great that it would react upon the small farmer, because if the big corporation is released from these restrictions and is permitted to produce sugar at a cheaper rate, it will be impossible for the American farmer in the cane areas and the beet areas to compete with them. So my opposition to the amendment is based wholly upon a defense of the small man who is running a small farm.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by striking out "$5,000" and inserting "$10,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent is not necessary. The Senator has the right to modify his amendment. The amendment will be so modified.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia, as modified.

Mr. BYRD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAILEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. I am not able to say how he would vote if present. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea." I withhold my vote.

Mr. CHANDLER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS]. I understand that if he were present he would vote "yea." I therefore am at liberty to vote, and I vote "yea."

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WHEELER (when his name was called). On this question, if I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea"; but I have a pair with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] who, if present and voting, would vote "nay." I therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. If present, the Senator from New Jersey would vote "nay." I am not informed how the Senator from South Carolina would vote.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY]. I am informed that the Senator from Michigan, if present, would vote "nay."

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. WAGNER. I have a pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE]. I am not informed how he would vote on this question, so I am not at liberty to vote.

Mr. PEPPER. My colleague [Mr. ANDREWS] has to be in Florida at this time. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is absent from the Senate because of illness in his family.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senators from Missouri [Mr. CLARK and Mr. TRUMAN], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY] are detained on business in Government departments.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is unavoidably detained.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 46, as follows:

So Mr. BYRD's amendment, as modified, was rejected.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert in the bill at the proper place the following:

BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE

The funds continued available (by the Treasury and Post Office Departments Appropriation Act, 1941) during the fiscal year 1941 for refunds of processing and related taxes shall be available during such fiscal year for the payment, hereby authorized under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to any person who raised or produced and marketed hogs for slaughter on which there was levied, collected, or paid a processing tax under the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (of 1933), or his legal representative, of so much of such tax as was in fact borne by such person: Provided, That the amount of such tax borne by such person with respect to any particular quantity of hogs shall be deemed to be an amount equal to the processing tax payable upon an equal quantity of hogs at the time such particular quantity of hogs was marketed minus any amount by which the spread between the average hog product value at Chicago of such particular quantity of hogs during the month in which they were marketed and the average hog price at Chicago of such particular quantity of hogs during such month was less than the amount of such processing tax plus 65 cents for each hundredweight of such particular quantity of hogs: Provided further, That the rate of processing tax levied, collected, or paid with respect to any particular quantity of hogs marketed by a claimant under the provisions of this paragraph shall be deemed to be the rate prevailing on the day following the day upon which such hogs were marketed by such claimant: Provided further, That any claim for payment under the provisions of this paragraph shall be filed with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue after the date of enactment of this act and prior to July 1, 1941, and proof upon such claim must be submitted prior to December 31, 1941: Provided further, That the allowance or disallowance by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of any claim filed under the provisions of this paragraph shall be reviewable in the same manner and to the same extent that the allowance or disallowance of a claim filed under the provisions of title VII of the Revenue Act of 1936 is reviewable under section 906 of such act: Provided further, That account sales kept by a vendor, or a vendee, or by an agent of either, with respect to a particular quantity of hogs shall be accepted as proof of a claim for payment under the provisions of this paragraph with respect to such quantity of hogs: Provided further, That no part of any payment made under this paragraph in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with obtaining such payment, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding; and any person violating the provisions of this proviso shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. FRAZIER obtained the floor.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I rise to make a point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is clearly legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield for that purpose?

Mr. FRAZIER. Does the Senator from Georgia make a point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield for that purpose?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I desire to debate the question before the Chair gives his decision. It is debatable, is it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has made the ruling. He could not very well take it back.

Mr. FRAZIER. I have entered a motion to suspend the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well. The Senator's motion is in order.

Mr. FRAZIER. I wish to call the motion up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion offered by the Senator from North Dakota to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI. The Senator from North Dakota is recognized.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, during the first session of this Congress a joint resolution was introduced, Senate Joint Resolution 66, which provided for refunding, to farmers who could prove that they had paid it, the processing tax paid on hogs, by receiving a lower price for the hogs. The Treasury Department and the Department of Agriculture admitted that this processing tax on hogs was paid in whole or in part by the farmer in practically all cases. The joint resolution provided for the refund where the farmer could prove that he did pay the tax, either in whole or in part, through receiving a lower price on his hogs.

The joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate, and a subcommittee was appointed, which held hearings. The subcommittee reported back to the full committee, and the full committee discussed the measure and reported it to the Senate, and it was placed on the calendar. On the 1st day of August of last year the joint resolution was passed by the Senate without any objection.

We have a precedent for this method of handling such a matter. Senate bill 2601 was introduced in 1938, providing for a refund to cotton farmers and others of processing taxes which had been paid on cotton, and a refund of the processing taxes paid on tobacco, and the penalty tax on potatoes under the Potato Control Act. The bill passed the Senate and went to the House, but was held up in the committee in the House, just as the joint resolution to which I have referred has been held up. When the deficiency appropriation bill was before the Senate in 1938, the bill was attached to that appropriation bill and passed.

In this case no new money is to be appropriated. In the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill recently passed there was included a carry-over of a little over $31,000,000 for refunds of processing taxes, and this would come under that carry-over.

No one knows just how much money it would take to refund the processing taxes to the hog raisers, but we believe it would be only a small amount, because they have to prove their cases, and farmers generally do not keep books. Probably it would not amount to more than five or ten million dollars at the outside, so it can well come within the $31,000,000 carried over in the Treasury and Post Office Department appropriation bill this year.

Refunds have been made to the packers and to the mills which paid processing taxes on cotton and tobacco and the other products affected, and we believe the farmers who paid the processing tax on hogs are entitled to a refund, just as the others were. So I hope the rule may be suspended in order that the amendment can be voted on, and I hope the amendment will be agreed to. I feel that the farmers are entitled to it, and, as I stated, we have the precedent. The bill for the refunding of the processing taxes on cotton was handled in just this way.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I have no sort of objection to the refund of any tax improperly paid by anyone in this country, but I am obliged to take issue with the Senator in the statement that this is similar to any cotton-tax refund. There has been no refund of a cotton tax except in the amount of a million and a half dollars representing taxes paid directly into the Treasury, money received by the Treasury of the United States. Of course, when the law under which those taxes were paid was construed by the Court to be unconstitutional, the taxes were refundable.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator has confined his remarks to cotton. The Senator from North Dakota referred to other products, tobacco and other commodities, the taxes on which were refunded. The Senator knows what I have in mind, and I will ask him to explain that also.

Mr. BANKHEAD. All the taxes which have been refunded, so far as I know, including the taxes on cotton and tobacco, and rice, I believe, were taxes actually paid into the Treasury of the United States, money which in good conscience did not belong to the Government, under a decision of the court, and therefore, under the rulings of the court, as recognized in the action on the deficiency bill referred to by the Senator, the taxes were refunded.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The act to which the Senator refers, the deficiency act, carrying the appropriation, was specifically limited to refunds of taxes which had actually been paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is absolutely true. So far as the other taxes are concerned, there may be some equity involved in them, but I do not think the statement should go unchallenged that the amendment comes under the same principle which applied to the taxes on cotton, because that is absolutely not borne out by the record.

This amendment, as I understand, is based upon the contention that the processors under the Agricultural Adjustment Act did not pass on to the consumer the tax on hogs but took it out of the price. That is the basis for the proposed action. It is a debatable question whether they took it all out, whether they took part of it out, or whether they took any of it out. Certainly the owners of hogs paid no processing tax. All processing taxes relating in any way to hogs or to corn were paid by the packers. The packers paid the tax into the Treasury. If anyone is entitled to a refund, it seems to me it would be the packers and not the producers of the hogs, because the hog producers did not pay anything. What part of the market price, if any, was deducted by the packers is a question, of course, which necessarily must be gone into very fully.

I do not know whether they took any of it. Certainly in the cases of wheat and cotton they did not take it out, but it is claimed they did as to hogs. So there is no analogy at all between the hog program, covered by the Senator's amendment, and what was done in the case of any other commodity—wheat, cotton, rice, or tobacco. There is no analogy at all between the claims presented in this amendment and those involving the other commodities.

Mr. President, I wanted to make that clear, so that the assertion that, judging this program by others, the raisers of hogs should have refunds, is not supported by the facts or by the record.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I cannot agree with the Senator from Alabama. I hold in my hand a Treasury Department statement, issued by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, entitled "An Analysis of the Effect of the Processing Taxes Levied Under the Agricultural Adjustment Act," and on page 18, there is a paragraph dealing with the effects of the hog-processing tax on producers. It reads:

> It has been indicated that retail prices of hog products in 1934 and 1935 were no higher than they would have been if the tax had not been in effect, that processors' margins were widened by about the amount of the tax, and that retailers' margins were not affected by the tax. It follows that live-hog prices were lower by about the amount of the processing tax than they would have been if no tax had been imposed but all other conditions had been the same.

In the same pamphlet appears a table indicating just how the processing taxes on hogs can be adjusted. Of course, it is provided in the amendment that the farmer must prove his case. So there is a similarity. It has been the policy of the Government since time immemorial to refund any tax collected illegally.

Mr. BANKHEAD. As I pointed out, Mr. President, under the corn-hog part of the Agricultural Adjustment Act the processing tax is paid by the packers. After the Supreme Court annulled that provision, Congress passed a law requiring that anyone claiming a refund of the tax based upon the unconstitutionality of the act would be obliged to satisfy the Internal Revenue Commissioner that the tax had not been passed on to the consumer, and had not been taken from the producer, the farmer.

As a matter of fact, I think the records will disclose, although I do not have them available at the moment, that the processors, although they paid a large amount of processing taxes, did not present any claim, certainly not to any very great extent, for refund of the taxes they had paid, and I assume it was because they were unable to make the proof that they had not taken the amount of the tax from the producers.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. Some processors of hogs have filed claims, and those claims are now pending in the process of adjustment in the Bureau.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If this amendment is agreed to, will there be a double refund?

Mr. GEORGE. I think so. I know that one of the big packing companies has pending now claims amounting to approximately $12,000,000. They have been in the process of adjustment for some time.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. GURNEY. This whole provision was thoroughly considered by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry when they reported favorably the bill which passed the Senate on August 3 last year, and in the report of the committee they came to the conclusion that the producer did pay the tax, not the consumer. They also came to the conclusion that the processor has not been benefited by the tax.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The only answer I can make to that is that I am a very regular attendant upon the meetings of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and if the full committee had any hearings on this subject I knew nothing about it.

Mr. GURNEY. A committee report was made on it, and the proposal which the Senator from North Dakota now offers is an amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I do not wish to delay the Senate unduly. I should like to see the hog processors, who are farmers, protected, if they have been treated unfairly. But I do not think that an appropriation bill is any more a measure in which to settle this question than it would be the appropriate measure in which to take care of the sugar question, which was voted on awhile ago. The question is a controversial one. The amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota does not fix any amount. He goes into the subject of averages, average prices, and all that sort of thing, not providing for refund of any taxes paid, not to fix the matter upon a tax basis, even, but apparently to legislate on the theory that some amount has been deducted by the producers of the hogs on account of the taxes; and an arbitrary basis or average is fixed in the amendment to cover that.

Every Senator knows I am in sympathy with any claim which has any merit to it, when presented by any group of farmers in this country, yet I feel that my position on this matter should be just the same as that which I took a while ago when I voted on the sugar question, as sympathetic as I am with the sugar farmers. The bill before us is an appropriation bill, and in my judgment this amendment ought not to be adopted.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. There is merit in this claim.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is possibly true, Mr. President. I do not deny that.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. And while it is true the packers paid the processing tax, and had to pay it, it did not come out of the packers.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Suppose they got it back now, which they may do under the law?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The processing tax came out of the farmer in the reduction of price, as was well understood at the time. The usual differential between the price of hogs in Canada and in the United States, which has followed along a general line for years, was changed immediately. The packer did not pay the tax out of the price for which he sold pork. We who were on the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and who studied the pork prices at that time, all agreed that it was evident on the face of the record that the packer was not paying up to the price of hogs plus the processing tax. The farmer did not get it in the price of the hogs. Of course, the packer took it out of the price of the hog and paid it into the Treasury. Those who followed the record at the time agreed that the amount of the processing tax was taken out of the price paid to the farmer for the hog.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I wish to make one short statement on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota. The amendment definitely states that the farmer must prove his claim. The amendment requires no appropriation. The refunds of the processing tax which might be made on proven claims would come out of a fund which is already available.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, in regard to the statement of the Senator from Alabama that there is no precedent for a measure of this kind being attached to an appropriation bill, in the case of the tax penalties levied under the Bankhead Cotton Control Act, the Kerr-Smith Tobacco Act, and the Potato Control Act of 1938 an amendment covering those refunds was attached to the deficiency bill in 1938 when the bill was pending before the House Committee on Agriculture, and the bill was passed in that way.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator realizes and will admit that the only amounts covered by that bill were refunds of money actually paid into the Treasury by farmers.

Mr. FRAZIER. These amounts have actually been paid.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, no.

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes; they have. I have a table prepared by the Department of Agriculture giving the prices of hogs by months during the years when the processing tax was in effect. According to the figures, for 3 years prior to the time the processing tax was in effect the spread between the price of hogs and the price of hog commodities was 65 cents per hundred pounds.

In September 1934 the value of hog products was $9.90 a hundred. The hog price in Chicago was $6.99. The spread between the two was $2.91. Before the hog processing tax went into effect it was only 65 cents a hundred. The tax at that time was $2.25. The spread was $2.91.

Take practically any month shown in the report. In August 1935 the price of hog products in Chicago was $14.65 a hundred. The hog price in Chicago was $11.54. The spread was $3.11 a hundred, whereas before the tax went into effect it was only 65 cents a hundred. The processing tax was $2.25. The farmer paid $3.61 and received back $3.25. If the farmers are not entitled to this refund—provided they can prove their claims—I do not know who would be entitled to it. The difference is worked out by months, and from the difference is deducted the amount of 65 cents, which was the average tax. So the farmer paid the balance, whatever it was. If he can prove his case——

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. He must prove his case to the satisfaction of the collector of internal revenue. What can be wrong with that? If he can prove his case he has a claim. If he cannot prove his case he has no claim.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I wish to remind the Senator that this is an appropriation bill.

Mr. FRAZIER. No new money is appropriated.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I might go along with the proposal if it were embodied in a separate bill setting up the machinery to ascertain the loss and present the claims, but this is an appropriation bill.

Mr. FRAZIER. No new money is appropriated. The cost is taken care of by the carry-over of the money which was appropriated for the refund of processing taxes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] to suspend the rules. [Putting the question.] It is apparent that two-thirds of the Senators present and voting have not voted in the affirmative. Therefore the motion is rejected.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 82, line 14, before the period, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Provided further, That no part of the amount herein appropriated shall be available for making total conditional payments in excess of $50,000 to any one person, firm, partnership, or corporation in connection with the 1940 sugar program.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, is the Senator willing to yield to me to see if we can agree on a time to vote on this amendment?

Mr. BYRD. So far as I am concerned it can be voted on immediately.

Mr. President, the amendment is identical with the amendment which the Senate rejected, except that the limit is $50,000 instead of $10,000. I have no desire to consume the time of the Senate, but I do think that I am entitled to a yea-and-nay vote. If I may have a yea-and-nay vote, I shall not take up any further time.

I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. WAGNER. On this question I have a pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE]. I am not informed as to how he would vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. McKELLAR (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], who is absent. I am informed that if he were present and voting he would vote as I have voted, so I permit my vote to stand.

Mr. CHANDLER (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote as I have voted, so I permit my vote to stand.

Mr. ELLENDER. My colleague [Mr. OVERTON] has a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am advised that if present and voting the Senator from Virginia would vote "yea" and my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is absent from the Senate because of illness in his family.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senators from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY and Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senators from Missouri [Mr. CLARK and Mr. TRUMAN], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is unavoidably detained.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY]. If present, the Senator from Michigan would vote "nay," and the Senator from North Carolina would vote "yea."

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. If present, the Senator from Ohio would vote "nay," and the Senator from Montana would vote "yea."

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. If present, the Senator from New Jersey would vote "nay." I am not informed how the Senator from South Carolina would vote.

Mr. PEPPER. My colleague [Mr. ANDREWS] is detained in Florida. If he were present he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 37, as follows:

YEAS—27

So Mr. BYRD's amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I have heretofore had printed, and which is lying on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 25, line 15, after the word "Industry", it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Provided further, That not to exceed $5,000 of the amount herein made available may be used to purchase and supply beef to the Seminole Indians of the Big Cypress Swamp area, Hendry County, Fla., during the time that deer infested with cattle ticks are being removed from said area and until such area is restocked with deer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSSELL. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference with the House on the matters in disagreement, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on behalf of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. SMITH, Mr. NYE, and Mr. MCNARY conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. RUSSELL. I also ask unanimous consent that the clerks be permitted to correct the totals in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 407.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 407) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance, without amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. I desire to ask the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Kentucky if it is the intention to proceed with the joint resolution tomorrow.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not. I propose to move a recess until Monday.

Mr. PITTMAN. I wanted to know that because I shall have to be absent tomorrow.

At this time, with the consent of the Senator from Mississippi, I give notice that on Monday, following the address of the Senator from Mississippi, with the consent of the Senate, I shall address the Senate on the amendment which is now lying on the table, which I offered, and which was referred to the Committee on Finance, which amendment requires ratification by the Senate of treaties made under this measure as other treaties are ratified.

I feel that I should mention this matter because I voted against the extension of the act 2 years ago on that ground. I have been interviewed in the press, stating that I intended to support such an amendment. I have talked with a number of members of the Foreign Relations Committee, which committee is generally concerned in such questions; and at the earliest possible moment I desire to present the subject, so that there may be an opportunity for its study by the committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is not desired that we proceed with the joint resolution today. Therefore I am about to move that the Senate take a recess until Monday.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, as I understand, I have the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will depend upon the Presiding Officer on Monday. The Chair thinks there will be no difficulty about the Senator from Mississippi obtaining recognition. He hardly ever has difficulty in doing so.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER, as in executive session, laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. If there is nothing further, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, March 25, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

SENATE

MONDAY, MARCH 25, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, March 4, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who at this glorious Eastertide hast turned the shadow of death into the morning, causing the hearts of men to exult with joy: We bless Thee for all that conspires to make us sure of Thee—the gracious sunshine, the stir of springtime, yea, the secret thrill that vibrates through the air from far-off days with its message of the risen Lord—for Thou hast conquered our last enemy, and hast revealed to us that in all pain there lies the promise of redemption.

Be with those now walking through the vale where awaits the shadow that is feared by man. Comfort them, dear Lord, with the knowledge that death is only a shadow where the glory from an endless world shines through, beyond the mind's imagining, beyond the heart's desire; for eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him. In the name of our risen Lord we ask it. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Friday, March 22, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	Lee	Russell
Ashurst	Ellender	Lodge	Schwartz
Austin	Frazier	Lucas	Schwellenbach
Bankhead	George	Lundeen	Sheppard
Barbour	Gibson	McCarran	Shipstead
Barkley	Gillette	McKellar	Slattery
Bilbo	Green	McNary	Smith
Bone	Guffey	Maloney	Stewart
Bridges	Gurney	Mead	Thomas, Idaho
Bulow	Hale	Miller	Thomas, Okla.
Byrd	Harrison	Minton	Thomas, Utah
Byrnes	Hatch	Murray	Tobey
Capper	Hayden	Neely	Townsend
Caraway	Herring	Norris	Tydings
Chandler	Holman	Nye	Vandenberg
Chavez	Holt	O'Mahoney	Van Nuys
Clark, Idaho	Hughes	Overton	Wagner
Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Calif.	Pepper	Walsh
Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Pittman	White
Davis	King	Reed	Wiley
Donahey	La Follette	Reynolds

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is absent because of illness in his family.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] are detained from the Senate on public business.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] is unavoidably detained.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

AMENDMENT OF TRANSPORTATION ACT—DISPOSITION OF SECURITIES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the Transportation Act of 1920, as amended, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

PERISHABLE AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES ACT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act of 1930, as amended, and for other purposes, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

INSURANCE OF WORLD WAR VETERANS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to define the limitations of section 408, War Risk Insurance Act, as amended, and section 305, World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, and for other purposes, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

COMPACT FOR DIVISION OF WATERS OF THE YELLOWSTONE RIVER

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1759) granting the consent of Congress to the States of Montana, North Dakota, and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement for division of the waters of the Yellowstone River.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, ask for a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. WHEELER, and Mr. FRAZIER conferees on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution of the South Jersey Port Commission, Camden, N. J., protesting against ratification of the St. Lawrence seaway treaty, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WALSH presented resolutions of Webster Square Post, No. 13, of Worcester, and Governor Mayhew Post, No. 242, of Oak Bluffs, both of the American Legion in the State of Massachusetts, favoring the location of a general hospital and diagnostic center in Boston, Mass., or the vicinity thereof, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. TYDINGS presented resolutions of the Ninth Ward Republican Association and the Ladies' Auxiliary, Department of Maryland, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, of Baltimore, Md., protesting against the entry of tropically refined sugar into the United States and also a reduction of the quantity of cane sugar refined in this country, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of members of Local Union No. 90, American Flint Glass Workers' Union of North America, of Baltimore, Md., praying for the imposition of higher tariff duties on glassware, and also that the control of all tariff legislation be retained in the Congress, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7421) to provide for terms of the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Arkansas at Fayetteville, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1339) thereon.

Mr. HATCH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7015) to reenact section 259 of the Judicial Code, relating to the traveling and subsistence expenses of circuit and district judges, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1340) thereon.

Mr. TYDINGS, from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 4776. An act to amend section 6 of the Organic Act of Alaska (Rept. No. 1342); and

H. R. 7612. An act for the transfer of funds to the town of Wrangell, Alaska (Rept. No. 1341).

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GIBSON:

S. 3657. A bill authorizing the appointment and retirement of John Tomlingson as a second lieutenant, United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT—AMENDMENT

Mr. O'MAHONEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 407) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PREVENTION OF COLLISIONS AND REGULATION OF MOTORBOAT EQUIPMENT

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, Calendar No. 728, Senate bill 2259, to amend laws for preventing collisions of vessels, to regulate equipment of certain motorboats on the navigable waters of the United States, and for other purposes, which is the same as Calendar No. 898, a House bill on the same subject, has been on the calendar since June last. It is a Department of Commerce measure. The Department and I have been in disagreement on the subject throughout these months. We have now come to a complete agreement. I am offering two amendments to the Senate bill, which I ask unanimous consent to be considered as pending if and when the Senate reaches Calendar No. 728 on a call of the calendar. I also ask that a statement regarding the amendments be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendments will be received, considered as proposed, and be printed; and, without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement referred to is as follows:

AMENDMENTS TO MOTORBOAT BILL, S. 2259

Strike out subsection (a) of section 3, lines 16 to 19 on page 2; reletter the succeeding subsections (b), (c), (d), and (e) of section 3 to read (a), (b), (c), and (d), respectively.

Amend the first sentence of the new subsection (a) of section 3 on lines 19 and 20, page 2, to read as follows:

"(a) Every motorboat of classes A and 1 shall carry the following lights:"

In its present form S. 2259 states in section 3 (a) that boats of less than 16 feet in length (class A) are only required to show a bright white light mounted on the bow or stern to show around the horizon.

Boats in class A should be required to carry the combination red and green running lights as well as a white light aft.

The purpose of the motorboat bill is to promote safety afloat. The danger factor is greatly increased at night, and proper lighting is the most important means of preventing accidents.

Between sunset and sunrise, accurate calculation of a course of another craft can only be determined by the red and green running lights. This is the basic reason for these lights and the means of directional relations between boats. These facts remain the same regardless of the size of a boat and, therefore, regulations governing the use of these lights should be uniform.

Motorboats in class A have a range of speed from less than 5 miles per hour to over 45 miles per hour. The operators of these boats have the same responsibility of safety as motorboats of greater length and more speed and should be required to carry the combination red and green lights for their own protection as well as for the safety of other craft. The law requires motorboats to give way or hold a course and speed when approaching other vessels at certain angles. The only method of determining these angles is by the red and green running lights. With only a white light showing, it is not only difficult to determine the boat's course but hard to distinguish the white light from shore lights. If the class A boats are permitted to operate without the red and green running lights, other boats should be relieved of the "privileged and burdened" requirements when approaching them.

As an example of uniformity, aircraft regulations require planes operating between sunset and sunrise to carry the red and green lights on their wing tips and a white light on the tail. This law is uniform and no distinction is made between light planes or airliners. Uniformity is also found in motor vehicle lighting equipment.

Strike out the new subsection (c) of section 3, commencing on line 24, page 3, and running through line 4, page 4, and substitute in lieu thereof a subsection (c) to read as follows:

"(c) Motorboats of classes 2 and 3, when propelled by sail and machinery, or by sail alone, shall carry the colored side lights, suitably screened, but not the white lights prescribed by this section: Provided, however, That motorboats of all classes, when so propelled, shall carry, ready at hand, a lantern or flashlight showing a white light which shall be exhibited in sufficient time to avert collision: Provided further, That motorboats of classes A and 1, when so propelled, shall not be required to carry the combined lantern prescribed by subsection (a) of this section."

S. 2259 in its present form stipulates that motoboats, in classes A and 1 when propelled by sail and machinery, or by sail alone, shall carry, ready at hand, a lantern showing a white light which shall be exhibited in sufficient time to avert collision.

For the added safety of sailing craft and other boats operating at night, all boats in this class should be required to carry and exhibit the white light.

Due to the nature of a sailing vessel, it is difficult to maneuver and, therefore, dependent to a great extent on making its presence known to other approaching craft at night. This is true of small and large boats alike and, therefore, all boats of this type should be required to carry a lantern or a flashlight to be exhibited in sufficient time to avert a collision.

The word "flashlight" is added to conform with modern equipment.

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, in Indiana the League of Women Voters has been giving intensive study to the reciprocal-trade agreements. After consideration of the problem they have endorsed the proposal to extend the authority of the Executive to continue the program. In their study they became convinced that the reciprocal-trade agreements had been beneficial to the country and especially to Indiana, a State of diversified interests. A well-written, concise article by Freda L. Bridenstine, showing how the trade agreements had affected Indiana was published in the Indiana Woman Voter, January 1940. I ask unanimous consent that this splendid article may be incorporated in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Indiana Woman Voter for January 1940]

INDIANA AND THE TRADE-AGREEMENTS PROGRAM

One of the most vital issues before the present Congress is that regarding the reenactment of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. Feeling on the subject is running high. Extravagant claims are made by its advocates. Its opponents contend it is ruining the country. As voters, we should know some facts about this matter:

1. What is it?
2. Has it benefited the country as a whole?
3. How has it affected Indiana?

It is generally conceded that tariff making in the United States has been an unscientific, log-rolling procedure. Also, most students of international affairs believe that a vigorous revival of world trade would have a healthy effect on the national economy of most countries and would, therefore, greatly aid the cause of world peace. For these reasons, and for the more immediate purpose of restoring a fast-diminishing market for American agriculture and industry, the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act was passed June 12, 1934, effective for 3 years, and extended in 1937 for another 3-year period. Under it the Department of State may negotiate trade agreements with foreign countries without the consent of the Senate, altering tariffs to the extent of 50 percent, providing no article is taken off or put on the free list. Trade agreements have been concluded with 21 countries, including 8 European nations (of which Great Britain is the most important), 11 with American republics, and with Turkey and Canada.

Between 1929 and 1933, the year before the Trade Agreements Act was passed, the exports of the United States declined from $5,241,000,000 to $1,675,000,000. What is more disturbing, our trade fell off proportionately more than did the international trade of the world as a whole. Exports from the United States during 1934–35 averaged $2,200,000,000. For the years 1937–38 they averaged $3,200,000,000. It is not claimed that this increase was due entirely to the trade-agreements program, but it is significant that during 1937–38, exports to countries with which trade agreements were in operation averaged 61.2 percent greater than during the 1934–35 period, which is substantially a preagreeemnt period since only one agreement was in effect for the entire year of 1935. Over the same period, our exports to non-trade-agreement countries averaged only 37.9 percent greater. It is also true that the trade-agreement countries have increased their purchases of American products more than their purchases from other countries.

Indiana has a diversity of agricultural products and a great deal of manufacturing, and foreign demand plays an important part in the successful marketing of many of its products of farm and factory. In 1929 Indiana's foreign exports amounted to $74,000,000. By 1932 this figure had fallen to seventeen million, causing a violent dislocation in the State's economy.

It is impossible to allocate exactly the share of any one State in the increase in the foreign trade of the United States as a whole under the Trade Agreements Act. But by studying the movement of the products Indiana produces and manufactures and noting the concessions granted them in the various agreements, we may find an indication of the gain to Indiana.

The following facts about Indiana's eight leading industries are enlightening. In this table, by a concession we mean a provision by a foreign country which facilitates the export of United States goods to that country, such as the removal, lowering, or binding at the present level of a foreign duty on an American export or the fixing or increasing of the present quota which a nation will accept of a given American product. The year 1938 has been chosen with which to compare the 1931–35 and 1926–30 averages for total United States exports, as being a representative year to give a picture of the importance of the trade-agreements program in restoring foreign markets to United States products. Our exports in 1937 were greater than in 1938 and the exports for the first 11 months of 1939 also show an increase over 1938. The 1938 figures, however, show an increase over the low average for the years 1931–35 in every case except for meat products and also show a general return toward the high average for the years 1926–30.

1. Iron and steel industries: Indiana ranks third in the output of steel and rolling mills, with only Ohio and Pennsylvania outranking her.

In 1937, Indiana's output was about 11 percent of the total for the United States.

Decrease in Indiana's exports, 1929–32 was 78 percent ($6,866,000 to $1,512,000).

Concessions have been obtained in 15 of the 21 agreements.

Total United States exports of iron and steel mill products: 1938	$184,300,000
Average for 1931–35	62,900,000
Average for 1926–30	170,700,000

2. Automotive products: Indiana ranks third in the United States as a producer of bodies and parts for motor vehicles. This industry is the third most important in the state.

In 1937, Indiana's output was over 6 percent of the total for the United States.

Decrease in Indiana's exports, 1929–32 was 83 percent ($26,000,000 to $4,300,000).

Concessions on automobiles and automotive products have been obtained in 17 of 21 agreements.

Total United States exports of automotive products: 1938	$270,400,000
Average for 1931–35	146,500,000
Average for 1926–30	406,200,000

3. Agricultural machinery and implements: Indiana ranks third in the production of agricultural machinery and implements.

In 1937, Indiana's output was over 4 percent of the total for the United States.

Decrease in Indiana's exports, 1929–32 was 93 percent ($4,500,000 to $300,000).

Concessions have been obtained in at least nine agreements.

Total United States exports of agricultural machinery: 1938	$75,400,000
Average for 1931–35	26,800,000
Average for 1926–30	109,900,000

4. Industrial machinery—(cranes and dredging, excavating and road-building machinery, machine-shop products, etc): Indiana ranks sixth in production of conveying and construction machinery and machine-shop products.

In 1937 Indiana's output was over 5 percent of the total for the United States.

Decrease in Indiana's exports, 1929–32, was 90 percent ($7,800,000 to $840,000).

Concessions have been obtained in at least 12 agreements.

Total United States exports of industrial machinery 1938	$269,900,000
Average for 1931–35	94,700,000
Average for 1926–30	214,400,000

5. Electrical machinery (including radios, phonographs, and refrigerators): Indiana ranks seventh in the production of electrical machinery, apparatus, and supplies; fourth in the production of radios and phonographs; and second only to Michigan in the production of refrigerators.

In 1937 Indiana's output of electrical machinery, including radios, was 7 percent of the total for the United States, while the production of refrigerators was 15 percent of the United States total.

Decrease in Indiana's exports, 1929–32, was 46 percent ($1,657,000 to $900,000).

Concessions have been obtained in 16 of 21 agreements.

Total United States exports of electrical machinery 1938	$102,200,000
Average for 1931–35	62,600,000
Average for 1926–30	102,700,000

6. Meat products: Indiana is one of the first five States in production of hogs.

In 1937 Indiana's output of meat products was almost 3 percent of the total for the United States.

Decrease in Indiana's exports of lard, hams, shoulders, and other meat products in 1929–32 was 73 percent ($10,100,000 to $2,800,000).

Concessions on ham, bacon, pork lard, and a variety of other meat products have been obtained in 17 of 21 agreements. Cuban imports of lard increased between 1933–38 from $500,000 to $4,000,000.

Total United States exports of meat products: 1938, $48,000,000; average for 1931–35, $65,700,000; average for 1926–30, $194,100,000.

7. Canned fruits and vegetables: Indiana ranks sixth in the United States in the canning industry as a whole, leads in the processing of tomatoes and baked beans, and is third in the canning of corn. Beans, peas, and kraut are also canned in large quantities.

In 1937 Indiana's output was over 5 percent of the total for the United States.

Concessions have been obtained on fresh, dried, or canned vegetables in 17 of 21 agreements and on various canned fruits in 20 of 21 agreements.

Total United States exports of canned fruits: 1938, $23,200,000; average for 1931–35, $19,600,000; average for 1926–30, $25,600,000.

8. Chemicals and allied products: Indiana ranks third in drug production.

In 1937, Indiana's total output of chemicals and allied products was valued at $65,863,159.

Decrease in Indiana's exports, 1929–32, was 70 percent ($2,900,000 to $850,000).

Concessions have been obtained in at least 15 of 21 agreements.

Total United States exports of chemicals, 1938	$128,900,000
Average for 1931–35	91,800,000
Average for 1926–30	137,400,000

Favorable concessions to the United States have also been granted by agreement countries on the following products which Indiana produces in considerable quantities: Glass, wood and wood products, textile manufactures, rubber products, musical instruments, paper and paper products.

It would seem, therefore, that the reciprocal-trade agreements have helped to reopen foreign markets for our surplus products. But these are "reciprocal" agreements. In order to sell, we must buy. In return for concessions obtained from other countries on hundreds of American agricultural and industrial items the United States has granted carefully considered concessions on certain products of which the other countries concerned are the chief or important sources of our imports and which are necessary to our economic well-being. Let it be remembered that a very small percentage of the imports on which concessions are granted are competitive with American products and most of these are fixed by quotas. It is estimated that one-fifth of the raw material used in the United States comes from foreign sources. A large proportion of our imports is used in factories and makes exports possible. For example, we are almost entirely dependent on our imports for aluminum, tin, nickel, silk, vegetable fiber, hides, skins, dying and tanning material, cacao beans, paper stock, and rubber. The census of manufactures for 1935 shows that over 10,000 in Indiana were engaged in factories working imported raw materials and another 10,000 factory jobs were dependent on the secondary processing of imported materials.

We may, therefore, conclude that through the trade agreements excessive restrictions on the sale of our products in foreign countries are being gradually reduced and equality of treatment is being substituted for trade discriminations. In this way the program is aiding American producers and exporters to recover and expand their foreign markets, and in this expansion Indiana shares.

N. B.—The above figures and tables have been compiled after a study of the following publications:

EDITORIALS FROM BALTIMORE SUN AND WASHINGTON DAILY NEWS ON RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENTS

[Mr. BILBO asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Baltimore Sun of March 25, 1940, and an editorial from the Washington Daily News of the same date, on the subject of the reciprocal-trade agreements, which appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 407) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, if I should discuss every phase of the subject matter before us, ranging from statistical data on imports and exports to and from agreement countries, as well as nonagreement countries, and their effects—beneficial or injurious—upon our own peoples and industries, to the highly controversial questions of constitutionality, congressional approval, and the most-favored-nation principle; and should I attempt to answer the many untenable and spurious arguments made by some of the opposition to the continuation of the trade-agreements program, I would burden too greatly your patience and utilize too much of the Senate's time. We all appreciate the time that is necessarily required and should be taken for a reasonable discussion of the vital phases of this question, but it is far too serious from every standpoint for partisanship to influence our judgment or blur our vision. We are still trying to meet an emergency. The reason that impelled us to enact this legislation as an emergency measure in 1934, and again in 1937, exist now to a far greater degree than in those years.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I do not want to intrude with a question if it will interfere with the Senator's plan to go forward without interruption. Does the Senator desire to yield at this time or at any time?

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, I will yield to the Senator, but I should much prefer to do so after I shall have finished. My preliminary remarks on the joint resolution will be very brief.

Mr. McNARY. Very well. I have been interested in what the Senator and others have said on this subject. I desired to ask the Senator what the emergency is, but I will omit that inquiry at present and make it later.

Mr. HARRISON. I may say to the Senator that it is apparent that the world is at war today, and, in my opinion, the present emergency is greater than the one which existed in 1934. We are still trying to meet that emergency. What we are striving to do, in the tragic circumstances of today, is to continue that trade policy, which has been helpful in the enlargement of our international trade and beneficial to our own people, and which has sustained and promoted our good relations with peoples everywhere. So, in the consideration of this question, let us, sirs, do so in the spirit of broad statesmanship, and adopt the continuation of this reciprocal-trade policy which, in my opinion, the country believes the wisest and most constructive. That is evidenced by the overwhelming majority of the Republican press of the country, by the overwhelming majority of the Democratic press of the country, and by the resolutions passed by numerous business and civic organizations, many of which have been placed in the hearings both of the House and of the Senate.

I may say to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and to the other Senators on the other side who honor me with their presence, that the principle of reciprocity is not of Democratic origin. If one or the other of the two major political parties deserves the greater credit for the idea, it is the Republican Party. Nearly three decades ago, in the first session of Congress that I attended, in common with nearly all of my colleagues of Democratic faith in the House of Representatives, I followed the leadership of the able and unselfish President, William Howard Taft, in his espousal of the Canadian reciprocity agreement. I did it, not as a Democrat but as an American who believed in the principle and felt that it was constructively wise, through mutual concessions, to increase our trade and promote a better relationship between the two countries. At that time so strong was President Taft for the principle of reciprocity that he called the Sixty-second Congress in extraordinary session to enact his program. It also had the unqualified endorsement and enthusiastic support of Theodore Roosevelt. Indeed, on January 12, 1911, Theodore Roosevelt, then the editor of the Outlook, wrote President Taft, in which letter he said, in part:

> It seems to me that what you propose to do with Canada is admirable from every standpoint.

At the close of my remarks I shall ask leave to insert in the RECORD the very illuminating correspondence which took place at that time between Mr. Taft and Mr. Roosevelt.

But, Mr. President, other great leaders of the Republican Party, nearly two decades before that event—and that was in 1911—entertained and championed the reciprocity principle. Blaine, McKinley, and Harrison all believed in the principle of reciprocal-trade arrangements.

I may say that Senators Frye and Hale—the latter the father of one of the Senators from Maine now occupying a seat in this body—entertained the same views with reference to the principles of reciprocity; and the fact has been called to my attention that Senator Frye was the grandfather of another distinguished Senator from Maine.

As far back as 1892 we find that the Republican national platform, under the heading "Triumph of reciprocity," employed this language:

> We point to the success of the Republican policy of reciprocity, under which our export trade has vastly increased and new and enlarged markets have been opened for the products of our farms and workshops. We remind the people of the bitter opposition of the Democratic Party to this practical business measure and claim that, executed by a Republican administration, our present laws will eventually give us control of the trade of the world.

In 1896, under the large heading of "Reciprocity," we find the Republican national platform preaching the doctrine:

> We believe the repeal of the reciprocity arrangements negotiated by the last Republican administration was a national calamity, and we demand their renewal and extension on such terms as will equalize our trade with other nations, remove the restrictions which now obstruct the sale of American products in the ports of other countries, and secure enlarged markets for the products of our farms, forests, and factories.

Again, in 1904, the Republicans in their national platform boasted:

> We have extended widely our foreign markets, and we believe in the adoption of all practicable methods for their further extension, including commercial reciprocity, wherever reciprocal arrangements can be effected consistent with the principles of protection and without injury to American agriculture, American labor, or any American industry.

The kindly McKinley, in his last speech, on that tragic day at Buffalo, shortly before his assassination, uttered these broad, patriotic, thoroughly American, and constructive words:

> The period of exclusiveness is past. The extension of our trade and commerce is the pressing problem. Commercial wars are unprofitable. A policy of good will and friendly trade relations will prevent reprisals. Reciprocity treaties are in harmony with the spirit of the time; measures of retaliation are not.

Oh, I know that in the course of this debate some of the opposition will attempt to differentiate the pending resolution from the kind of reciprocity championed by these great Republicans. Hairsplitting differences will be discovered. Sirs, you may deceive yourselves, but the country will not be deceived. The people will know that this joint resolution embodies the same principle and philsophy of reciprocity that ran like a golden thread through the principle and philosophy of reciprocity which these distinguished Republicans and leaders of the past advocated.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator a question. Does he desire to have us wait until he has concluded?

Mr. HARRISON. I prefer to wait, but I always like to have the Senator from Michigan ask me a question.

Mr. VANDENBERG. When the earlier reciprocal arrangements involved a specific legislative formula, when often there were even written into the law the precise items which could be touched and the spread of the duties which could be changed, I wonder whether the Senator thinks it is hairsplitting to differentiate between that sort of delegation of power under specifications and the present delegation of power under no specifications whatever. Is that hairsplitting?

Mr. HARRISON. Let me give the Senator a little history of the reciprocity agreements.

Back in 1890, I believe it was, Mr. Blaine was advocating reciprocity. The then Senator Hale offered a provision to the effect that, since we were permitting certain products from South and Central America to come into the United States free of duty, namely, sugar, wool, leather, and some others, specifying them, the countries from which those products came should do the right thing by us, and permit products from this country to go into their countries free of duty. Such agreements did not have to come back to the Senate for ratification.

In 1897 another provision was written into the law which gave the Executive the right to make treaties with foreign countries involving the principle of reciprocity and mutual concessions, which treaties were to be ratified by the Senate. These were the Kasson treaties, some 12 of which, I believe, were negotiated, 11 of which were sent to the Senate, and which remained before the Senate for ratification for 5 years. McKinley, in light of this experience, did not bother to submit the twelfth for ratification because he knew that it, too, would be killed.

The negotiation of those treaties gained absolutely nothing; it was not possible to get them ratified. There appeared the old logrolling process, the same kind as that referred to by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] in 1932, and by President Hoover in 1932 when he vetoed a bill dealing with the tariff question.

In 1922, when the Fordney-McCumber bill was being considered, reciprocity was included in that bill as it came from the House. Section 301 provided for trade agreements subject to congressional approval. As though recognizing the political impracticality of this provision, it also added another reciprocity provision, section 303, a true reciprocal trade agreement measure differing from the present bill in that the rates could be reduced by 20 percent rather than lowered or raised by 50 percent as now provided.

I have before me what was stated at that time by a great friend of ours, a very able man, Mr. Longworth, who was then a member of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives. On July 12, 1921, he said:

> I believe also that it [the tariff] should be sufficiently flexible in some cases to enable us to give some countries certain advantages in their market.
> Such a consummation, I concede, is difficult of attainment, and has never been hitherto satisfactorily worked out. Reciprocity has never been a success in this country and, in my judgment, never will be, requiring, as it may, the action not only of the Senate but of the House, and precipitating a general tariff discussion upon each occasion.

Thus spoke Mr. Longworth.

And while provisions for reciprocity treaties have been made in this bill I have little expectation, as I have already indicated, that many, if any, will be satisfactorily negotiated by this administration.

He was referring to the agreements which would have to come back to Congress for approval. Mr. Longworth continued:

There is, however, a provision in this bill under which trade agreements may be made which will inure both to our advantage and to the advantage of certain other nations. * * * I refer to the provision which authorizes the President to reduce the conventional duties in this bill by 20 percent in the case of any foreign nation with whom we may negotiate trade agreements in return for our receiving the benefits of their minimum tariffs on certain of our commodities. I conceive of nothing which will have a more beneficial effect upon the enlargement and retention of our export trade than inclusion in this bill of section 303 of title 3, which makes of this a bargaining tariff. * * * If other nations know that the President of the United States has it in his power to give them certain special advantages in our market in return for certain special advantages in theirs, I have every confidence that instead of discrimination against our exports there will be encouragement of them by many countries and that an era of good feeling in our international commerce will be inaugurated, unexampled in our history.

The statement which I read applied to section 303, which provided for reductions in our duties through agreements embodying mutual concessions, which did not require congressional approval, and that is what Mr. Longworth said about it.

Mr. President, as I have said, the country will not be deceived by resort to the argument that this is not the reciprocity of McKinley, Blaine, Hale, Frye, Harrison, Theodore Roosevelt, and Taft. The pending measure embodies the same principle and philosophy of reciprocity that ran like a golden thread through the principle and philosophy of reciprocity which the distinguished leaders of the past, the great men to whom I have referred, advocated.

Oh, there may be a difference in detail and a difference in phraseology, but the point I want to make is that they believed as we believe, as McKinley so well stated in that same speech at Buffalo wherein he advocated sensible trade agreements, and said:

A system which provides a mutual exchange of commodities is manifestly essential to the continued and healthful growth of our export trade.

What we are trying to do is to strengthen our economic position and enlarge our foreign trade through the exchange of mutual concessions. It may be said that one or more of these great leaders, while advocating reciprocal-trade agreements and mutual concessions to build up international trade, also advocated the carrying out of this policy without injury to American industry or American labor. With this principle I am in thorough accord. But, sirs, if one thing has been demonstrated above everything else, it is that the Interdepartmental Trade Agreements Committee, now sitting in Washington, which has negotiated these trade agreements, has zealously guarded American industry and labor from any injury resulting from the exchange of these mutually advantageous concessions.

That this policy has been successfully carried out is well attested by the fact that in many instances when witnesses appeared before us they complained not of what had been done but rather of their fear of something that might happen in the future. In this connection it is interesting to quote a colloquy between myself and Mr. Marshall, secretary of the National Wool Growers Association:

The CHAIRMAN. Well, they have done pretty good so far as the wool people are concerned? They have not affected it?

In these trade agreements we made no reduction in the tariff on raw wool. We did make certain reductions in the tariffs on wool fabrics, waste, and rags.

I continue the quotation:

Mr. MARSHALL. They have been pretty good only to us. I wish we could feel assured of as good treatment in the future.

So it had not hurt them; they were simply fearful of the future. Mr. President, those who want too much are generally fearful.

In similar vein, Mr. Besse, president of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, who appeared before our committee, was asked the question by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]:

So it comes down to this, it shows that you have not been hurt yet, but you are afraid you will be hurt?

Mr. Besse replied:

Substantially that is what I am saying.

We find also that Mr. Arnold, speaking for a farmers and stockmen's group, made the following statement before the committee:

I am not here to complain of what has been done. My fears * * * relate solely to what may be done.

Mr. Holman, a representative of the National Cooperative Milk Producers Federation, said to the committee:

We are more concerned with the possible future of the trade-agreements program than with the present or the past.

When we are dealing in trade-agreements programs with agricultural countries, if they trade with us at all on that basis, they insist upon concessions on our competitive products. It is at that point that the dairy farmers have a great fear. It is for the future.

Up to the present time we cannot say that we have suffered greatly as to these prices.

And so, running through the whole hearing, we find not injury, but fear.

Mr. W. L. Monro, president of the American Window Glass Co., who appeared before the committee and criticized the concessions in the Czechoslovakian agreement, which is now out of the window and does not exist, admitted that the domestic production of window glass had progressively increased during the years the trade agreements have been in effect. Production of window glass in the United States had increased from 4,398,000 boxes in 1932 until in 1939 the total production rose to 11,321,000 boxes—an increase of 200 percent. It was admitted, too, that some of our domestic-glass manufacturers—the Libbey-Owens Glass Co., for instance—had shown some of the largest profits and in the financial reports of this year were in prosperous condition. Certainly they have not declined during the life of these trade agreements. I was very much interested to learn of the statement Mr. Monro made in his report in 1938 to the membership of the American Tariff League—I need not tell the Senators on the other side what the American Tariff League is—and I congratulate him on this statement, in which he paid tribute to Mr. Hull and to those associated with him for their fairness and efficiency in the negotiation of these trade agreements. I presume the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] heard that statement before the committee.

Mr. Monro, as president of the American Tariff League, said:

I will also stress the fact that in carrying out the trade-agreement policy by Mr. Hull great credit should be given to the fact that there has been no suspicion of political influence regarding the reduction of duties on any of the articles placed on the reciprocal-trade list. I believe that everyone who has had occasion to contact the staff that makes up the schedules must admit that, regardless of whether we approve of the policy or not, the agreements were prepared solely with a viewpoint of endeavoring to increase foreign trade with the least injury to domestic production.

When I questioned Mr. Monro as to the accuracy of the statement that he was reported to have made to the American Tariff League, from which I have quoted, he said:

I made that statement, and I would be the last one to intimate that Mr. Hull was susceptible to any influence of any politician or anybody interested in the formation of his reciprocal-trade agreements. I do not agree with his theory, however, upon which he is working.

You on that side, as well as those on this side, recall the methods employed in writing the thousands of rates on innumerable items in the Fordney-McCumber tariff law in 1922. The sky was the limit, and for the most part rates finally adopted were based on no scientific study or factual basis. Representative Fordney, with whom I served and whom I personally admired, frequently and without reluctance stated openly and boastfully that no one was a higher protectionist than he, and was annoyed at the more modest demands infrequently requested by an exceptionally few representatives of certain special interests. The men who wrote that tariff monstrosity—permit me to use that expression—became habitual in putting the question to those seeking higher rates, "How much do you want?" not "What do you need?"

As exorbitant and excessive in far too many instances as were the rates in the Fordney-McCumber law, within less than 8 years the same interests and the same influences drove through the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act. Those of you who were here then, and those of you who have come since, remember the tremendous opposition throughout this country to the enactment of that law. Our people never became quite so aroused as when they observed what was about to happen in the writing of that tariff legislation. Our isolationist trade policy and the injurious effects that inevitably would flow from it caused 1,028 of the leading economists of this country, Republicans, Democrats, and Independents, to petition the Congress to delay the economic blow, and pointed to the baneful effects that would result from such a policy. With unerring accuracy they prophesied that the enactment of such a law would influence retaliation and reprisals throughout the world. They saw with prophetic vision foreign countries preparing themselves, through cartels, bargaining arrangements, and every contrivance that human mind could conceive, to destroy our international trade. We know that 39 foreign nations promptly protested formally to our State Department. Why, the press of this country, hardly without exception, condemned the threatened policy, and business overnight became panicky, capital started its flight into foreign countries, and there, in the hope of saving a part of the products formerly sold in foreign countries, was invested in foreign industries, giving employment to foreign labor and adding to our own unemployment problem. Our export trade fell from 5.2 billion in 1929 to 1.6 billion in 1932. Our railroads applied to the courts for receiverships.

Our ships tied up at their docks and were useless. The millions of our former employed found themselves in bread lines. It was not long until the economic collapse was complete, and we were faced with the most tragic period in the history of our country. I would not say that the high rates in the Hawley-Smoot tariff law were the only or the major cause of the economic collapse of the country, but certainly the adoption of that policy played a very large part in creating that economic disorder.

Confronted with this emergency the administration in 1934 adopted the policy of negotiating trade agreements which, through the exchange of mutually beneficial concessions, would find for our goods necessary foreign outlets which were so vital to rebuilding the economic structure of our country. In this act Congress adopted a policy of—

> Expanding foreign markets for the products of the United States * * * for "various branches of American production which require and are capable of developing such outlets by affording corresponding market opportunities for foreign products in the United States."

And the opportunities in our market were to be offered "in accordance with the characteristics and needs of various branches of American production."

The administration of this policy was left to the Executive, and he formulated a method which has admirably served the purpose of the Congress and has not exposed the country to the uncertainties and fears which have usually attended a general revision of the tariff laws. General tariff revision, with all of its uncertainty—and Senators know this is true—has always acted as a deterrent to business. The average American citizen believes in the orderly adjustment of things without abrupt or revolutionary changes.

And so, it was in 1934 that we presented this program. Under it, 22 agreements have been negotiated. Throughout the negotiation of each and every trade agreement, orderly methods have been employed and the most careful study made by experts thoroughly competent, wholly unselfish, and without any political consideration in the service they have rendered. So satisfying to the American people and to Congress was this policy that in 1937 it was continued for a further 3-year period. It is our viewpoint that in the exigencies of the hour and the conditions of the world today, as an emergency measure, the program should be continued for another 3 years. There may have been some mistakes made in negotiating these trade agreements. They may not all be perfect, but following a careful study of the administration of the program since its inauguration in 1934, and after reading all the hearings before the House Ways and Means Committee, and listening to all who came before the Finance Committee of the Senate, it is my opinion that those charged with the responsibility of negotiating these trade agreements have performed a magnificent job and are deserving of the highest appreciation of the American people. I do not suppose that everybody is satisfied. Some will pick a flaw in this or that agreement. However, I feel that excellent progress has been made and that marked improvement has taken place in the administration of the program since its inception in 1934. If there were good reasons for the adoption of the trade-agreements program in the beginning—and certainly few will deny that it was constructive to adopt this policy in 1934 because of the economic dislocation of business everywhere—and if it was wise to continue the act in 1937, how much greater is the cause to continue the policy at this time for another 3 years.

The opposition in the House and some witnesses before our committee advanced the thought that with half the world at war, with millions of men in arms and more millions of citizens in the war-infested areas engaged in the production of implements and necessities of war, when peace comes this country will be flooded with foreign products, and newer and higher tariff rates will be needed. That to me is a spurious argument. I prefer to envision peace some day; and when it comes, as it assuredly will, those in foreign countries who are now engaged in the manufacture of implements and necessities of war—and it is said they number 80,000,000—and the twenty-odd million who are tramping the battlefields or bivouacking in their camps will assuredly return to their peacetime occupations and peaceful pursuits. When they do, factories forced by the war to close will again reopen, fields which remained idle will again be tilled, and with only exhausted treasuries to supply their needs, foreign nations will dedicate their energies toward increasing their productions and selling their products where they can. In those circumstances, with foreign fields and factories vying with each other and with us in the sale of their surplus products, without a definite program to pursue or a constructive policy to follow, if a trade war should ensue our country might suffer from an economic collapse.

We have given the countries of the world a sound reciprocal-trade policy. We have given them an opportunity to trade with us and with each other on just and wisely established principles. Such principles will be the greatest influence toward preserving and promoting rational international trade and the maintenance and preservation of peace. If we as a great government turn our backs upon the policy written into the joint resolution—a policy which we inaugurated—we shall throw to the winds an opportunity in the future to help the peoples of the world along rational, unselfish, and just principles of international trade. By doing so we shall invite our foreign neighbors at the close of this war to begin another one, which will be a trade war. Let no one be deceived as to the magnitude of such a trade war. Will anyone deny that the result would be injurious to our own economy? Why not keep what we have? Why desert a constructive program which has accomplished beneficial results under circumstances which have not at all times been encouraging? Perhaps the program has not accomplished everything we had hoped for, but when we consider the dark background against which the policy was inaugurated 6 years ago we must admit that marked improvement has taken place. Let us consider our country's position when this present war shall come to an end. Let us through the continuation of this program extend a helping and cooperative hand toward the goal of economic stability and peace among nations. This program should be a beacon light to the war-torn foreign nations—a light which, when peace does come, will guide them along the paths of better international economic relationships.

Mr. President, earlier in my remarks I referred to the correspondence between President Taft and Theodore Roosevelt with regard to the proposed reciprocity arrangement with Canada. I ask that the correspondence be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the correspondence was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Confidential]

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 10, 1911.

MY DEAR THEODORE: Just at present I am in the midst of reciprocity matters and it would gratify me a great deal to talk over with you this issue. I have, as you have known, always been a low-tariff and downward-revision man, and the reason why I favored the last tariff bill and praised it as the best one we had ever had was: That the consideration of it on its passage and the efforts of those who defended it afterward to show that it was a downward revision were all a concession by the Republican Party that downward revision was necessary, and that the rule upheld by Shaw and Cannon and other stand-patters of the orthodox type that no tariff could be too high, because what you needed was a Chinese wall, had been departed from. Now, the probability is that we shall reach an agreement with our Canadian friends by which all natural products—cereals, lumber, dairy products, fruits, meats, and cattle—shall enter both countries free, and that we shall get a revision—not as heavy a one as I would like but a substantial one, and equivalent certainly to the French reciprocity treaty and probably more—on manufactures.

The truth is that the minute we adopt in convention the proposal that our tariff should be measured by the difference in the cost of production we necessarily adopt a rule which would lead us straight to reciprocity in natural products with Canada, because the conditions of the two countries are so similar that there is substantially no difference in the cost of production. Possibly labor is slightly lower in some parts of Canada than in the United States, but it is also higher in some parts, and the adoption of free trade would rapidly increase the cost of labor in those parts where it is cheaper in Canada, so that the conditions would be the same.

It might at first have a tendency to reduce the cost of food products somewhat; it would certainly make the reservoir much greater and prevent fluctuations. Meantime the amount of Canadian products we would take would produce a current of business between western Canada and the United States that would make Canada only an adjunct of the United States. It would transfer all their important business to Chicago and New York, with their bank credits and everything else, and it would increase greatly the demand of Canada for our manufactures. I see this is an argument against reciprocity made in Canada, and I think it is a good one.

The proposition is to make an arrangement by which we shall present to both Houses of Congress an identical bill and pass it as an agreement for joint legislation. In this way we would avoid the necessity for two-thirds in the Senate and would secure at once the consent of the House, which in tariff matters is generally regarded as necessary, at any rate. This will cause a great commotion, I presume. It will be unpopular in New York because of certain lumber-manufacturing interests and the dairy interests. It will be unpopular in Minnesota because of wheat; but, on the other hand, free lumber will be popular in some places, and as it includes free paper and free wood pulp we may count on the fairly good support of the press.

This letter, of course, I must ask you to regard as confidential, though I would be glad to have you discuss with your colleagues on the outlook for such a proposition and should be glad to hear from you as to your judgment of it.

I think it may break the Republican Party for a while. As Elihu Root said when I talked with him yesterday, it may be an entering wedge against protection, although it is not inconsistent with the principle of protection as we laid it down in Chicago. Of course, it will be said against it that we are taking agriculture and making it suffer first before we tackle wool and cotton. The bill is not likely to pass the present Congress, and before the new Congress comes together I think I shall be able to make some recommendations as to the wool and cotton schedules and present a problem to the Democrats which they are not likely to find an easy one. At least it will show the hypocrisy of some people. Of course, this is not ground whatever for introducing and pressing such a measure. I believe it to be right, and if it leads, on the other hand, to a reduction in wool and cotton manufactures to the lowest figures and to what is a real measure of the difference in the cost of production, so much the better.

I shall be glad to hear from you as soon as you conveniently can write on this subject, because the matter is just at hand, and it is quite likely that within 10 days we shall reach an agreement.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM H. TAFT.

OFFICE OF THEODORE ROOSEVELT,
THE OUTLOOK, 284 FOURTH AVENUE,
New York, January 12, 1911.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I at once took in your letter and went over it with the Outlook editors.

It seems to me that what you propose to do with Canada is admirable from every standpoint. I firmly believe in free trade with Canada for both economic and political reasons. As you say, labor cost is substantially the same in the two countries, so that you are amply justified by the platform. Whether Canada will accept such reciprocity I do not know, but it is greatly to your credit to make the effort. It may damage the Republican Party for a while, but it will surely benefit the party in the end, especially if you tackle wool, cotton, etc., as you propose.

Ever yours,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Mr. PITTMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may ask the Senator from Mississippi a question?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. ELLENDER. When the President suspended the sugar quotas on September 11, 1939, the existing trade agreement between this country and Cuba provided, in effect, for the restoration of the $1.50 tariff on sugar, did it not?

Mr. HARRISON. That is my understanding.

Mr. ELLENDER. Let us assume that the Congress does not pass a sugar bill at this session, but permits the present law to expire, would the tariff on sugar remain at 90 cents or would it be restored to $1.50? Can the Senator tell us?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator means, if no sugar quota bill were passed at this session?

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct.

Mr. HARRISON. The duties in the Hawley-Smoot Act would become effective without any quota arrangement.

Mr. ELLENDER. Is there any provision in the law to prevent the State Department from entering into an agreement whereby, let us say, 2,000,000 tons of sugar from Cuba could come in at 90 cents should we fail to enact a sugar-quota law?

Mr. HARRISON. There is nothing to prevent the State Department from undertaking new negotiations with Cuba for the purpose of making a new trade agreement.

Mr. ELLENDER. And the sugar tariff could be cut in half by such agreement?

Mr. HARRISON. By agreement the rate could be reduced by 50 percent or by a lesser amount. However, I am certain that any rate made in a new agreement would give full consideration to such factors as price and domestic production, which might call for a reduction in duty, accompanied by either a customs quota or an absolute quota. I think the relationship between the duty and quota in the present agreement indicates the importance attached to such factors.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	Lee	Russell
Ashurst	Ellender	Lodge	Schwartz
Austin	Frazier	Lucas	Schwellenbach
Bankhead	George	Lundeen	Sheppard

Donahey	La Follette	Reynolds

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8202) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. CANNON, Mr. TARVER, and Mr. LAMBERTSON were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 407) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the joint resolution, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 2. Effective on the date of enactment of this act, section 2 of such act of June 12, 1934, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) No foreign-trade agreement hereafter entered into under section 1 of this act shall take effect until the Senate of the United States shall have advised and consented to its ratification, two-thirds of the Senators present concurring."

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the act which it is proposed that Congress shall extend for a period of 3 years grants to the President the power to make tariff laws through agreements with foreign governments without the necessity of such agreements being advised and consented to by the United States Senate, two-thirds of those Senators present concurring. The Congress certainly cannot authorize the President of the United States to violate the Constitution with regard to laws made through agreements with foreign governments. The tariff laws that the President makes will be found only in such agreements. The agreements set out the law, and the agreements are to become the law. It is impossible to find in the statute any evidence or even indication as to what the law will be as made by the President in these agreements.

There are only three ways to make laws under the Constitution, namely, by congressional act, by treaties, and by amendment to the Constitution. The Constitution with reference to treaties in article II, section 2, provides:

The President shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur.

In article VI it is further provided that—

All treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land.

I think it is well at this time to understand exactly what the Supreme Court has construed a treaty to be.

The proponents of the joint resolution have cited five cases in which the Supreme Court held that certain agreements were not treaties; but they have not cited a single decision showing what the Supreme Court has held is a treaty. The cases which they have cited are, undoubtedly, correct; they related to agreements such as under the act of 1890, whereby the Congress authorized certain articles on the free list to be put on the dutiable list, providing if some foreign government was not treating our exports fairly; but the articles which could be transferred from the free list to the dutiable list were definitely named; the duties that should apply to those articles were also specified; and there was nothing the President of the United States could do under that act except ask certain governments if they would give concessions on certain articles, and, if they would, then he could issue a proclamation leaving the articles on the free list instead of transferring them to the dutiable list. Of course, that was not a treaty in any sense of the word.

Agreements similar to those to which reference is made as being held to be legal and not to be treaties were also provided for under the Dingley Tariff Act of 1897. There again there was exactly the same situation. Certain articles were placed on the dutiable list at 45 percent ad valorem; the President was allowed to reduce that rate to 15 percent ad valorem on those particular articles, providing concessions were granted by foreign countries. In such a case France granted certain concessions on certain articles. The result was that there was put into effect the 15-percent ad valorem rate as to France.

There was no discretion lodged anywhere; there was no agreement for any particular length of time; the arrangement was not binding on either government; they could change it any day they desired to do so. The proponents of the joint resolution have not as yet in any of their arguments or briefs given any definition of what constitutes a treaty under the Constitution of the United States.

I wish to read a few excerpts from opinions defining what a treaty is, so as to indicate how they apply to the proposed authority to be given to the President. The Supreme Court has time and again defined what constitutes a treaty. The Supreme Court in the case of Altman & Co. v. United States (224 U. S. 583, 600), in its opinion with regard to treaties said:

Generally, a treaty is defined as "a compact between two or more independent nations with a view to the public welfare" (2 Bouvier's Dictionary, 1136). True, that under the Constitution of the United States the treaty-making power is vested in the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and a treaty must be ratified by a two-thirds vote of that body (art. II, sec. 2), and treaties are declared to be the supreme law of the land (art. VI).

In Fourteen Diamond Rings v. United States (183 U. S. 176, 182), Mr. Justice Brown in a concurring opinion stated:

A treaty in its legal sense is defined by Bouvier as "a compact made between two or more independent nations with a view to the public welfare" (2 Law Dictionary 1136), and by Webster as "an agreement, league, or contract between two or more nations or sovereigns, formally signed by commissioners properly authorized, and solemnly ratified by the sovereigns or the supreme power of each state." In its essence it is a contract. It differs from an ordinary contract only in being an agreement between independent states instead of private parties.

There have been cases in which the President, in carrying out specific statutory law, was authorized to make agreements which were held not to have the elements of a treaty. I thoroughly agree with that view as maintained in the Altman case and in the case of Field against Clark. The question that must be determined by the Senate is whether the agreements which the President is authorized to enter into with foreign governments making tariff laws possess the elements of a treaty.

Now let us apply the definitions of a treaty as laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States; namely, that it is a contract entered into between foreign governments affecting public welfare; that it is the same as a private contract, as the Court says:

It differs from an ordinary contract only in being an agreement between independent states instead of private parties (Fourteen Diamond Rings v. U. S., 183 U. S. 176, 182).

Under the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act the President is authorized to enter into a contract for a period of at least 3 years fixing the tariff rates on any and all articles imported into the United States. It is a contract that we are both legally and morally obligated to maintain for a period of at least 3 years. The agreement may be extended indefinitely at the will of the President and the other contracting party.

Is there any doubt that it affects public welfare? The framers of the Constitution of the United States, considering the power of taxation of supreme importance to the United States, provided in article I, section 7, that—

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills.

Do such agreements affect public welfare less than our labor conventions? Do these agreements affect public welfare less than our treaties with the American republics relative to cultural relations and exchange of professors and students? And yet it was deemed necessary to have these conventions and treaties ratified by the United States Senate. The Congress has authorized our Government to enter into radio conventions with various governments, and yet it has been deemed necessary to have these conventions ratified by the United States Senate.

I am interested, of course, in the unconstitutional delegation of legislative authority to the President so far as making tariffs is concerned. That should be of more interest to the House of Representatives, in which is vested the power of initiating all revenue laws. That body may be willing to abandon to the President its functions of initiating revenue laws. It may be willing to surrender to the President the authority not only to initiate revenue laws but to consummate them. Congress has not either the legal or the moral authority, however, in such delegation to the President to repeal the constitutional provision with regard to treaties and deprive the United States Senate of its constitutional functions with relation to treaties. The President does not require any authority from Congress to make treaties. The Constitution provides for that. The President could make all the proposed agreements provided for in the act without any instructions from Congress, but they would be treaties, and they would not be effective until submitted to the United States Senate and advised and consented to in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution in reference to agreements with foreign governments.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I am very much interested in what the Senator from Nevada has been saying, and the point he makes seems to me to be so perfectly clear that I am unable to understand why anyone should seem to have any doubt about it at all. Yet there seems to be in the minds of those who are attempting to call these agreements treaties a great deal of confusion concerning the very question which the Senator is developing.

I appeared before the Finance Committee to argue for an amendment to require congressional approval by congressional act, and at the conclusion of my argument the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Finance, who a moment ago completed his introductory remarks, offered for the record a citation from the case of Holmes against Jennison, which was mentioned in the House by Representative ROBERTSON, and he was evidently of the opinion that it demonstrated that these trade agreements are not treaties. Representative ROBERTSON, of Virginia, cited this case because the opinion had been written by Chief Justice Taney, which seemed to him to give particular weight to the conclusion of the Chief Justice. I agree that it does give particular weight, but, inasmuch as it harmonizes exactly with what the Senator from Nevada has been saying, may I venture to read it into the RECORD here with the Senator's consent?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The chairman, as I have said, asked that following my testimony there should be entered the remarks by Hon. A. WILLIS ROBERTSON, and these were the remarks:

> Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, the following quotation from the case of Holmes v. Jennison (14 Pet. 540, at p. 571), in which the opinion was delivered by the famous Justice Taney in 1840, should settle the question that treaties and agreements are different, and the latter are not to be ratified by the Senate:

With that, of course, there is no disagreement.

Mr. PITTMAN. Not at all.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The quotation from Chief Justice Taney is as follows:

> In the very next clause of the Constitution, the States are forbidden to enter into any "agreement" or "compact" with a foreign nation; and as these words could not have been idly or superfluously used by the framers of the Constitution, they cannot be construed to mean the same thing with the word "treaty."

With that, of course, there can be no dispute.

> A few extracts from an eminent writer on the laws of nations, showing the manner in which these different words have been used, and the different meanings sometimes attached to them, will, perhaps, contribute to explain the reason for using them all in the Constitution; and will prove that the most comprehensive terms were employed in prohibiting to the States all intercourse with foreign nations. Vattel, page 192, section 152, says: "A treaty, in Latin foedus, is a compact made with a view to the public welfare, by the superior power, either for perpetuity, or for a considerable time."
> Section 153: "The compacts which have temporary matters for their object, are called agreements, conventions, and pactions. They are accomplished by one single act, and not by repeated acts. These compacts are perfected in their execution once for all; treaties receive a successive execution, whose duration equals that of the treaty."

That quotation, cited by Chief Justice Taney, seems to me to bear out exactly what the Senator from Nevada has been contending. He has pointed out the fact that these so-called trade agreements, which everybody normally refers to as trade treaties, are for a period of 3 years. They call for continuous action. They affect the daily lives of the people. They deal with public welfare. They are not at all in the category of conventions or agreements or pactions, so clearly defined by the authority from whom Chief Justice Taney quoted.

Mr. PITTMAN. I thank the Senator. The agreement there ratified was to carry out statutory law, exactly as in the case of Field against Clark. I am going to read, later on, the proclamation of President McKinley in the case of Altman & Co. against United States to show the agreement. There was nothing the President was authorized to do except to put in force and effect one of two acts; that was all. He put in force and effect the 15-percent tax on statuary and other merchandise. Appellant claimed that he was entitled to the benefit of the 15-percent tax on statuary, as described in the proclamation. The Court said:

> No; you are not, because the act itself says that the statuary must be the work of an artist, and in the proclamation and agreement those who framed it forgot to put in that language, "the work of an artist."

So Altman paid 45 percent. In other words, the rate was governed by the act, not by the agreement. The agreement was only administrative.

There is not a case to which the proponents of this measure can refer that would sustain the right of a President to make an agreement such as is provided in the act which is sought to be extended. I will go further than that. I will say that no Congress has ever proposed such a thing as this act. Even the late Oscar Underwood, the ideal of the free-trade Democrats, who for years adorned the Ways and Means Committee of the House, who wrote the Underwood Tariff Act of 1913, would not stand for a thing like this. He did not do so. He had a proposal for reciprocity treaties, but what was the proposal? That they should be subject to approval by Congress.

I do not agree with that method. I say if the law is to be embraced in an agreement, and nowhere else, then it is a treaty, because it has the force and effect of law. No agreement on earth has the force and effect of law except a treaty. The Constitution provides the methods by which a law may be made. It may be made by Congress, with the approval of the President, or by passing a measure over his veto or disapproval, or it may be made by treaty, or it may be made by amending the Constitution of the United States. Those are the only ways in which laws may be made; and every delegation of authority which has been sustained by the courts has been sustained on the ground that only administrative power was conferred; that there were such definite standards and guides, and so forth, that it was really the act of Congress which the President executed, and not the discretionary act of the President. The proponents of the legislation cannot find anything else to save their lives.

May I further emphasize that statement? I am satisfied that there is in this act an unlawful delegation of legislative authority. I do not think any standards or guides or restraints are placed upon the President in making these laws that have ever been anticipated by any decision of the Congress of the United States with regard to legal delegation of the legislative power to an executive. As I have said, I know of no Congress that has ever proposed such a thing. In the flexible-tariff case the Court sustained the act. It sustained it on the ground that the standards and guides were definitely laid down. I must say that I disagreed with the Court, but that is neither here nor there. That is the law. The act stated that the tariff should be based upon the difference in cost of production abroad and at home, and that the Tariff Board should find the facts as to whether there had been an increased cost or a decreased cost in a foreign country, or an increased cost or a decreased cost here, and, by percentages, should raise or lower the tariff as those facts were disclosed.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should be glad to have the Senator discuss the question whether there are powers under the Constitution which create functions which are so important that they are called primary functions, and cannot be delegated at all, even though Congress tries to lay down a standard? Are there such powers?

Mr. PITTMAN. I think there are such powers. I think the provision of the Constitution which requires that revenue bills shall be initiated in the House is fundamental. It is so fundamental that Thomas Jefferson, in writing from Paris to Madison, said:

> I am delighted that you have placed in the hands of the popular body the control over taxation.

He said:

> While many features of that I do not like, the question of taxation is the most important of all under our Government. Therefore I approve of it.

It must be admitted that the negotiation of tariff laws is at least in the President under the act. No tariffs are laid down for him to put into force and effect. We cannot determine what will be the law until the President makes an agreement. We do not know whether he will raise or lower tariffs, because it lies within his power to raise or lower. He may impose an embargo. That lies within his power.

There are certain fundamental principles involved in this question. I think that the power of taxation is one of the most fundamental principles in the Constitution. Thomas Jefferson thought so, and Madison thought so, because they realized that the power of taxation carries with it the power of destruction, and that no one should be trusted with it except the direct representatives of the people who are to be taxed.

Is there any doubt in the mind of any Senator that we would be delegating the initiation of tariffs to the President? If he changed existing law in the amount of 1 cent he would be making law, and he would be repealing an old law. It is not possible to repeal an old law except by passing another law.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not desire to interrupt the Senator, but I am very much interested in his argument, and I should like to ask him whether it is his contention that trade agreements are treaties, absolutely, and that therefore they must be ratified by the Senate by a two-thirds vote, even though made under the provisions of the Trade Agreements Act?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is my position.

Mr. GEORGE. I am glad the Senator is insisting on that, because, of course, one begs the whole question when he admits, as has been admitted by certain Senators on the floor of the Senate, that Congress may subsequently approve treaties. I do not understand that to be the Senator's position.

Mr. PITTMAN. No. I stated a while ago that the late Senator Underwood, in the Underwood Tariff Act of 1912, provided that reciprocal-trade agreements should be ratified by Congress, and that could sustain a treaty.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to understand the Senator's position, because there are amendments lying on the table, presented by distinguished Senators, calling for the mere ratification of these trade agreements after they have been negotiated. Of course, that begs the whole question the Senator is presenting, because if a trade agreement can be made valid by merely being approved by a majority vote of both Houses, after having been negotiated, it can also be authorized in advance if the statute carrying such authority is a valid one, and, in fact, vests such authority in the President. I merely wanted to get the Senator's position on that point.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think the Senator understands my position now.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not care to argue the question, but the Senator is insisting very strongly that the Trade Agreements Act deals purely with the exercise of the taxing power. Tariff duties, of course, are taxes. I desire to make the statement to the Senator in all frankness that I do not think it involves the exercise of the taxing power alone. I think the Trade Agreements Act is a regulation of commerce. The taxing power is only incidental to it. It does not depend upon that at all. It is a regulation of commerce, a power which is vested in the Congress.

Mr. PITTMAN. May I answer the Senator at that point?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly. I merely wanted to make that statement because the Senator asked whether anyone doubted that a measure such as the one before us must originate in the House of Representatives.

Mr. PITTMAN. While the Senator is discussing the delegation of legislative power, he is discussing an entirely different subject from the matter of the validity of treaties.

Mr. GEORGE. I grant that, but I wanted to be clear about the matter. When one discusses the mere question of delegation of power, and proposes to amend the Trade Agreements Act by merely making trade agreements after they have been negotiated, subject to subsequent approval by either House or both Houses, then he is begging the whole question which I understood the Senator to be making. The Senator's insistence is that they are treaties.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is correct.

No matter under what authority the President accepts his authorization to make agreements with regard to tariffs with foreign governments, no matter from what source he gets his authority to make them, if the law is included in a definite agreement between two foreign governments, with a long time to run, it is a treaty. It is the highest law of the land, and no matter what authority the President has for his acts, when he makes an agreement under this act, then it becomes a treaty, the highest law of the land, and it must be ratified.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand the Senator's position, and of course agree with him that if a trade agreement is a treaty it must be ratified, and the mere approval of it by the Congress would be entirely nugatory.

Mr. PITTMAN. I agree to that.

Mr. GEORGE. I think the Senator is correct. We may differ as to whether or not a trade agreement is a treaty, but if it is a treaty, I think the Senator is entirely correct.

Mr. PITTMAN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia whether, if a trade agreement is not a treaty, he regards it as a law, and if it is a law, would it not come under the taxing power, and have to originate in the House of Representatives?

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no, Mr. President. I tried to make that clear. The Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act is almost exclusively, almost entirely, a mere regulation of commerce, just as the law fixing the rates on transcontinental and interstate carriers is a regulation of commerce. The taxing power is merely incidental to it. I do not think such a measure has to originate in either the Senate or the House. There might be certain jealousy between the two bodies, but fundamentally I do not think it must originate in either House.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Nevada yield so that I may ask the Senator from Georgia another question?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. KING. Assume that under the Trade Agreements Act an agreement is entered into which supersedes an existing tariff law, modifies and repeals it, and to that extent deprives the Government of revenue which it would otherwise receive.

Does the Senator conceive that it would be a mere regulation of commerce when it repeals existing law?

Mr. GEORGE. It is a mere regulation of commerce whether or not it repeals existing law. Whether or not it is a treaty, as the Senator from Nevada is debating, is of course a very different question. The Senator from Nevada correctly points out now, in the beginning of the debate, that the question whether there has been an undue or illegal or unconstitutional attempt to delegate legislative power, so far as the validity of the act is concerned, is not the really fundamental question, because he is insisting that a trade agreement is a treaty, even though negotiated as a trade agreement, and must necessarily be ratified as are all other treaties. If a trade agreement is a treaty, the Senator is entirely correct, and we would differ only as to that point.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Does the Senator know of any agreement arrived at between our country and another which, under our Constitution, has not been ratified? For instance, we make an agreement, after negotiation with other countries, which affects our commerce, or the general public policy of our Government. What kind of an agreement can be reached unless it is in the form of a treaty ratified by the Senate?

Mr. PITTMAN. I tried to explain that. If Congress passes a measure containing two different rates of duty and says to the President, "If you find that there is a discrimination against our commerce by a foreign country, you may put into force and effect the higher duties; and if they cease the discrimination, you may put into force and effect the lower duties in the act," the power would be purely ministerial. Congress would be using its discretion in fixing two different rates, one rate to be used if the President found that some foreign country was discriminating against us. Any agreement under such a condition would not be a treaty. I do not know of one agreement—and if there is one, I should like to have it shown me—which changes a law of the United States by virtue of its own force which has ever been called anything but a treaty.

Mr. President, I have read the definition of a treaty. The Supreme Court has time and time again said that a treaty is a contract between two or more sovereign powers affecting the public welfare. They have said it is the same as a private contract except that it is between sovereign powers. Every lawyer here knows what a private contract is. It is an agreement upon sufficient consideration to do or not to do a certain thing. Does not this measure provide for such an agreement? Does it not provide for a contract which the President is authorized to make? Does anyone deny it is a contract he is authorized to make? Of course, it cannot be denied that it is a contract. He is authorized to enter into contracts with any foreign government for a period of 3 years to change any duty on any article which may be imported into the United States. Is not such an agreement a contract? The Supreme Court, without exception, has held that such agreements between our Government and foreign governments are contracts; and contracts are treaties.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. While it may be true, as a definition of "treaty," that it is a contract, does it necessarily follow that all contracts between nations are treaties which require ratification by the Senate?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; absolutely.

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree with the statement of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] that the exercise of the authority conferred under this act is a regulation of commerce. The Senator from Nevada, of course, disagrees with me in that respect.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not think it is a regulation of commerce at all. I think it is putting into force a tariff act.

Mr. BARKLEY. Congress has the power to regulate commerce among the States and has set up the Federal Trade Commission and the Interstate Commerce Commission to assist it.

Mr. PITTMAN. That has nothing to do with foreign commerce or foreign governments.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand. But the same constitutional power, the same sentence and line that confers upon the Congress the power to regulate commerce among the States also confers upon the Congress the power to regulate commerce between the United States and foreign countries. It is a coextensive power. It is an equal power. Does the Senator distinguish between the power of the Congress to regulate commerce among the States and between the United States and foreign governments?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; but this power is subject to the other restrictions of the Constitution, such as the provision respecting treaties.

Mr. BARKLEY. Even the Tariff Commission is a regulatory body in a sense, and the Federal Trade Commission, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the Tariff Commission are all established in pursuance of the commerce clause of the Constitution and not of the revenue-raising clause of the Constitution. Cannot the Congress designate the President as its agent to regulate commerce between this country and foreign countries as validly as it can set up a commission to do that very thing between the States, and does the Senator doubt that Congress could set up a commission to do what the President is authorized to do?

Mr. PITTMAN. I think it is perfectly absurd to say because we have regulations, within limits, within our own country to carry on our own business, that we can do the same thing with respect to foreign governments through contracts. The framers of our Constitution were afraid of foreign governments, and we are still afraid of foreign governments. If we can allow the President or direct or instruct him or seduce him into entering into agreements under this act, what happens? Is he obliged to stop at that point? Now that the great war has come and a grave emergency has arisen, suppose Congress were to pass an act authorizing the President, in his discretion, when he finds it necessary in the interest of the peace of this country, to enter into contracts with foreign governments in aid of the protection of the peace, what might be the result? That may be the next thing that is coming. What could the President do under such an act? He could join the League of Nations if he thought it necessary for the protection of the peace of the United States. He could join the World Court. Why not? He could do those things if he thought it in the interest of peace and the welfare of the United States. Under this precedent any agreement he entered into would not require ratification.

Mr. President, I think we have fiddled with the Constitution long enough. I do not believe we can use a little regulatory body such as the Interstate Commerce Commission is as a basis for comparison when it is proposed to enact legislation providing that a foreign government shall be called in to participate with us in making our laws and that such laws cannot be changed for 3 years.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The President under the Constitution is given the power, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties. It is necessary that two-thirds of Senators present and voting shall agree to such treaties. That is provided in a specific form in the second article of the Constitution. In the first article of the Constitution, the Congress is given the specific right to regulate commerce with foreign nations. To my mind there are two distinct provisions. One is to make what are generally known as treaties, as the Senator has properly defined them. On the other hand, the Constitution provides specifically that the Congress shall regulate commerce with foreign nations, and unless this kind of regulation takes place, what is the meaning of that provision? It seems to me that provision is surplusage; it would have no effect; and what could it be applied to other than to commercial agreements?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I do not think so. We have in force port regulations. France and Great Britain have port regulations in force. They are changed every week or two. They are temporary, for the purpose of carrying on business and regulating commerce. If the Congress could delegate the power to the President to make tariffs, Congress would not be needed, would it? If the constitutional provision that revenue acts shall be initiated in the House of Representatives means nothing, the majority of Congress could let the President initiate tariff acts, as is proposed to be done now. The argument of the Senator from Georgia does not appeal to me that it is not a revenue act. He says that revenue is not the purpose. The purpose of the legislation, as it exists today, is to raise revenue. Why is not legislation whose purpose is to amend the tariff act revenue legislation? Is it supposed for one instant, if the Senate of the United States had initiated a tariff measure reducing the present tariff, that the House would not protest and refuse to consider the measure?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but I will say that I do not think we have enacted a tariff law for the purpose of raising revenue for 40 years in the United States. Such laws have been designed very largely to prevent revenue from coming into the Treasury. The Supreme Court has settled that question. I think it settled it very definitely in the University of Chicago case, in which the university contended that in importing certain articles for its use the university was not subject to tariff duties, because it was an agency of the State, and the State could not be taxed by the Federal Government. The Supreme Court of the United States, speaking through Mr. Chief Justice Hughes, in deciding that case said that our present tariff act—this is the effect of the decision—was a measure to regulate commerce between the United States and foreign nations. But not only is that true, but the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act is very definitely an attempt to regulate commerce, because we had tariffs which the party then coming into power believed to be too high. We had tariffs that were thought to be impeding the flow of commerce, and the whole purpose that breathes in every line of the act is an effort to regulate commerce by stimulating the flow of commerce. It may be an unwise act, but that is the congressional purpose.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, whether that is the purpose or not, no matter what the purpose is, it would not justify violating the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh no, I am not now arguing that point with the Senator. If the Trade Agreements Act is a lawful delegation of constitutional power, in my opinion any treaty negotiated under it, in which the President stays within the terms of the act, is legal and binding.

Mr. PITTMAN. Within the terms of the act? What are its terms?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, it would take a considerable time to give adequate discussion to that particular point, and I would not endeavor to take the time to do so now.

Mr. PITTMAN. In the case of the McKinley Act of 1890 the terms were absolutely definite as to what the treaty should be in one case and in another. The same is true with respect to the Dingley Tariff Act.

Mr. GEORGE. That is true. I do not want to divert the Senator from the line of his thought.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. KING. I am prompted to make an observation in line with the statement made by the distinguished Senator from Georgia. The Democratic Party has affirmed over and over again that it believes in obtaining revenue from tariffs, and it has declared in favor of lowering tariff rates when, as was believed in many instances, greater revenue would be obtained, but at any rate the Democratic Party has always contended that any legislation affecting duties upon imports was a revenue measure. Whether we call it a tariff act or reciprocity act, or anything else, it is a revenue measure, and therefore the Trade Agreement Act obviously in many respects comes within the category of being a revenue measure.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I may have overspoken myself. I do not recall the provisions of the Underwood Tariff Act. Perhaps that could be declared to be an act to raise revenue, but if so it is the only one within recent years. The others have had another very definite purpose. But in both the Fordney-McCumber Act and the Hawley-Smoot Act it is recited, among other things, that it is for the purpose of regulating commerce with foreign governments. The Supreme Court has textually held that the effect of the present tariff act is to regulate commerce with foreign countries, rather than to raise revenue.

Mr. PITTMAN. If I recollect correctly, the Court held that it was also for protection. The Supreme Court has held that the act had in view protection of industry and revenue and regulation of commerce.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. PITTMAN. But, notwithstanding that, it had to originate in the House. What it is sought to do now is to get a new system of making tariffs.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, this act originated in the House, and even the joint resolution to renew it originated in the House.

Mr. PITTMAN. This measure originated in the House. It does not change the present tariff law. It does not provide any tariff law. It does not do anything at all except to say to the President of the United States, "You may make a tariff law." However, I still come back to the proposition that no matter under what subterfuge the power is granted—whether it be the interstate and foreign commerce provision of the Constitution, or emergencies and war necessities—when it comes to using the authority granted to the President to make revenue duties through contracts with foreign governments, we cannot control such contracts. We may be able to control the maximum or minimum limits of the tariff; but Congress cannot control an agreement for a definite period of time which puts a burden on this country and affects the welfare of the country if we say that the agreement does not have to be ratified by the Senate as a treaty. It is the treaty-making power which is violated.

Suppose the Congress of the United States should pass a bill saying that the President may make treaties with South American countries, and that such treaties would not have to be ratified. That is what we are proposing to do in the present instance. Would such a measure be constitutional? I do not think any Member of this body would want to grant to the President the power, without review by the Senate, to make even as mild treaties as we have made with South American countries, dealing with cultural matters, the exchange of professors and students, and the like.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. As a matter of fact, many a line could be thrown into a treaty with a South American country which we in the Senate might consider disastrous. We have the right to deal with contracts with foreign governments. However, if we set this precedent, the attitude hereafter may well be, "What is the use of bothering with those things? Leave them to the discretion of the President. We will authorize him to enter into treaties with the American republics, without ratification by the Senate, when he finds it is to the interest and welfare and peace of this country to do so." I say that if this precedent is set in the case of a plain contract affecting our public welfare for a definite period of time, then we repudiate that provision of the Constitution which requires ratification by the United States Senate.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think I can give the Senator a specific example of the precise thing he has just been discussing. To me it is a confession of the use of an extra-constitutional power by the State Department. Let me read the Senator one sentence from article XI of the trade treaty with Colombia, made May 20, 1936:

> As long as the present agreement remains in effect—
> That is the trade agreement—
> it shall supersede any provisions of the Treaty of Peace, Amity, Navigation, and Commerce between the United States and the Republic of New Granada, signed at Bogota, December 12, 1846—

And so forth. In other words, we have a frank confession of a treaty amended by an act of the Executive.

Mr. PITTMAN. We know that nothing can repeal a treaty except another treaty or an act of Congress.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Following the suggestion made by the able Senator from Michigan, in the treaty with Belgium we find the identical language affecting a treaty of 1872, known as the Belge-Luxemburg Treaty.

Mr. PITTMAN. Undoubtedly such agreements are treated as laws. No agreement except a treaty is a law. These agreements are treated as treaties, which can repeal other treaties. Everyone at all familiar with constitutional law knows that the only way to repeal a treaty is by a congressional act or by another treaty, or by declaring it repealed in accordance with the terms of the treaty itself.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. In line with that reasoning, does the Senator contend that treaties which have been negotiated, and which we are now told have the effect of law, and under which our commerce is being regulated, are not in fact law because they have not been ratified by the Senate?

Mr. PITTMAN. I believe that they are unconstitutional. My argument leads to that conclusion. However, my amendment applies only to agreements hereafter made. The reason for doing so, of course, is that I do not feel that we are justified in disturbing all the transactions which have gone on for years. I do not think such action would be sufficiently beneficial, and I have very grave doubt as to whether or not anyone could get into the Supreme Court to be heard on the matter. I am dealing only with agreements hereafter made.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I am in complete agreement with all the Senator has said up to this point. He has argued that the agreements are in fact treaties which require Senate ratification in order to legalize them and bring them within the four corners of the Constitution. I call his attention to the fact that there is eminent authority for the further contention that even by a treaty ratified by the Senate we may not deal with our tariff rates. Apparently, Mr. Taft, the great crusader in behalf of reciprocity, held that opinion when he was President, because when he negotiated the arrangement with Canada he did not ask for ratification only by the Senate but sent legislation to both Houses of Congress in order to implement the Canadian reciprocity agreement, because it affected the revenues of the United States and involved the taxing power, which was a primary responsibility of the House of Representatives.
